Mr. BROOKHART. They could get a loan of $100,000,000 under this proposal.

Mr. LONG. I know that, but take any bank, take a Federal reserve bank. Some of the bank stocks are selling for 10 or 15 cents on the dollar. Suppose they could pay loans at the bank to-day in those stocks or bonds. What I was wondering about was what they would have to operate on.

Mr. BROOKHART. They would have their obligations canceled, and the books would balance just as well that way, with the farmer paying, as in any other way.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The point is, the bonds are

Mr. LONG. How long are they to run?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Most of them are amortized over a period of 34 years, and this proposal is to take a bond that is amortized over a period of 34 years and apply it on an indebtedness that is now due. The proposal is so unreasonable that I can not understand how any lawyer would regard it as consistent with the fundamental principles of justice.

The Senator from Iowa has referred to the fact that this provision is coupled with a plan for a loan, and that it is one of the conditions on which a loan may be made. There are other considerations I shall hereafter discuss in connection with the matter, which I think make it evident that, notwithstanding all that the Senator from Iowa has said, were true, the provision would still be held invalid by any court in the United States. How can a bank, as suggested by the Senator from Louisiana, borrow money at 4 per cent, and accept in payment of its obligations property valued at 20 to 30 cents on the dollar?

Mr. BROOKHART. If the Senator please, that same property is its own bonds, valued at 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That makes not the slightest difference.

Mr. BROOKHART. It makes a difference on the book accounts. It balances the books all right.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas will permit me-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. About how many of these bonds are outabout ten billion?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, no. There are outstanding about $497,000,000 of joint-stock land bank bonds.

Mr. LONG. Practically $500,000,000. My friend, the Senator from Oregon, was responsible for me asking a very rash question.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator asked me the outstanding indebtedness on farms.

Mr. LONG. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Louisiana was speaking of the joint-stock land bank bonds.

Mr. LONG. It is very easy to see that if there is a loan of $100.000,000—is that what the bill calls for?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes.

Mr. LONG. It is impossible for a $500,000,000 corporation to preserve its liquidity with a loan of $100,000,000.

Mr. BROOKHART. This $100,000,000 is not all they get. They get all the farmers raise besides, in interest.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, here is another proposition which ought to appeal to any fair-minded person. We realize that the farmer who is in default, who can not pay the taxes on his land, and can not pay the fifty or one hundred or two hundred dollar installments that are due, is not in position to buy joint-stock land bank bonds, and the inevitable result of this provision would be to encourage and stimulate speculation in the bonds of the joint-stock land banks, to the detriment and ruin of the borrowers and of the banks.

Who, with little cash money, knowing that he could sell something or use something worth 20 cents on the market for $1, would not be willing to put his money into those bonds? Inevitably, the speculators would buy up the bonds; and if any farmer got the benefit, he would pay tribute to | the speculators.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. What difference does it make to the farmer whether he pays it to the speculator or to the bank?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The difference is this: The bank would be wrecked for the benefit of the speculator, and to the joint detriment of the farmer and the bank.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I was not asking about the benefit to others; I said, what difference does it make to the farmer if he is going to have to pay a hundred cents on the dollar on a mortgage, when the bonds issued on the mortgage can be bought in by the bank for 35 cents on the dollar?

I think the Senator from Arkansas is overlooking the fact that if the people of the United States, all of them, are to lend their credit to the joint-stock land banks, the jointstock land banks then ought to be willing to cancel their indebtedness against the farmer.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the proposal is that the joint-stock land banks shall give the farmers the advantage of the reduced rate of interest. If we require the joint-stock land banks to liquidate immediately obligations which will not be due for 30 or 34 years, we will inevitably destroy them, we will put them into receiverships, we will make them insolvent.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. REED. Does it not come down to this: The farmer who is flat broke, so many of them are, will not be able to buy bonds with which to discharge his debt; the farmer who is not flat broke, who still has some resources, will be able to buy the bonds and turn them in to get rid of his mortgage?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The result of that is that the farmer who is not able to pay interest does not clean up his mortgage, but he is not paying anything into the bank. The farmer who is able to muster the cash, and, therefore, is the only source of cash receipts for the joint-stock land bank, buys the bonds and pays off his mortgage.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Surely.

Mr. REED. We would shut off all cash receipts of the joint-stock land banks by the adoption of this expedient. Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no doubt but that the enactment of the proposal would render every joint-stock land bank in the system insolvent.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14363) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 11, and 14 to the said bill, and concurred therein, and that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13 to the bill.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on to-day, February 25, 1933, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

S. 466. An act for the relief of the Allegheny Forging

S. 1044. An act authorizing the issuance to Cassie E. Howard of a patent for certain lands;

S. 2148. An act for the relief of Clarence R. Killion;

S. 2259. An act for the relief of Mathie Belsvig;

S. 4286. An act to authorize credit in the disbursing account of Donna M. Davis;

S. 4287. An act for the relief of Harold W. Merrin;

S. 4327. An act for the relief of Lizzie Pittman;

S. J. Res. 223. Joint resolution establishing the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commission, and for other purposes: and

S. J. Res. 256. Joint resolution authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to exercise with respect to national banking associations powers which State officials may have with respect to State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies under State laws.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) took a recess until Monday, February 27, 1933, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1933

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, make the threshold of this moment the gateway of thanksgiving and praise. We thank Thee for the commonplace things of life which are so essential to our peace and comfort. Be gracious to accept our gratitude for shelter, for food, for raiment, for loved ones, for liberty of conscience, for the open library, and far beyond all other blessings for the gift of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. O temper our lives and let their qualities be developed. Allow not burdens to be too heavy, temptations too subtle, or sorrows too acute. We thank Thee that the hand of the Lord our God limits the severities of life so that they may serve and not destroy us. Let this day bespeak Thy present help, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 7121. An act to repeal obsolete statutes, and to improve the United States Code:

H. R. 7548. An act granting six months' pay to Ruth McCarn:

H. R. 10086. An act to amend the act of February 14, 1920, authorizing and directing the collection of fees for work done for the benefit of Indians;

H. R. 11735. An act to permanently set aside certain lands in Utah as an addition to the Navajo Indian Reservation, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13655. An act to amend the act of May 10, 1928, entitled "An act to provide for the times and places for holding court for the eastern district of North Carolina" (45 Stat. 495);

H. R. 13750. An act to regulate the bringing of actions for damages against the District of Columbia, and for other

H. R. 13960. An act to amend the description of land described in section 1 of the act approved February 14, 1931, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to establish the Canyon De Chelly National Monument within the Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz ";

H. R. 14204. An act to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia:

H. R. 14411. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at Boca Chica, Tex., and H. R. 14461. An act to provide for placing the jurisdiction, custody, and control of the Washington city post office in the Secretary of the Treasury.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 5684. An act to authorize the Comptroller General to allow claim of district No. 13, Choctaw County, Okla., for payment of tuition for Indian pupils.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 88) entitled "An act to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate the conditions of the lease of the post-office garage in Boston, Mass., and to readjust the terms thereof."

MEDICINAL LIQUOR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the engrossed copy of the bill (H. R. 14395) relating to the prescribing of medicinal liquors.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object. This custom has been followed for 50 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is a practice which has grown up in this Congress. The practice ought to stop. The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. The doors were opened.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of a resolution I send to the Clerk's desk.

House Resolution 398

Resolved, That on Wednesday, March 1, 1933, it shall be in order to move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and that at the evening session until 10.30 p. m. it shall be in order to consider Senate bills on the Private Calendar and Senate bills on the Speaker's table where similar House bills have been favorably reported and are now on the Private Calendar, the call of said bills to begin where the last call of the Private Calendar ended. In order to expedite the consideration of said bills the Clerk shall prepare a special Private Calendar of Senate bills eligible to be considered under this resolution, and the bills on said special calendar unobjected to shall be considered in their numerical order on said calendar in the House as in Committee of the Whole: Provided, That after the completion of the call of bills on the said special Private Calendar of Senate bills it shall be in order to call the bills on the Private Calendar where the last call on the Private Calendar ended.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to this procedure, but I would like to ask the majority leader if he has any assurance that the body at the other end of the Capitol is going to grant us the same consideration in connection with our own private bills that we have sent over there in large numbers for the last two years?

Mr. RAINEY. I regret that I have no such assurance.

Mr. SNELL. Would it not be possible to get some agreement whereby the Senate will consider some of these important private bills of the House that ought to be considered before the end of the session?

Mr. RAINEY. I should be very glad to attempt to bring about some such arrangement.

Mr. SNELL. It would be very desirable to have some such arrangement accomplished.

The SPEAKER. If the House will permit, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York to negotiate with the Senate on this matter. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not believe this resolution should be adopted by the House until the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois have conferred with Members of the other body. These are the facts: In the closing days of every session of Congress the House has adopted this same procedure and in the Claims Committee we expedite action on the consideration of all bills sent over by the Senate, and in the House we speed action on all Senate bills and dispose of them one way or the other. Notwithstanding that fact, we find that the other body makes no attempt to consider meritorious House bills. In fairness to Members of the House I believe we should withhold passage of this resolution until we have an understanding with the

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Wisconsin gets over there, in the other end of the Capitol, he can change the present Senate rules.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman from Texas is out of order.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar that is provided for by this resolution for Wednesday night will be conducted as we have conducted the Private Calendar in

Mr. RAINEY. I understand that is to be the rule; yes. Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the language of the resolution seems to limit it to Senate bills. Will it include House bills that have been to the Senate, amended by the Senate in some minor way and sent back to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker hopes to take care of that situation as it develops.

Without objection, the resolution is agreed to. There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next it shall be in order to call and consider bills on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the request if the gentleman from Illinois will qualify it by saying bills unobjected to on the Consent Calendar, so that only those bills will be called that require only one objection.

Mr. RAINEY. I will amend the request in that particular. I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday it shall be in order to consider unobjected-to bills on the Consent Calendar, beginning with the starred bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

HON. CHARLES L. UNDERHILL

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, were I to attempt to pay tribute to those who have made their impress on this body and who leave us on March 4, I would call a long roll of those who have rendered distinguished service to the Nation. The exigencies of politics bringing for the moment their thrills and disappointments do not affect the personal relationships that after all are about the dearest and priceless things of life.

I speak of one this morning whose friendship and association I have valued and treasured and whose service I have been in a position to peculiarly appraise.

Entering this body 12 years ago-splendidly equipped after a service of 10 terms in his State legislature and membership in a constitutional convention-he applied himself assiduously from the start to the serious work of legislation. He sought not in this House popular acclaim or personal popularity. He selected the harder path and walked unswerved regardless of opinion or consequences. A man of force and convictions, a stubborn man, courageous and fearless, he threw into his work all the faculties of an able and well-trained mind, and brought wisdom and judgment to the council table. And yet, back of a seemingly hard exterior there was friendship, sociability, loyalty, and sympathy.

He voluntarily retires from this body, and he leaves with the respect and good wishes of all, with the hope that in the more peaceful pursuits of civil life he will find that relaxation and contentment to which he is justly entitled.

There is distinct loss to the Nation in the retirement of Hon Charles L. Underhill, of Massachusetts. [Applause.]

RELATING TO LEAVE WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 238, relating to leave with pay for employees of the Government Printing Office, be rereferred from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. This is agreeable to the chairmen of both committees?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS FROM FILES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House papers that were filed in connection with the bill H. R. 5699, no adverse action having been taken thereon by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution (H. Res. 396) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House Resolution 396

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of S. J. Res. 256, a joint resolution authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to exercise with respect to national banking associations powers which State officials may have with respect to State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies under State laws. after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 40 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and the committee amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, by agreement with the minority of the Committee on Rules I move the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 256

Resolved, etc., That, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency shall have and may exercise to such extent as he deems advisable with respect to national banking associations any powers which the State officials having supervision of State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies in the State in which such national banking associa-tions are located may have with respect to such State institutions under State laws now in force or hereafter enacted: Provided, That nothing in this joint resolution shall be construed to extend the authority of the Comptroller of the Currency under section 5155, as amended, of the Revised Statutes, with respect to the estab-lishment of branches of national banking associations.

Expenses incurred by the Comptroller of the Currency in the exercise of such powers may be assessed by him against the banks concerned and, when so assessed, shall be paid by such banks.

Nothing herein shall be construed to impair any power otherwise possessed by the Comptroller of the Currency, the Secretary of the Treesway or the Federal Becarres Board.

of the Treasury, or the Federal Reserve Board.

All powers conferred herein shall terminate on March 3, 1934.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "to," strike out "national bank-ag associations" and insert "any national banking association." Page 2, line 2, after the word "nothing," strike out the balance of line 2 and all of lines 3, 4, and 5, and insert in lieu thereof "herein shall be construed to permit the establishment of branches of either national or State member banks or allowed

Page 2, line 17, strike out all of lines 17 and 18 and insert: "The powers herein conferred shall terminate six months from its approval by the President; but the President of the United States may extend its force by proclamation for an additional six

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] is recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden] for 20 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to confer upon the Comptroller of the Currency the same powers as to national banks that are conferred or may be conferred by State law upon State bank authorities as to State banks, in dealing with individual difficulties, or difficulties extending throughout a State, such as recently occurred in the State of Michigan.

Several States have passed laws conferring unusual authority upon their bank-controlling bodies. One plan is to undertake in case of an insolvent bank to segregate the assets, take the liquid portion assets, treat it as such, and strike a balance and start over again maintaining a liquid position as to new deposits, not permitting any additional loans. It represents an effort to work out a solution of problems to avert the closing of a bank with the demoralization and hardship that necessarily result at all times from general breaking down of a banking institution and forced liquidation of assets.

Unless we pass this resolution national banks in States where there are State laws authorizing State authorities to deal with State banks in this way, national banks will find themselves helpless as competitors, because State banks will open their doors for new deposits under liquid conditions where there can not be any risk to depositors, which would be an inducement to depositors in national banks to withdraw deposits and put them in State banks.

Unfortunately, you would not only bring about demoralization resulting from the withdrawal of deposits in national banks but it would result in transfering them to State banks where they could not be used. They would be locked up idle and in hoarding. That is the situation we are trying to remedy. That, in short, is the evil which this resolution is intended to prevent.

The Committee on Banking and Currency took this resolution under consideration, held hearings, and made a most thorough inquiry into the entire situation. The Committee concluded that it was a very helpful thing to do in the situation that exists in the State of Michigan and that may exist elsewhere.

The resolution has the endorsement of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and the Secretary of the Treasury; and it was adopted by unanimous vote in the Senate.

We provide that it shall operate solely as an emergency measure by limiting the exercise of the authority conferred to a period of six months, with the right of the President of the United States to extend the powers for an additional six months.

We have amended the resolution so as to throw absolute safeguards against conferring any power on the Comptroller of the Currency to extend branch banking either by national banks or by member banks of the Federal Reserve system. and against the consolidation of banks except within the scope and powers that exist under present banking laws. That, in short, is what the resolution provides.

We think we should anticipate difficulties and try to shield ourselves against any dangers that may arise. The new administration about to be inaugurated will be confronted with unusual problems. We should not refuse to confer upon the new administration any reasonable authority to meet those problems and solve possible difficulties.

We think that the powers given the Comptroller of the Currency in the new administration under this resolution constitute a safeguard or weapon of defense with which to fight off further unhappy developments which all of us would like to avoid.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Under the impairment-of-contracts clause of the Federal Constitution, has the gentleman an opinion he cares to express as to the constitutionality of these various provisions.

Mr. STEAGALL. We made inquiry into that question, and our advices are that this legislation is remedial and that it will stand the test of the courts. It is equivalent to conferring the power upon the new President of the United States, because it can only be exercised with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and can only be extended upon the order of the President of the United

We hope the House will not hesitate to pass the resolution and give the new administration this additional power, which the present administration considers desirable. Under existing law a small number of deposits are sometimes able to defeat constructive plans to prevent receiverships, and save banking institutions of great value and capable of continued service to communities involved.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEAGALL. Yes. Mr. LaGUARDIA. Conceding the unfortunate necessity of this measure, is there any indication that we may pass at this session of Congress the Steagall bank deposit guaranty law, which is now in the Senate, that will at least restore some actual, real confidence to the American people, instead of dumping money into insolvent banks?

Mr. STEAGALL. I want to thank the able and distinguished gentleman from New York for his indorsement of the measure which I had the honor to introduce. As the ing the wisdom and the necessity of legislation to protect bank deposits in the United States, as provided in the bill passed by the House during the present Congress, but we can not control the action of the other branch of the legislative department of the Government. There is nothing we can do but wait until the fire spreads far enough for Members of that body to wake up and see the necessity for insuring deposits.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. But it is the only constructive measure we have had offered to restore confidence and get the circulation of money.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will not say that it is the only one, but I think it is the most important single step that could be taken in the United States to afford relief from present unhappy conditions. I believe it is safe to say that the overwhelming sentiment in favor of such legislation will soon be felt sufficiently to bring success to that wholesome reform.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If this is wise legislation, which I think it is, why is the period of its operation limited to six months, when it is in accord with the laws being enacted in the different States?

Mr. STEAGALL. We simply wanted to deal with it as an emergency matter in the hope that during the year we shall be able to pass necessary legislation to put the entire banking structure of the United States upon a sound basis, where it ought to be, and which it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to provide.

Mr. PETTENGILL rose.

Mr. STEAGALL. I regret very much, but I must save the remainder of my time for other members of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PATTERSON). The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. To ask, at least for my own information, whether, if this is passed, a national bank automatically comes under the benefits of a State act or whether in respect to each individual national bank it will still require the O. K. of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. McFADDEN. I understand it requires the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. PETTENGILL. In each individual case?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman will permit, it not only requires the exercise of discretion on the part of the Comptroller of the Currency, but in each case it must be authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury, which is equivalent to saying that it has to be approved by the President of the United States.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; that is correct. Mr. Speaker, I realize the importance of the situation that calls for the enactment of legislation of this kind. I can not refrain, however, from pointing out once more that which I have frequently called to the attention of the House. On February 7, 1929, I called attention to the change of policy on the part of the Federal reserve. On July 3, 1930, I again called attention to the operations of the Federal reserve system and what it was leading to. On February 14, 1931, I called the attention of the House to the extent to which J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., National City Co., Lee Higginson & Co., J. N. Seligman & Co., Speyer & Co., and their associates had taken from the American people and their banks, totaling $7,714,712,430.

In 1931, on December 17, after having made a speech on the floor of this House, on the 15th, calling attention to what the Federal reserve system was leading this country into in its management and policy in the operation of the Federal reserve system by financing speculative activities of Wall Street and in financing foreign countries and figentleman knows, I am in full accord with his views respect- nancing foreign acceptances, thus taking the people's money and credit out of the United States. In an effort to stop these practices I introduced a resolution asking for an investigation of the Federal reserve system. This proposal was fought by Eugene Meyer, the acting governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and the Treasury official. The powers that be in this House responding to this influence then pigeonholed that resolution in the Rules Committee and have taken no action thereon. Had these warnings been listened to, in my judgment, we would not be in the financial and economic predicament we are to-day. We are now witnessing the results of the control of the Federal reserve system by a group of bankers in New York and elsewhere known as and called international bankers. I have been repeatedly calling the attention of the House to the machinations of this particular group of international bankers. During the last session of Congress under the Johnson resolution, the Finance Committee at the other end of the Capitol proved the statements which I have made relative to this control, and confirmed the exploitation of the American people and their banking institutions through this group of international financiers, who have had a stranglehold on the operation of the Federal reserve system, and have been using it for their selfish purposes. During the past week likewise we have witnessed a fantasy in the presentation by a part of this same group of what they have been doing in New York City-I refer to the testimony of Charles E. Mitchell and other officers of the National City Bank before the Senate Banking Committee; and I repeat what I have said before, that these gentlemen to whom I have referred as international bankers of the type of Mr. Mitchell are largely responsible for the condition in which we find ourselves to-day. They have not only sold these foreign worthless securities to the people and banks of the United States, but in a like manner have they unloaded on them domestic worthless securities of their own concoction and have pushed up their own bank stocks to dizzy heights and sold them to innocent buyers, and have thus further exploited the conservative American investor. And now after all of this-are trying to avoid the fixing of responsibility for their misdeeds.

This bill deals with the remaining assets of our banks, and permits the national banks to freeze their total assets in the same manner that certain States now permit the assets to be frozen in their State banks.

In a situation like this we can not afford, when the United States is threatened, as it is to-day, to be dealing away other funds that belong to the United States. So I want to take the few minutes that remain to me to say a few words on this subject, because the debts that are owed us by foreign countries have much to do with the solvency of our banks.

Every Member of this body knows, or should know, that this day the United States stands upon the brink of economic and financial chaos. There can be no possible benefit in seeking to hide the truth under a false silence.

At this moment it is the duty of every sincere American to look first to the preservation of our common country and the welfare of all our people. More particularly does that obligation rest upon us who sit here clothed with the delegated authority of 120,000,000 people who have trusted us.

Our first duty is to conserve for the common good the assets of the United States. To dissipate, to cancel, or to give away any part of those assets is a crime which can never be justified in the eyes of God or the eyes of men. One of the largest assets standing upon the ledger of our Treasury is the collective obligation of many foreign nations to repay to us that small part of the moneys we taxed our people to loan to them in their extremity—that small part which we have agreed to accept, as they have agreed to pay, in lieu of the greater sum which was the price of their salvation in their hour of need.

This is our hour of need. It sets with but poor grace upon any man to urge now that the people of America should add to their distress by assuming the burdens of others who can bear those burdens better than we can now. Any man who urges or promotes such a course, be he American or alien, does not come to us in friendship—more than that, if he be American, even in name, one must seek long to find for his conduct any other definition than that single, hateful word "treason."

The chairman of the committee has fully explained this bill to you. I do not see that it needs further explanation by me. It is stated as necessary. I dislike to think that at a time like this the Congress of the United States is called upon to pass such a bill as this, but we are told that it must be passed out of sheer necessity. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Goldsborough].

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with a situation that is immediate and which requires immediate action. The State legislatures have passed and are passing laws giving extraordinary powers to their banking authorities to liquidate banks and to prevent runs on banks, to pay depositors in part, segregate deposits so that new depositors may be protected from the condition that the bank is in; and what this resolution does, and all this resolution does, is to permit the Comptroller of the Currency in a given case to apply State rules to a national bank, in whole or in part, provided he gets the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury. That is all there is in the resolution, except it is safeguarded further to the extent that there can be no extension beyond the terms of the existing law of branch banking by national banks or member banks.

Please understand that some of us on the Committee on Banking and Currency who feel that this legislation is absolutely necessary believe that if legislation passed by this House and sent to the Senate a year ago had been passed we would never be confronted by the necessity for this bill,

If the Steagall bill for the guarantee of bank deposits passed the Senate to-day and became a law the closing of banks in this country would stop immediately. [Applause.] If the Senate believes that that legislation is not legitimate, permanent legislation, they could pass it as emergency legislation for a limited time, which would stop the failure of all banks in the United States instantly. If the passage of this resolution is followed by the passage of deposit insurance legislation by the Senate, the Comptroller of the Currency will never have to use the powers given to him by this resolution.

Your committee has spent many sleepless nights in the last 10 days over this resolution. Your committee has deferred action until it could get a detailed expression from the Comptroller of the Currency, the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and yesterday the Secretary of the Treasury.

I hope that this resolution will receive the unanimous indorsement of the House, and I hope that during this session of Congress the Senate of the United States can be made to see that at this time the universal principle of insurance, which permeates all business, is necessary to protect the deposits of the people in the banks of this country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Busby].

Joint resolution authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to exercise with respect to national banking associations powers which State officials may have with respect to State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies under State laws.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I want to state that I am against this resolution. Bank security is absolutely related to property and commodity values in the country where banks operate, because banks take liens on property to secure loans. What I say here will have nothing to do with the stability or instability of the banking situation in this country. We have pursued such a course in failing to maintain prices of commodities, of lands, of homes, of farms, of securities, of everything else that man desires to own and possess, until the banking situation in this country has been undermined, and the banks stand face to face with the fact that they are absolutely broke, from Maine to California. It has been the policy of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board, which has been interlinked very closely with the type of financial generalship that has been exposed by the Senate investigating committee in the last few days. While men have posed as great wiseacres and monetary barons, they have robbed the people consistently and designedly done so.

That is our trouble to-day, and not the fact that what I say or what you say on the floor of this House may be carried by the newspapers. What I ordinarily say is sniffed at by the newspaper reporters, but for two years I and others have called your attention to this encroaching condition which we were powerless to meet and which we individually could not help, and when we appealed to the leaders in the administration and in the legislative bodies, we were turned aside with indifference, because they seemed to know nothing whatever to do. If this country collapses it will not be because of the action of the masses of the people primarily, because they have been long suffering. They have endured much. Starvation, hunger, privation, loss of homes, every other crime that could be committed against them, but, in the words of Disraeli, history has talked too much about leaders and not enough about peoples. The forces that move the world are not lodged in the breast of a single man. The forces that move the world slumber in the beings of the multitude like seeds in the furrow, until they are quickened by the sun and rain of time. Then the earth quivers and there is a great earthquake, and out of that comes the names of men who were representative of the era. Leaders do not make the era. Eras make leaders, and they are designated as the spokesmen for that era. I know that the fundamentals involved are undermining the situation.

CIRCULATING MEDIUM THE TROUBLE

What is the trouble? The circulating medium of this country is one-tenth coined and issued currency, and nine-tenths are bank credits. Banks are natural inflationists, and in ordinary times they carry us to the heights by inflating and following up by taking security on property to secure loans at inflated valuations.

We have in this country $5,500,000,000 in currency and $45,000,000,000 in bank deposits. In France they have $3,275,000,000 of currency and only $1,575,000,000 of bank deposits. They have two times as much coined and issued currency as bank deposits. We have one-tenth as much.

Their security is twenty times that of ours.

We are too top-heavy with the type of activity that has been exposed by the Senate investigating committee this past week. We can not endure unless we reorganize the system and kick that type of leader, the thieves in high finance, the wolves that feed on the masses of the people, out of control and take charge of the situation for the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Measures like this one proposed to-day are not going to save us. Michigan's banks are all closed. Two hundred and five banks in Maryland are closed to-day. Others are sitting on the edge and are ready to tumble off. There is nothing for them to do but to tumble.

Why? Because Ogden Mills has been at the head of the Treasury, Eugene Meyer has been governor of the Federal Reserve Board. They and their type of financial thinkers are responsible for what we have in failure, ruin, starvation, unemployment. They refuse to conduct the Nation's financial affairs for the people but only for the rich and special interests, while the country collapses and falls into ruin.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hooper].

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, this is a grant of extraordinary power, but it is amply warranted under existing circumstances. When reduced to its simplest terms, it permits the Comptroller of the Currency to match powers with the chief banking office of a State when that State, in an exigency, has conferred extraordinary powers upon that official. It is and must be regarded here as an emergency measure specifically advocated and passed to cope with the pressing situation in Michigan. Legislation in Michigan is granting unusual power to the State Banking Commission.

This legislation will confer similar powers upon our National Banking Commissioner, the Comptroller of the Currency.

This legislation is absolutely necessary and absolutely imperative, as you will see from the report. It passed the other body unanimously.

It is not legislation intended to be permanent. It does away with any chance that branch banking may be controlled by orders of the comptroller. It changes the period of one year, as the Senate passed the bill, to one of six months, with the President having the power, in his discretion, to extend the period for another half year.

The power is extraordinary, but so are the circumstances which make it needful to invoke that power. I hope the bill may be passed.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Stevenson].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, with a great deal of what my friend, the gentleman from Mississippi has said, I am in entire agreement; but he and I reach different conclusions on this situation.

He says he is against the resolution.

I am for it, not because it appeals to me as legislation which should be in effect for all time but because conditions at the present time require something to be done which will stabilize matters wherever the banking situation has become chaotic, as it has in the State of Michigan and as it is becoming in other States.

The whole theory of this proposition is that banks that are solvent, and a majority of those whose doors are open now are solvent, may be broken and unable to help themselves if everybody undertakes to draw his money. The gentleman from Mississippi just said we had forty-odd billions of dollars of bank deposits, and only $6,000,000,000 in round numbers of actual cash. In other words, there are seven times as many deposits as there is cash. If everybody wants to draw their cash the same day, there is only going to be one-seventh of a dollar apiece. That is all there is to it, and this money is not all in the banks by any means.

So when a condition such as has impended in Michigan for the last few days occurs in a State the proposition is that the proper officers of the State will take charge of State banks, and the Comptroller of the Currency will take charge of national banks in that State. The assets of the bank will be appraised and the slow assets will be separated from the liquid assets. When that is done they will determine what per cent of the assets of the bank is slow and what per cent is liquid, then freeze that percentage of the deposits representing the slow assets, set them to one side to be liquidated, the depositor to get his money as the slow assets are liquidated, and the balance of his deposits will be left free for him to use as if nothing had happened to the bank.

The comptroller can not do that at the present time. If insolvency impends in a given situation he has to close the banks and appoint a receiver and the depositors have to wait for three months at least before they can withdraw even a portion of their funds. The other plan keeps the bank open, allows people to make deposits and check against them, but does not allow the bank to loan out those deposits. In other words, it keeps them absolutely liquid. It keeps all the assets that are liquid in the bank when the separation is made all subject to the demands of the depositors whose money it is. It prevents the destitute condition many people find themselves in with all their money in the bank when the bank shuts down and they are not allowed to draw anything for at least 3 months, and more often it is 6 or 8 months.

That is all there is to this proposition. This action is taken only when the State takes similar action. It is limited to six months. It is under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. We have to do something to remedy the situation, for the country is facing great difficulty.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Beedy].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, this is no time for a Member of this House who takes his responsibility seriously to rise in his place and overstate the situation which obtains to-day. There is nothing new in the present situation over and above that which has obtained for months.

A majority of the banks of this country to-day are absolutely solvent. The pending measure is designed to protect these banks in a situation such as recently culminated in the State of Michigan. The purpose of the measure is to protect the depositors themselves in all banks.

Let me give you just a glimpse of the sound situation which obtains. In the 12 reserve banks of the Federal reserve system to-day there is $1,500,000,000 of excess gold reserves. These banks can not issue currency without a demand. But to-morrow morning, if there were a demand for the currency, they could issue on this excess reserve, $3,750,000,000 of Federal reserve notes in addition to the $2,738,000,000 of Federal reserve notes issued and outstanding January 1.

Mr. KELLER. Why do they not do it?

Mr. BEEDY. There is no demand for additional currency. Those familiar with the situation know we have more currency in this country to-day than we had at the peak of 1929. We have $136,000,000 more of the world's monetary gold to-day than we had at the peak of 1929. There are $900,000,000 more of Federal reserve notes issued and outstanding to-day than was the case at the peak of high prices and prosperity in September, 1929.

The member banks of the Federal reserve system to-day have excess reserves of $500,000,000 on which they could loan to-morrow $7,000,000,000 of bank credit without borrowing a dollar from the reserve banks. There is no lack of potential bank credit or of currency itself. There is a lack of public confidence. When that confidence is restored our banking difficulties will have disappeared. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, of necessity, by reason of the volume of work that confronts Congress, it finds itself inevitably placing large confidence in its committees.

The Committee on Banking and Currency is considering this year, and will consider in the Congress to come, the most important and serious questions ever confronting the American Congress, except possibly in time of war. It is of importance that the House shall understand the situation in the Committee on Banking and Currency as illustrated by its conduct in the last seven days. It has been my lot to be a member of legislative assemblies for the greater part of the last 34 years, and never in all that experience have I seen a period when, as in this committee, lawmakers have sunk all partisanship, have forgotten all dreams of personal benefit, have devoted themselves more earnestly and more solemnly to the great questions they have had to decide.

In the years since I have been here I have again and again watched Members of the House avoid consideration of banking problems. They are intricate; they are difficult to understand; the phraseology and terminology of banking are not known to most of the Members. And so, perhaps more than in the case of any other committee of the House, it devolves upon this committee to take its work seriously and prayerfully; and I want to assure the House that in the matter of the pending bill, as I am confident will be the case in respect of all the bills that will be considered by this committee within the next 24 months, you may be sure error of judgment will not have been due to lack of honest and earnest attempt to exercise such wisdom as that with which we may have been endowed.

To-day the committee brings to the House one of the most serious questions ever coming on this floor. After consideration that has been accompanied by sleepless nights, consideration that has resulted in changes of opinion, we come here now almost unanimously telling you this thing ought to be done.

In the same breath I want to assure you, and through you assure the people of the country, that all declarations suggesting our banks as a whole to be unsound are not warranted by the facts.

The great bulk of the banking capital of the country at this moment remains intact. It is well protected. By this bill it will be better protected. No depositor may have a single qualm of anxiety by reason of anything we are here doing.

In the last year the banks have had access to a thousand million dollars or more by reason of the purchase of Government securities from them by the Federal reserve system. And what have they done with this money?

Criticism is made because they have not put it out. They could not put it out. Business men were not willing to borrow it. Therefore, it has remained as a strengthening factor in the situation. To-day the banks are that much safer through the addition to their cash resources.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Bussy) there were—ayes 184, noes 4.

So the committee amendments were agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Bussy) there were—ayes 241, noes 4.

So the Senate joint resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Steagall, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HON. WILLIAM F. KOPP AND HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes,

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, in these days when there seems to be a concerted effort on the part of certain interests in the country to discredit the Congress by constant criticism of its membership, it is refreshing for those of us who have been here for any length of time to realize that there are certain compensations which make up in great part for the feelings of anger which are aroused in us when we are unjustly assailed. The greatest of these compensations is the close personal friendships which develop between the Members of this House regardless of their party affiliations. I am asking the indulgence of the House to-day while I pay my humble tribute to two men who are about to leave us at the end of this session.

It has been my honor and privilege to serve on the Committee on Labor for the past 10 years—ever since I came to Congress. During those 10 years the Hon. WILLIAM F. Kopp, of Iowa, [applause] was my close personal friend and associate. Mr. Kopp served for six of those years as chairman of the Committee on Labor, until he was succeeded by the equally distinguished gentleman from California, the Hon. RICHARD J. WELCH. Mr. KOPP left the chairmanship of the Committee on Labor to become chairman of the Committee on Pensions, but remained on the Committee on Labor as ranking Republican member. His fine legal mind has been especially valuable to the committee on questions of constitutionality, and his warm humane nature made him see the problems of labor from the viewpoint of the poor and downtrodden. Coming from a farming State he had a wide knowledge of the need of cooperation between the farmer and the industrial worker and always realized the fact that neither could be prosperous without the other. It would be difficult for me to express adequately my admiration for the high ability, statesmanship, and fine personal character of my friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kopp]. In the future deliberations of that committee it will seem strange not to hear the calm, even tones of the gentleman from Iowa when he propounded intellectual questions and gave sound judicial opinions. I am sure that I voice the sentiments of every member of that committee in expressing regret that he will | not serve during the next session.

The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation was organized during my first term in this House. It was a source of great gratification to me when I was chosen to serve on that committee. The Republican chairman for the first eight years after its inception was the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota, the Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON. [Applause.] The name of ROYAL JOHNSON was a name well known to me from the days immediately following the World War. It was he whom I visualized as the champion of veterans in Congress. So when I became a member of the Veterans' Committee I looked him over with keen interest to see what manner of man he might be. I soon found out that he approximated exactly the ideas which I had formulated in regard to him.

I tried my best to make his life miserable in committee by constantly assailing the Republican administration's attitude toward veteran legislation. We seldom agreed in our votes, either in the committee or on the floor of the House, yet there is not a Member of this House for whom I have a higher regard or with whom the tie of close friendship is more binding than that which I feel toward my friend and buddy, the Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON. He has a very notable background. He was born in Cherokee, Iowa, October 3, 1882. When 1 year old he decided to take up his residence in South Dakota, so he removed to Highmore, S. Dak. He attended the public schools in that State, matriculated at Yankton Academy and South Dakota University. He received a law degree from the university and in 1906 became deputy State's attorney of Hyde County, State's attorney, and then attorney general of the State. Elected to the Sixty-fourth Congress, he was one of the few Members of the House who voted against war, which, in the light of his Army service which followed, may seem paradoxical yet, in the final analysis, is entirely logical, for the reason that the best fighting man is he who loves peace the most. When the United States entered the war he resigned from Congress to enlist in the Regular Army on January 4, 1918, and was assigned to Company K, Three hundred and thirteenth Infantry. After he attended the third officers' training camp at Camp Meade he was made a sergeant in Company K of the Three hundred and thirteenth Infantry, April 23, 1918; became a second lieutenant June 1, 1918; assigned to Company D, Three hundred and thirteenth Infantry; embarked for France with the Seventy-ninth Division, July 6, 1918; promoted to first lieutenant in September of that year as a member of Company D of the same outfit. With his division he took part in some of the bloodiest battles on the western front and distinguished himself by heroism in action. He was awarded a distinguished-service cross and the croix de guerre. Here is how the record of the War Department tells the story:

DISTINGUISHED-SERVICE CROSS—CROIX DE GUERRE

ROYAL C. JOHNSON, first lieutenant, Three hundred and thirteenth Infantry, for extraordinary heroism in action at Montfaucon, France, September 26-27, 1918. He constantly exposed himself to the enemy fire during the action at Montfaucon, setting example to his men by his fearlessness. When severely wounded by shell fire, he assisted two wounded men of his company to the r and refused to occupy space in the ambulance until these men had been provided for.

Returning from France, he again took his place in Congress, being reelected to the Sixty-fifth Congress and every succeeding Congress. Despite the demand of his friends and constituents, he decided that he would not be a candidate for reelection to the Seventy-third Congress. In addition to physical courage, Royal Johnson has moral courage to a high degree. There have been times when, whether right or wrong in his beliefs, he has not seen eye to eye with the veteran organizations. At these times he has never hesitated, even when he felt that it would harm him politically, to speak only and publicly for what he believed to be right. He has an unusually kind and genial disposition. To him the word "friend" means "friend," and he would go almost any distance to prove his friendship. Time does not permit me to say all I would like to say about ROYAL JOHNson. As chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, in eight years he has done wonders for the disabled veterans of the country. Ever modest, he has not taken due credit for what he has done. I hope and believe that the veterans of the United States will keep ever in their hearts a warm spot for a distinguished soldier, a brainy statesman, and a loyal friend.

In looking into the careers of men, especially in public office, it is not amiss to state that the very foundations of these careers are often laid by the wise choice which they make in the selection of their life partners in marriage. There is not a Member of this House who can not realize how much it has meant to WILLIAM F. KOPP and ROYAL C. Johnson to have the inspiring influence of such gracious and charming wives as Mrs. Kopp and Mrs. Johnson, who by their tact and characters have done so much to dignify the careers of their husbands.

In conclusion, may I say to these two dear friends and distinguished colleagues, "If I were a Demosthenes I would extoll you to the skies and raise you up among the stars of the firmament: if I were a Cicero, I would attempt to cajole you into believing that you are what you are not; if I were a Webster I would endeavor to arouse you by the fire of my oratory; but being none of these I will say simply and sincerely, may health, success, and happiness surround you ad multos annos." [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama and Mr. BUSBY rose.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Two hundred and eleven Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. A call of the House was ordered.

The clerk called the roll when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. McFADDEN. A question of constitutional privilege. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of constitutional privilege, the privilege of the whole House when its rights are invaded, and offer the following

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 399

Whereas on February 15, 1933, the Washington Star, in an article concerning the war debts, published the following statement in regard to the lobbying activities of the British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay, intimating that he had been able corruptly to influence Members of the House of Representatives in the interests of Great Britain:

"Sir Ronald Lindsay realized that on the one hand he had to deal here with a Government which had no longer any authority deal here with a Government which had no longer any authority from the country and on the other hand that every day public sentiment was changing from friendly to hostile toward Great Britain. All this, he thought, was due to a misunderstanding of America's problems on the part of the British cabinet. The public statements Chamberlain was making were a clear illustration of the lack of comprehension of the situation in America by a majority of the British Government.

"Lindsay decided to make a comprehensive survey of the situation himself. This was a difficult and delicate task for a foreign ambassador who is supposed to deal exclusively with the State Department. He talked the situation over with Secretary Stimson and obtained the latter's approval to deal direct with the legislative body of the United States and eventually with the Pres lent elect himself.

"Lindsay did good reporter's work. He talked to almost every Member of Congress who had any definite opinions on the debt question and whose voice was likely to influence the coming debates. After having gained a comprehensive picture of the attitude of Congress, he managed to obtain an invitation from the President elect to come and visit him at Warm Springs on the eve of his departure to London to present his complete report.

"Roosevelt and Lindsay talked together for hours and, according to reliable reports, they surveyed not only the debt question but also the question of the Geneva conference and the Far Eastern conflict. He obtained a clear picture of the future foreign policies of the incoming administration."

Whereas the Government of the United States has never lost its authority, as falsely realized by Sir Ronald Lindsay, and the House of Representatives has never lost its authority; and

Whereas Sir Ronald Lindsay, ambassador of Great Britain to the United States, has rendered himself obnoxious by publicly invading the Capitol of the United States and attempting to influence legislators in the interests of Great Britain; and

Whereas the said Sir Ronald Lindsay is conducting an extensive propaganda in the United States for the cancellation of the war debt owed to the United States by Great Britain, to the end that England may dishonor her signature without incurring too much the contempt of the world, and whereas the United States has had enough and to spare of British propaganda; and them to defeat the measures of the United States Government in the interests of Great Britain constitutes an invasion of the rights and privileges of the House of Representatives; and

Whereas the Logan Act, section 5, title 18, United States Code—section 5, Criminal Code—makes it a crime for a private citizen of the United States to have intercourse with a foreign function of the United States to have intercourse with a foreign functionary unless that private citizen has been duly authorized by the Government to have such intercourse, and whereas neither the Secretary of State nor the Executive has power to permit intercourse between a private citizen of the United States and a foreign functionary in regard to matters which have been or which may be the subject of legislation by Congress, when such matters affect the revenue of the United States; and

Whereas the lobbying activities of the said British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay, carried on in the halls of the Capitol, at the British Embassy, in the houses of citizens of the United States, in the offices of predatory international bankers, on shipboard, on trains, and elsewhere, have for their purpose the taking from the United States Treasury of assets which it is the sworn duty

Therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that its rights and privileges have been invaded by Sir Ronald Lindsay, British Ambassador to the United States, in his molestation of Members of Congress and private citizens in the interests of Great Britain, and by his subversive activities against the Government of the United States and his attempts to defeat the measures of the United States Government, and that his lobbying activities and utterances assail the honor and dignity of the House of Representatives and constitute an attack upon the integrity of its legislative proceedings, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the Department of Justice.

Mr. SNELL (interrupting the reading of the resolution). Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I would like to know how this matter got before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania rose and said he had a question of constitutional privilege and sent the resolution to the desk to be read. Up to the present time no constitutional privilege has been recited in the resolution, but the reading of the resolution has not been completed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that in such an event the Member who rises should indicate in what manner it is a constitutional privilege. We might be reading a thing of this sort for three days before we came to the point as to what was a question of constitutional privilege. The gentleman can indicate whether it is an attack on the House or what not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read the resolution itself, which will determine whether or not there is stated a question of constitutional privilege.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, may I add that the rights of the House have been invaded by attempts on the part of a foreign functionary to influence legislators and to defeat certain measures of the Government of the United States, and this is involved in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution as shown above.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a general statement, either in a newspaper or otherwise, made outside of the House is not a definite charge involving the constitutional rights of the House or an individual Member thereof. There is nothing definite in this statement.

The SPEAKER. So far as set out in the resolution or in the matter read from the preamble, nothing has been recited that reflects on the dignity or the integrity of the House of Representatives. A mere report that some ambassador is undertaking to bring pressure to bear on some executive or other body is not sufficient to cast a reflection upon the House of Representatives, and the Chair holds that the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not state a question of privilege of the House.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. McFADDEN. My point of order is that the resolution has not been completely read. It is a matter of record and knowledge to every Member of this body, as well as the other body, that the British Ambassador even went so far as to appear on the floor of the United States Senate.

The SPEAKER. That does not affect the proceedings of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SNELL. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. And in no way reflects on the House of Representatives, either with respect to its dignity or integrity of proceedings.

Mr. SNELL. That is a matter to be taken up over in the United States Senate, if they want it taken up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not state a question of the privileges of the House of Representatives.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE AND THE JUDICIARY AND FOR THE DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE AND T.ABOR

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 14363) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the Judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14363) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 12, 15, 17, and 18.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 16, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6. and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following: "convention relating to liquor traffic in Africa, $55; in all, $575,486"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by such amendment, and in the matter so restored strike out the sum "$13,195" and insert in lieu thereof the sum: "$8,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 11, 13, and 14.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14363) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On No. 2: Makes a technical correction in the text of the appropriation for contingent expenses, State Department, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 3: Reappropriates and makes available for the fiscal year 1934, as proposed by the Senate, the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1933 for collecting and editing official papers of Territories of the United States.

On No. 4: Strikes out certain technical language, inserted by the Senate, appearing in the paragraph for contingent expenses, Foreign Service, State Department.

On No. 5: Makes a technical correction in the text of the paragraph for contributions, quotas, etc., under the State Department, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 6: Inserts the appropriation for the international obligation, "Convention Relating to Liquor Traffic in Africa, $55," as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out the provisions for the other international obligations inserted by the Senate.

On No. 7: Reappropriates and makes available for the fiscal year 1934, as proposed by the Senate, the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1933 for the International Boundary Commission, United States and

On No. 8: Concurs in the Senate amendment increasing the appropriation under the International Joint Commission, United States and Great Britain; from $58,000 to $77,-000 to provide appropriations for the sulphur-fumes investigation in the State of Washington.

On No. 9: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of an international radiotelegraphic conference during the fiscal year 1934 by making available the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1933 for the international radiotelegraph conference, Madrid, Spain.

On No. 10: Modifies the limitation inserted by the House providing that none of the appropriation for the enforcement of prohibition shall be used for the purchase of intoxicating liquor by defining such liquor as that consumed by the investigator or anyone with him, as proposed by the

On No. 12: Restores the House language, stricken out by the Senate, authorizing the Court of Claims to charge and collect certain fees for copies of its decisions.

On No. 15: Strikes out the appropriation, inserted by the Senate, for the regulation of interstate transportation of black bass.

On No. 16: Corrects a total as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 17 and 18: Restores the appropriation of $344,-000, as proposed by the House for the Children's Bureau in lieu of the appropriation of $308,550 as proposed by the Senate, and makes a corresponding adjustment in the amount available for personal services in the District of Columbia.

On No. 19: Restores the appropriation for the Housing Corporation, stricken out by the Senate, but reduces the amount from $13,195 to $8,500.

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendments:

On No. 1: Fixing the salary of the Under Secretary of State at $10,000.

On No. 11: Permitting the payment of rewards by the Director of Prohibition for information of major violations of the law.

On No. 13: Striking out the proviso inserted by the House, prohibiting the use of funds appropriated under the head of Prison industries working capital fund" for procurement and/or installation of machinery for manufacture of metal furniture and/or metal office equipment in any Federal penal or correctional institution.

On No. 14: Providing for covering into the Treasury $400,000 of the prison industries working-capital fund, and preventing the use of any of the fund for purchase of yarn from private industry for manufacture of cotton duck.

> W. B. OLIVER. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN, CLARENCE CANNON, MILTON W. SHREVE, GEO. HOLDEN TINKHAM. Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1: Page 2, line 4, after the word "State" insert

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I do not understand why it is necessary to do this. I supposed we had an Undersecretary of State who do this. I supposed we had an Undersecretary of State who is drawing practically that salary.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The salary has never been fixed by substantive law, and the Senate inserted this amount. It is the same salary that has been paid for the last four years.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 11: Page 26, line 16, after the word "evidence" insert "except that the Director of Prohibition may authorize the payments of rewards for information of major violations of law."

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 13: Page 36, line 8, strike out the following language: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the procurement and/or installation in any Federal correctional or penal institution of machinery for the manufacture of metal furniture and/or metal office equipment."

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Amendment No. 13.

Mr. SNELL. We would like some time on this.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, during the consideration of the Department of Justice appropriation bill in the House I offered an amendment which provided that no part of the prison industrial working capital fund could be used for the installation of machinery for the manufacture of metal office equipment in any Federal penal institution. The amendment was adopted by a teller vote of 99 to 34, and the bill was messaged to the Senate.

The Appropriations Committee of the Senate decided to strike out the Cooper amendment. That brought the question to the Senate floor, and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate offered an amendment reversing the action of the House, and with 30 minutes' debate on the same the Cooper amendment was retained in the bill.

About two hours later, when there were only 10 or a dozen Senators on the floor, a Senator rose, and after recognition, moved to reconsider the vote taken earlier in the day, and the Senate reversed its previous vote and struck out the House amendment.

There is involved in this amendment the question as to whether or not the Federal Government is going to embark on the policy of equipping the Federal penal institutions with high-powered machinery for the purpose of manufacturing metal office equipment. I believe it is important that work should be provided for prisoners, but the installation of this machinery is not going to solve the work problem for prisoners.

I doubt if there is any industry in our country to-day that is more highly specialized and mechanized than that of the manufacture of metal office furniture. Mr. Bates, director of Federal prisons, stated before the Senate committee that he not only intends to install machinery for the pressing of the metal to make filing cabinets, but that he is going to install an air-pressure machine for finishing and spraying. He also stated that he is going to employ only 150 to 200 prisoners out of a total population of 1,400, but he has never yet stated that he is not going to expand this industry if we once let him get started. To-day we have millions of law-abiding American citizens unemployed, and this is no time for the Federal Government to embark upon a policy of this kind. We are facing a national emergency of depression and unemployment. I want to read to the House what the report of the Shannon committee who have investigated the Government in business says on this question:

While it is a recognized problem to determine the most practical use for prison labor, our first thought and effort should be directed toward those who have not transgressed the laws of society. With the army of unemployed seeking every honorable channel through which they may provide for their dependents, a justifiable spirit of resentment arises when they realize these convicts, provided for by the taxpayers' money, are competing with them for the sinews of life and happiness, and in instances at the loss of the taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I know it will be said here to-day that when I was chairman of a prisoninvestigating committee in 1928 I did help to write a report which recommended that prisoners be given work at all times if it was possible to do so. I still hold to that, but, as I said a moment ago, to-day we are facing a national emergency, and the question which this Congress is considering to-day is this. Are we going to go on record and permit the Federal Government at this time to embark upon a policy which will take work away from legitimate industry and free labor, by the installation of machinery in our penal institutions, operated by prison labor? No one can stand on this floor here and say that if this machinery is established at the Lewisburg Penitentiary—not hand labor, but all machinery—it is not going to come into serious competition with legitimate industry and free labor, who are paying the taxes to maintain our penal institutions, house and feed the criminals confined therein. As far as I am concerned I stand here to-day in defense of the lawabiding working man who to-day is walking the streets looking for a job, and I shall not cast my vote to give the criminal work at the expense of the American taxpayers and to the detriment of millions of law-abiding American citizens and honest working men and women who are to-day unemployed and crying for a chance to make an honest living. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Reed].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, first I wish to thank the chairman of the committee, Mr. Oliver, for granting me these few minutes. I appreciate it because I have a large number of men who work in metal furniture industries in my district, who are now out of employment. They are honest, thrifty, law-abiding, home-owning citizens. These men are obliged to-day, because of conditions and lack of employment in their industries, to go into the ditches and do any kind of work, the hardest kind of work, working long hours, trying to save their homes and help their people.

What are we going to do here? What did our neighboring country to the north of us do? Not long ago Russia dangled before the unemployed of Canada this proposition. They offered to buy $10,000,000 worth of agricultural machinery. That would have put several thousand Canadians to work, making agricultural machinery, but Russia imposed the condition that Canada must take part of the pay in Russian coal. That proposition was presented to Mr. Bennett on February 25, 1931, and within two days thereafter it was submitted and acted upon by order in council. Canada immediately put a ban upon Russian coal, asbestos, furs and a long list of articles, and the reason given for putting the ban on the importations from Russia was because the goods were produced by conscript labor. Are we going to Russianize this country? If you put high speed machinery into the prisons you are taking men who have violated the law, who are housed and fed and clothed at public expense, and putting them behind machines with a soft job, multiplying their numerical strength, their man power many times. You can take 2,000 prisoners in our prisons and with high-speed machinery have them produce with that machinery the equivalent of what 10,000 men could do by hand putting the product of high-speed machinery into the commerce of the country while our honest, law-abiding laborers are walking the streets.

Mr. STAFFORD. And is not this proposal a direct invita- ! tion to extravagance in that it will allow all the department heads to replace their wooden furniture with steel furniture?

Mr. REED of New York. There is no question about that. Mr. STAFFORD. It is the most extravagant proposal ever before Congress.

Mr. REED of New York. And if there ever was a time when the Congress of the United States should be absolutely just to the laboring man it is now. They have not indulged in riots, they have been patient under the most difficult conditions and they deserve all credit. This is a direct blow at free labor, it is a plan to Russianize the country, to follow communism in our legislation, and I am opposed to this program. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I am going to quote to you the words of Sanford Bates, or, in other words, those which he has approved, that were adopted by the Shannon committee:

(1) That, especially in times of industrial depression, the de-lopment of prison industries proceed with conservation and velopment of extreme caution.

(2) That emphasis be placed not upon mass production, but upon industries sufficient only to keep prisoners busy.(3) That the prisons refrain from the overdevelopment of any one industry.

That emphasis be put first upon industries which are to be to the greatest extent noncompetitive, and that prison labor be used in public works of low priority, such as the building of roads, trails, improvements at Army posts, and other outdoor public works for which no appropriation is or can be made; that emphasis be put upon prisoner training rather than production; and, finally, to the fullest extent possible, consistent with the proper administration of these important institutions, that their routine and discipline be so devised that the activities of the inmates be such as to compete as little as possible with private industries outside, which, after all, should merit the first consideration of Congress.

Now, gentlemen, to-day as far as the manufacture of commodities is concerned, we have forgotten that the most important thing this Congress can do is to give employment to men and women in this country who desire to earn a livelihood. When we put in production machinery for convicts, who have been convicted of crimes and placed in penal institutions, and thereby take from free labor the privilege of earning a livelihood, making it necessary for them to accept a dole, I say it is a hundred times more important that the people who are incarcerated in prisons be handed a dole and by that method we are not taking from them anything which they should not have. However, when we go out to-day to a man who is in distress who wants to earn a livelihood for himself and his family and say, "We have no work for you, but we are going to give you a dole in order that you may live," we, as Congress, are not doing the right thing. Whenever we do not have time to discuss questions like this before the House of Representatives but we can bring up questions that contaminate the American citizenship, it is time we gave consideration to some of these matters that will give employment to our people.

We have two important questions to consider:

First. Do you want to give jobs to free labor in preference to convicts?

Second. Is it not better to feed the convicts and allow them to remain idle, than to give a dole to the honest American citizen who wants a job to earn his livelihood?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, if the House will carefully weigh the facts in connection with this matter, they will find no ground for the complaint that gentlemen have urged against the action of the Senate, and which the House conferees have moved to recede from and concur in.

Answering the statement that it denies work to free labor on the outside, permit me to say that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper] for whom I entertain a very high regard, was chairman of a special investigating committee in 1929, which visited all Federal prisons, and afterwards submitted a report which was the basis for the legislation we are now seeking to apply in a very conservative and absolutely fair way to all industries alike. The committee, with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper] as its chairman, submitted a unanimous report. The gentleman from Ohio gave hearty approval to the legislation as reported by the Judiciary Committee, and which we are now seeking to apply exactly as Congress directed it should be. In other words, we are trying to provide employment for Federal prisoners in a limited way at the new prison just completed in Pennsylvania, in a way that is absolutely equitable and fair to the metal industry, and in accordance with the act approved May 27, 1930, which requires that prison industries should be established at our Federal prisons, but that such industries should be spread out, so that the burden would not fall heavily on any one, but be shared by all. Products manufactured or produced in the prisons are sold only to the Federal Government, and only in quantities to partially supply the needs.

Vice president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. W. C. Roberts, appeared before that committee and gave his endorsement to the bill in the form reported by the committee. There was no real opposition to the legislation so reported in either the House or Senate. Prior to the committee's report on which the legislation was based what had been happening in the Federal prisons? You had established machinery at the Leavenworth Penitentiary for the purpose of making shoes, brooms, and brushes. You had established a foundry and brick plant at Chillicothe prison in Ohio; you had established machinery at the Atlanta prison for the purpose of making textiles, cotton bags, and other articles of like kind, and the gentleman from Ohio, who was the chairman of the special committee, visited all of these prisons and was thoroughly familiar with the legislation under which these industries had been established at such prisons, and saw these industries at work at the prisons named in 1929. After seeing these industries at work in the prisons, producing manufactured products by machinery, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] submitted a unanimous report favoring the continuance of such industries and extensions in other fields, so as to avoid discrimination against or in favor of any industries, and he and his committee then became the proponent of the legislation to which I have referred, and which it is now sought in a thoroughly fair and equitable way to apply in establishing at the new penitentiary in Pennsylvania a small metal industry which will produce less than one-tenth of the Government demands.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield? I know the gentleman wishes to be fair.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Of course, the gentleman made the report after investigation of the Federal prisons, but there was not anything in that report about establishing high-speed machinery in the Federal penal institutions. Furthermore, as I said to-day, our country is facing a national crisis such as we have never known before.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. There will not be installed in the penitentiary recently completed in Pennsylvania, known as the Northeastern, any high-power or high-speed machinery, and if the gentleman had only read the hearings on this matter he would not have made that statement. There will not be installed any automatic machinery, nor any machinery that can be classed as a labor-saving device. Why do I say so? The Director of Prisons has stated to the committees of the House and Senate that it is not his purpose to install any such machinery or devices. You can depend upon the Attorney General and the Director of Prisons not to permit it to be done. What will be installed? Only such machinery as is absolutely necessary to make the kind of metal furniture which the Government will accept, and which will meet Government requirements. They can not bend by hand a piece of steel plate. Likewise, they can not perforate steel by hand. They will install machinery, but neither high speed nor high power, largely to care for work such as I have referred to. One hundred and fifty men working at such machinery, which will cost only $25,000, will produce annually only $40,000 worth of metal furniture, for the Government, when its needs require more than $1,000,000 annually, of which sum more than $400,000 will be spent for the character of metal furniture to be produced at the new Pennsylvania penitentiary. No metal furniture is or will be made in any other penitentiary.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. What is the value of the metal furniture manufactured in the United States?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Sixty-four million dollars' worth of metal furniture is made in the United States annually, and more than $8,000,000 worth of the very type it is planned to make only $40,000 of at the Northeastern Penitentiary in Pennsylvania. Yet the Government purchases annually of this kind of furniture over $400,000 worth. Thus we would only permit the penitentiary to supply less than one-tenth of what the Government will be called on to purchase in 1934.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes. Mr. EATON of Colorado. I wish to correct the gentleman's statement. The cost of the machinery is $25,000, and with that they will make $40,000 worth of products.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; $40,000 worth of products. Mr. EATON of Colorado. Sixty-five thousand dollars is all that is involved in the matter.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

Mr. RICH. I do not agree with the gentleman that $40,000-

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yielded for a question.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman think we ought to add one dollar to our national debt at this time, that we should add to the burden of our taxpayers?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Please let me emphasize we are not adding a single dollar in the way of taxes, but on the other hand we are taking from the toil of the men in prison $400,000 which prison labor has produced, carried as a prison industry revolving fund, turning that amount back into the Treasury by the terms of this very bill. Instead of adding it to the taxes of the people, we are, in this pending bill, returning to the people a substantial amount from prison labor, and if Congress will permit the law of May, 1930, to continue to function, substantial returns will continue to be paid by prison labor to the Federal Treasury.

In addition to this, every month there goes out from these Federal prisons, and will continue to go out, if existing law is not interfered with, checks to dependent members of the prisoners' families.

In other words, the Director of Prisons selects prisoners to work on these machines, as far as possible, who have dependents, and he deducts from their small earnings reasonable sums to be sent every month to dependent families from whom the prisoners are separated. At the same time the director is carrying out the purpose that the gentleman from Ohio has often given hearty approval to, as well as the Federation of Labor, that you must not let your prisoners be idle; that you must find work for them, and you must distribute that work so that it will not be a burden on any single industry but be borne by widely diversified industries.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. If I recall correctly, the House, by an overwhelming vote-I believe the vote was 99 to 33-banned machine labor.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yielded for a question.

Mr. MEAD. Is the gentleman familiar with the action taken by the Senate on this matter?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes. The Senate committee heard a representative of the metal industry, and heard the Director of Prisons. After hearing these men the committee made a unanimous report to strike out the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman is wrong there.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is my understanding.

That is the way it appears in the report. The Senate committee reported the bill to the Senate with the Cooper amendment stricken out and after holding hearings at which the representative of the metal industries testified.

Mr. MEAD. But the House by an overwhelming vote adopted the Cooper amendment.

Mr. MAPES. Supplementing the question of the gentleman from New York, may I ask the gentleman from Alabama if there was anyone of the House conferees who tried to sustain the position of the House in the conference?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Well, I will say this to the gentleman: I stated, I think, to the gentleman from New York, and certainly to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper], before the conference was asked for, that this matter would be brought back to the House and the House given an opportunity to pass on it.

Mr. MAPES. That is not a very direct answer to my question.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper] came to me, and I stated to him that before any action was taken on this item the conferees would bring it back to the House and yield time to those favoring it, as I have done to-day, so that they might discuss it before the

Mr. MEAD. The House expressed itself on this proposition very definitely.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I do not think the gentleman from Ohio or the gentleman from New York are complaining of any unfairness on the part of the chairman of the subcommittee in this regard.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Is it not true that the textile mill in the Atlanta prison was approved by the gentleman from

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Absolutely; and in addition to that, in this committee report he recommended that out of the funds that had accumulated from the work of prisoners at the Atlanta prison in the textile mill another building be constructed and additional machinery be installed for the purpose of increasing the output of the textile prison plant.

Mr. RAMSPECK. And is not that a more highly specialized or mechanized industry than the new work that is proposed?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Absolutely so.

Mr. RAMSPECK. If this work of making metal furniture is to be prohibited, will we not have to abolish the mill at Atlanta?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That would have to be done in order to be consistent; and the same thing applies to Leavenworth, where shoes, brushes, and brooms are made and to the other prison industries. The shoe industry has been very fair. They recognized that the Director of Prisons did not want to manufacture any undue quantity of shoes, although no limitation was placed on production by the original act. They were permitted by the old law to supply all the needs of the Government, but the Director of Prisons held this down to a reasonable percentage, as the gentleman from Missouri knows, and refused to take some contracts that he could have secured from the Government.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Several hundred thousand dollars' worth.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes. Several hundred thousand dollars' worth during the present fiscal year.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. By reason of the textile work at the Atlanta Penitentiary the canvas-making industry of the States west of the Mississippi River has been entirely disrupted to the extent that you can not obtain the canvas goods on account of the work done at the Atlanta Penitentiary.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. For a brief question.

Mr. REED of New York. As I understand it, the gentleman is advocating as a future policy of the Government the use of high-speed machinery by prison labor.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Evidently the gentleman was not listening when I made my statement relative to that matter. I think the House was; and I shall not repeat it further than to say for the benefit of the gentleman from New York that no high-speed or high-powered machinery, no automatic machinery such as private business uses, will be installed in the Northeastern Penitentiary. Nor will any labor-saving devices be installed there.

Mr. Bates, the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, stated to the Senate committee in the presence of a representative of the metal industry, that he would only produce $40,000 worth of finished products with the $25,000 worth of machinery he planned to purchase, and that such machinery would not be high-speed nor automatic machinery. nor labor-saving devices.

The representative of the metal industry later said to the committee that under a survey he had made of the metal industry which was producing annually more than $8,000,000 worth of the very type of metallic cases that the Northeastern Penitentiary planned to make, that such private industry only employed 1,350 men therefor on part time. The hearings further disclose that private industry uses high-speed, automatic machinery, and that such machinery would cost $75,000 instead of $25,000, such as is planned to be installed at the Northeastern Penitentiary. From this you will conclude that 1,350 men working part time can produce annually more than $8,000,000 worth of metal file cases with high-speed, automatic machinery, whereas 150 prisoners at the Northeastern Penitentiary will annually produce only $40,000 worth of such metal file cases, with the character of machinery to be installed at the Northeastern Prison.

Quite a difference. Thirteen hundred and fifty men with high-speed machinery, such as private industry employs, with automatic conveyors and feeders cut down largely the number of laborers.

In Federal prisons they propose to install only such machinery as is absolutely necessary to do the things that must be done vet can not be done by hand in order to meet Government specifications. It takes 150 men a whole year to make $40,000 worth at the prison, whereas 1,350 men in private industry can make, with high-powered machinery, more than $8,000,000 worth a year. These are the facts appearing in the Senate hearings.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Does the gentleman from Alabama deny they are going to put in machinery at the Lewisburg Penitentiary to press the metal out of which these filing cabinets are made? Does he deny that they are going to put a compressed-air machine in the penitentiary for paint sprayings? Does he deny that Mr. Bates has already made arrangements to employ a superintendent to run this institution?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I simply say to the gentleman that they will not purchase and they will not use any highspeed machinery nor any automatic conveyors nor special labor-saving devices. Every piece of machinery that they will install is necessary to bend steel plates, to perforate the same, and that is what it will be used for, so the director of prisons states. They will not feed these prison machines by automatic conveyors, as industry in the gentleman's district is doing, and as industry in the district of the gentleman from Michigan is doing, but they will feed prison machines

Likewise, they will bring together the several parts by hand and not by high-powered machinery that brings them together and perforates them very quickly. In Federal prisons hand labor will be used to the utmost. This accounts for the fact that 150 men will be required to make $40,000 worth of metal furniture, whereas 1,350 men under the system that private industry employs can make more than $8,000,000 in a year. The metal industry, it must be remembered, makes many more products than what it is planned to produce at the new prison. The total metal industry in 1932 produced more than $64,000,000 worth of products.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield. Mr. REED of New York. As I understand, then, the gentleman proposes to take the taxpayers' money and feed and clothe and house violators of the law, give them an easy job, and put them in competition with the machines that Mr. Bates has testified he is going to put in and drive private labor out of work.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Again, I say, if there be injustice in this, the gentleman's questions should be directed at the distinguished gentleman on his right, who was the real proponent of the legislation in 1930, which legislation the Federation of Labor then approved.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. DYER. In other words, what the gentleman says is that Congress established a policy by legislation, and now the committee, of which the gentleman is chairman, is trying to carry into effect the policy that the Congress has established. Is not that correct?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Absolutely so. Mr. RICH and Mr. REED of New York rose. Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I can not yield further.

I am glad the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] interrupted me to make that statement. The gentleman was acting chairman of the Judiciary Committee at the time the legislation was passed, which the Department of Justice is endeavoring to carry out.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Representatives of the cotton-duck industry came before the Shannon committee and protested against the high-speed machinery you are using in the Atlanta Penitentiary. And does the gentleman know that in the Atlanta Penitentiary you now have extra buildings ready to be equipped with more machines which are contemplated to be purchased, but because of the activity of the Shannon committee they have deferred the purchase of this machinery up to this time? Is it to be the policy of Federal penitentiaries to go ahead and do this kind of work? If we are going to stop it, now is the time to stop it and not wait until we have all these people employed in this line of Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] think we ought to do this by general legislation? This amendment applies only to a penitentiary in Pennsylvania and does not give any relief to the duck manufacturers in the South or in Massachusetts.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Not just now.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Has any suggestion come to the gentleman from Alabama as to what method should be used to care for the hardened criminals who must be kept at work in the penitentiaries?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. None whatever. The only practical suggestions that the committee handling this appropriation has had are found in the legislation that Congress passed in 1930 based on the unanimous report of the special committee headed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] and we have tried to interpret the act of May 27, 1930, in the light of the committee's report, to which the Federation of Labor gave approval, and so far as we know, no protest has been filed as to this item except by the metal industry.

Mr. WELCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WELCH. The gentleman has stressed the position of the American Federation of Labor-

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield only for a question.

Mr. WELCH. What year was it that the American Federation approved this policy?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In 1930, when the legislation was passed. It was approved by the President on May 27, 1930.

Mr. WELCH. How many idle men were walking the streets of the United States in 1930?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. There were a good many, I understand.

Mr. WELCH. How many?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. Ten million.

Mr. WELCH. There were not 10,000,000 and there were not 3,000,000 at that time. At the time the American Federation of Labor approved this policy, which was in 1929 and not in 1930, there were not 2,000,000 idle men in this country. To-day there are 12,000,000 and I insist on asking this question of the gentleman-

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I do not yield further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WELCH. The American Federation of Labor does not approve the policy at this time or the argument made by the gentleman from Alabama on this floor to-day.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. There has come to us no protest from any source, other than the metal industry, against this item, and it so happens that gentlemen who are specially interested in the matter have a factory of this kind in their districts. Theirs is a perfectly natural human protest. Why did the Congress say, in effect—"We will not undertake to write into the law that the Judiciary Committee reported what fields shall be entered, but will simply say, 'Find employment for the prisoners and distribute this employment over many fields, sparing none and discriminate neither for nor against any industry, but let all bear their just part of the burden'"?

If you follow the advice of the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from New York who have industries that the just, fair, and equitable application of this law seems now to pinch, you will discriminate in favor of the metal industry and against others, in whose fields of activity the gentleman from Ohio and Congress have said it is right to install machinery in Federal prisons to provide employment for prisoners. This would be unfair, and I feel that if you can get the facts before this Congress they will not consciously do anything unfair either to an individual or to an industry, but unfortunately comparatively few Members are present when many matters are discussed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is there not confusion here between two questions-one the treatment of inmates of penal institutions and the other the competition of convict labor with free labor? And when the compensation of convict labor with free labor comes into consideration, then the treatment of inmates of penal institutions must give way and, regardless of the policy of Congress at the time it was established, we are confronted with an economic situation at this time which compels us to change the policy. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Now, I want to read what Congressman Cooper of Ohio, chairman of the committee, who signed the committee report, on which the act of May 27, 1930, is based:

The committee believes that every effort should be made to provide increased opportunity for employment of Federal pris-

It is the committee's judgment that immediate steps should be taken to establish additional shops in the penitentiaries and other Federal penal institutions to make additional goods and articles which could be utilized by the United States Government. There is no doubt but that there is an ample market in the Federal Government for a sufficient quantity and variety of goods to keep all Federal prisoners employed.

That is what Mr. Cooper said, that is what the act provides, and that is what we are endeavoring to carry out.

Now, I want in conclusion to summarize what I have said. Here you find, before the committee made its report in 1930. we had established at the Atlanta penitentiary a textile industry where machinery was being used. The gentleman from Ohio saw it in operation and recommended that out of the earnings of prison labor should be built an extension of that plant and additional machinery should be installed.

Likewise he saw that we were making shoes in Leavenworth and also brushes and brooms and other articles used by the Government, covering a varied field, so that no one industry would bear more than its fair share and in the light of these facts, his committee submitted to Congress a unanimous report which led to the passage of the prison industry act of May 27, 1930, which act the Director of Prisons is seeking now to administer and carry out, according to its letter and spirit in a fair, just, and equitable way.

Here is what I want to leave with you-do not treat other industries unfairly under the legislation which Congress approved and which the Federation of Labor approved. and against which no protest has been filed as to this bill, except by the metal industry. They will sell the Government $400,000 of metal cases in the fiscal year 1934. Why should it be unfair to let the new Federal prison manufacture and sell to the Government $40,000 of such cases? I think we should concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for two minutes to discuss this subject, because of the fact that the chairman of this subcommittee has not yielded any time to Members on the Democratic side in opposition to the viewpoint that he takes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). The gentleman from Alabama is in control of the time.

Mr. MEAD. I think it is manifestly unfair to yield all the time to Members on the Republican side.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama) there were-ayes 37, noes 131.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and I object to the vote for that reason.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and two Members present, not a quorum. This is an automatic call. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees.

The question is on the motion to recede and concur. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 46, nays 262, not voting 118, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This vote is tantamount to a motion to further insist on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 14, page 36, in line 12, insert: "Provided, That $400,000 of the prison industries working capital fund shall, on or before June 30, 1933, be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of 'Miscellaneous receipts': Provided further, That no part of the prison industries working capital fund, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, shall be used for the purchase of yarn from private industry for the manufacture of cotton duck."

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 194. An act to amend section 6 of the national chapter of the Great Council of the United States of the Improved Order of Red Men:

H. R. 2872. An act for the relief of the Dongji Investment Co. (Ltd.):

H. R. 3036. An act for the relief of Florence Mahoney;

H. R. 3607. An act for the relief of Dr. M. M. Brayshaw;

H. R. 3727. An act for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Fox; H. R. 3905. An act for the relief of Maj. L. D. Worsham;

H. R. 8216. An act for the relief of the First National Bank of Junction City, Ark.;

H. R. 8800. An act for the relief of Laura J. Clarke;

H. R. 9336. An act for the relief of Emily Addison;

H. R. 9476. An act for the relief of the Merchants & Farmers Bank, Junction City, Ark.;

H. R. 10641. An act to amend section 122 of the Judicial Code:

H. R. 12977. An act to amend section 808 of Title VIII of the revenue act of 1926, as amended by section 443 of the revenue act of 1928;

H. R. 14392. An act to authorize the payment of taxes and assessments on family dwelling houses in the District of Columbia in quarterly installments, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14657. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a railroad bridge and/or a toll bridge across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, Ala.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 256) entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to exercise with respect to national banking associations powers which State officials may have with respect to State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies under State laws."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate reconsider its vote disagreeing to the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 223) entitled "Joint resolution establishing the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commission, and for other purposes," and agree to said amendment.

AMENDING RADIO ACT OF 1927

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee calls up a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 27 and 28.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 21, and 24, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "commission" in line 20 insert the following: "an application for a construction permit or license for a new station, a transfer of a license from one licensee to another, the revocation of a construction permit or license"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following substitute:

"Section 9 of the radio act of 1927, as amended by the act of March 28, 1928, Public Law No. 195, Seventieth Congress, is hereby amended by adding at the end of section 9 the following: 'Provided further, That the commission may also grant applications for additional licenses for stations not exceeding 100 watts of power if the commission finds that such stations will serve the public convenience, interest, or necessity, and that their operation will not interfere with the fair and efficient radio service of stations licensed under the provisions of this section.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered

17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 8. Section 12 of the radio act of 1927 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, sec. 92) is amended by striking out the whole of said section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"'The station license required hereby shall not be granted to or held by,

"'(a) Any alien or the representative of any alien;

"'(b) Any foreign government or the representative thereof;

"'(c) Any company, corporation, or association, organized under the laws of any foreign government;

"'(d) Any controlling or holding company, corporation, or association, of which any officer or more than one-fifth of the directors are aliens, or of which more than one-fifth of the capital stock may be voted by aliens, their representatives, or by a foreign government or representative thereof, or by any company, corporation, or association organized under the laws of a foreign country;

"'(e) Any corporation or association controlled by, or subsidiary to a corporation or association, of which any officer or more than one-fifth of the directors are aliens, or of which more than one-fifth of the capital stock may be voted by aliens, their representatives, or by a foreign government or representative thereof, or by any company, corporation, or association organized under the laws of a foreign country';

"Provided, however, That nothing herein shall prevent the licensing of radio apparatus on board any vessel, aircraft, or other mobile station of the United States when the installation and use of such apparatus is required by act of Congress or any treaty to which the United States is a party.

"The station license required hereby, the frequencies or wave length or length authorized to be used by the licensee, and the rights therein granted shall not be transferred, assigned, or in any manner either voluntarily or involuntarily disposed of, or indirectly by transfer of control of any company, corporation, or association holding such license, to any person, firm, company, association, or corporation, unless the commission shall, after a hearing, decide that said transfer is in the public interest, and shall give its consent in writing."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to same with an amendment as follows: After the word "commission" in line 7 insert the following: "for each and every day during which such offense occurs"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to same with an amendment as follows: After the word "revocation" in line 13, strike out "modification, or suspension" and insert in lieu thereof "or fine"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "revocation" in line 16, strike out the comma and "modification, or suspension" and insert after the word "issued" in line 17 "or a fine or fines imposed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to same with an amendment as follows: In line 17, page 16, strike out "district court" and insert in lieu "Circuit Court of Appeals"; in line 2, page 17, after the words "if supported by," insert "substantial"; in line 18, page 16, strike out "district" and insert in lieu "circuit"; in line 10, page 17, strike out "district" and insert "such"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 12 strike out "district courts" and insert in lieu "the Circuit Courts of Appeals"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 13. No person shall broadcast by means of any radio station for which a license is required by any law of the United States, and no person, firm, or corporation operating any such station shall knowingly permit the broadcasting of, any advertisement of or information concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes. Any person, firm, or corporation violating any provision of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both, for each and every day during which such offense occurs."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 11 and 12, page 19, strike out "or by a governmental agency," and after the words "public questions," in line 17, page 19, insert a new sentence, as follows: "Furthermore, it shall be considered in the public interest for a licensee, so far as possible, to permit equal opportunity for the presentation of both sides of public questions."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: Insert a new section, as fol-

"Sec. 15. All fines collected by the Federal Radio Commission under the provisions of the radio act of February 23, 1927, approved May 19, 1932, and amendments thereto, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States the first of each month."

And the Senate and the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Changes eastern Samoa to American Samoa, because of change in name.

On No. 2: Inserts the words "or members," so that any member or members of the commission, when duly designated by the commission for such purpose may hold hearings etc.

On Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, and 14: Eliminates the provisions in the House bill authorizing any examiner or other officer or employee, when duly designated by the commission for such purpose, to hold hearings, without limitation, and in lieu empowers the commission to authorize examiners to hold hearings in certain restricted instances, and also provides "that in all cases heard by an examiner, the commission shall grant oral arguments on request of either party."

On No. 10: Provides that all opinions or memorandum opinions filed by the commission in support of its decisions shall be entered of record and such record shall be public upon request of any party interested.

On No. 15: Changes Eastern Samoa to American Samoa, because of change in name.

On No. 16: Amends section 9 of the radio act of 1927, as amended by the act of March 28, 1928, by adding at the end of section 9 the following: "Provided further, That the commission may also grant applications for additional licenses for stations not exceeding 100 watts of power, if the commission finds that such stations will serve the public convenience, interest, or necessity, and that their operation will not interfere with the fair and efficient radio service of stations licensed under the provisions of this section." The chief change made in the Senate amendment is to substitute 100 watts of power for 250 watts.

The purpose of this amendment is to permit the commission to license local stations in areas which, on account of the topography, distances from existing broadcasting stations, or other conditions, are without adequate radio service, provided such stations would serve the public convenience, interest, and necessity and their operation will not interfere with the fair and efficient radio service of stations licensed under the provisions of the section as amended.

On No. 17: Amends the bill so as to permit a station license to be granted to or held by a company of which not more than one-fifth of the directors are aliens. It also broadens the present law so as to make the inhibition against licenses being granted to or held by aliens, or a company, corporation, or association of which any officer or more than one-fifth of the directors are aliens, or of which more than one-fifth of the capital stock may be voted by aliens, also apply to any controlling, holding, or subsidiary company, corporation, or association.

On No. 18: Eliminates the provision that a station license may be modified or suspended and in lieu provides that the station owner may be fined not to exceed $1,000 by the commission for each and every day during which such offense occurs.

On Nos. 19 and 20: Make the necessary changes to conform to the amendment embraced in amendment No. 18. No. 20 also substitutes "fifteen days" for a "reasonable opportunity" with respect to time allowed to show cause why a revocation should not be issued or fine imposed.

On No. 21: Conforming to amendments Nos. 22 and 23, revocations and fines are excepted from the provision that the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia under this section to review any decision or order of the commission shall be exclusive.

On No. 22: The Senate amendment provided that "any licensee may at his option, in lieu of appealing to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, appeal from any order of the commission revoking a station license or fining a station owner to the district court of the United States for the district in which the transmitting apparatus of the station license is operated." The conferees substituted the circuit court of appeals for the district court in this connection.

On No. 23: The Senate amendment provided that the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and of district courts of the United States to review any order of the commission revoking a station license or fining a station owner shall be exclusive.

Conforming to the preceding amendment, the circuit courts of appeals were substituted for district courts.

On No. 24: Changes Eastern Samoa to American Samoa because of change of name.

On No. 25: The amendment agreed upon is substantially the same as section 13 of the bill, involving some changes in phraseology.

This section forbids the broadcasting of any advertisement of or information concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance. On No. 26: This amendment broadens section 18 of the radio act of 1927, generally referred to as the "political section," designed to insure equality of treatment to candidates for public office, those speaking in support of or in opposition to any candidate for public office, or in the presentation of views on public questions.

On No. 27: This Senate amendment provided:

"No person, firm, company, or corporation shall be permitted to locate or maintain a radio broadcast studio or other place or apparatus from which or whereby sound waves or mechanical reproduction thereof are converted into electrical energy and transmitted or delivered to a radio station in a foreign country for the purpose of being broadcast from a radio station there, and thereby transmitted back into the United States without first obtaining permission from the Federal Radio Commission upon proper application therefor," etc.

This amendment was eliminated in conference.

On No. 28: This Senate amendment proposed the repeal of the amendment to subparagraph (c) of section 5 of the radio act of February 23, 1927, approved May 19, 1932, which restricts the issuance of radio licenses to American citizens. The Senate receded and this amendment was eliminated in conference.

On No. 29: In view of the fact that amendments Nos. 18, 19, and 20 provide for the collection of fines by the Federal Radio Commission without any direction as to what should be done with funds thus collected, amendment No. 29 provides that all fines collected by the commission shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States the first of each month.

EWIN L. DAVIS,
S. O. BLAND,
F. R. LEHLBACH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, it has been the policy of the Radio Commission heretofore, when application is made for a station for which a license has been already issued, to hold a hearing upon the application in Washington, even though the license has been issued to the holder thereof for a number of years. For instance, assume that it is in Las Vegas, Nev. A man in Los Angeles, we will say, applies to that same station. Instead of the commission saying no, it is already licensed and there is no opening and you can not have the station, a hearing is called, bringing the licensee from Las Vegas to Washington to protect the interest that has been given him by the Radio Commission.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. This bill authorizes the com-

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. This bill authorizes the commissioners, or any commissioner, or an examiner designated by them, to hold hearings anywhere in the country and it provides that when a hearing is held before an examiner either side may ask for a hearing before the commission and it shall be granted.

Mr. ARENTZ. Without cause? For instance, suppose there is no reason for changing the licensee?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It can not be known that there is no reason for not changing the licensee. We can not preclude citizens from making applications for licenses. No licensee acquires any vested rights.

Mr. ARENTZ. I can not quite get the gentleman's point of view. If a man has served the public well, if nothing has been done at the station in the eyes of the commission which would lead it to forfeit his rights, why should the fact that another man wants the station and makes application for it compel the original licensee to hire attorneys or attorney to defend his rights here in Washington?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Does not the law require them to give a hearing?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. They grant a full hearing if there is any occasion for it. However, this has no relation to the conference report.

I will answer the question which the gentleman has propounded, or rather the statement which the gentleman has made. This bill expands the right of hearings, and, as I have explained, it authorizes hearings to be held anywhere. It broadens the provisions with respect to hearings, to insure fairness and equality and fair consideration. The same is true with respect to appeals.

Now, this is a unanimous report of the conferees. This bill passed the House unanimously more than a year ago. The Senate adopted some amendments about which there was considerable controversy and to which there was considerable objection, but upon those amendments the Senate has receded, and I know of no objection to the conference report or the bill, from any source. We have reached a unanimous agreement with respect to the amendments that were agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am very much interested in that section which prohibits advertising of lottery schemes over the radio. It appears to me the new language is even stronger than the language carried in the original House bill. Is that true?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I think that is probably true. The conferees considered that the change in phraseology was desirable and clarifying, and on the whole in better shape than when it passed the House.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. CLANCY. Section 15, known as Senate amendment No. 27, is stricken from this bill. That language undoubtedly refers to radio stations established in foreign countries and having, just across the border in the United States, connections or studios which allow them to have broadcasts made, originating in the United States and sent to the station in Canada or Mexico and then broadcast.

To be more specific, that covers a radio station in Windsor, Ontario, known as CKOK, which has a studio in Detroit. I notice this amendment is stricken out in conference. Can the gentleman tell us why that was stricken out?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In the first place, there was a great deal of objection to it. In the second place, we did not consider it workable or enforceable. In the third place, the North American Radio Conference has been called to meet in Mexico City probably early in April, in which conference it will be sought to settle the differences between Canada, the United States, Mexico, and Cuba. There has been considerable confusion, and this is one of the features involved. We think it would be very unwise, on the eve of that conference, to undertake to deal with the situation in a half-baked, ineffective way, and which would undoubtedly irritate both Canada and Mexico. We think the matter can be and should be handled in that conference.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the gentleman state how many stations like CKOK there are on the Mexican border and how many on the Canadian border, and if there are any in Cuba?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I know of no illegal stations in Canada, because Canada has nine wave lengths, and so far as I know, they are all operating on the Canadian wave lengths. Mexico has never been allocated any wave lengths for broadcasting, and that is one thing this North American conference will be called upon to determine. Those stations that are operating in Mexico are presumably doing so with the consent of the Mexican Government, but they are not operating upon any wave lengths that have been allocated to them by international agreement or by the international radio conference.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the gentleman tell us with reference to stations on the Mexican border, what and where those stations are?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I think there are some stations in Mexico that could be termed entirely legitimate. There are also some along the border between Mexico and the United States, and some of them are causing a great deal of interference and trouble. The gentleman understands I am not in sympathy with that situation, but it is simply a question of how it can be and should be dealt with.

Mr. CLANCY. What I would like to get, and I think the House would also like to obtain, is some more specific information. For instance, is there a Mexican station at Juarez, Mexico, which has a studio or an outlet in El Paso, Tex., just as there is a Canadian station in Windsor which has an office in Detroit? Is there that situation on the Mexican border?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That may be, but I want to state that one of the strongest objections that came from Canada, as well as from citizens of the United States, was that a number of those Canadian stations received their programs from the United States chain systems, and they state this would absolutely prevent them from receiving those programs from the United States, if it was necessary to obtain the consent of the Radio Commission every time. They protested. The American stations and chains protested that that would simply destroy this service that was desired in Canada and in this country.

Mr. CLANCY. But may I ask the gentleman if he knows of any such stations? For instance, is there a joint international station at Buffalo? Is there one at Ogdensburg or other points or is there only one station of this sort, and that on the Detroit River?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I have heard of no complaint at all about any Canadian station except the one of which the gentleman speaks, and we were reliably informed that the trouble there grows out of a controversy between the parties who sold the station and the parties who bought the station, and that there is a fight between them: that it is a local, personal proposition, and after looking into it we did not think we ought to undertake to deal with that situation, and at the same time affect the entire international situation.

Mr. CLANCY. There is the Brinkley station at Del Rio, Tex., and Vera Cuna, Mexico, known as Station XER. With regard to Cuba, has Habana got a station?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; they have stations.

Mr. CLANCY. Which interferes with any American station or has an outlet in Florida?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not know of any interference from them. I have not heard of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. To those Members who will be using the radio in their candidacies two years from now, I know it will be interesting to notice the agreement of the conferees on Senate amendment No. 26, which bans for all time the right of these broadcasting stations and particularly those controlled by newspapers, from holding up Members of Congress for higher rates than are charged to advertisers furnishing the regular programs.

Those candidates who have had any experience at all in broadcasting in political campaigns and paying for it out of their own pockets, know what excessive rates they have to pay. At least I can testify that we have been held up for the payment of twice the commercial rates.

I wish to compliment the distinguished conferees for agreeing to the Senate amendment whereby Members of Congress and other political candidates will not in the future be held up when they use radio broadcasting.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I may state in response to the gentleman from Wisconsin, if he will pardon a personal reference, that I drafted the political equality section in our present radio law. As I drafted it, as the committee reported it, and as it passed the House it was pretty much in the form of the present Senate amendment. In other words, when it was introduced it was considerably broader than when it was finally passed by the Senate. It is very gratifying to me that others have come to the viewpoint I took several years ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. The country will praise the gentleman of treatment not only to individuals but to all sections of the country.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption or rejection of the conference

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14769) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to an hour and a half, to be equally divided and controlled between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr.

Wood and myself.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire whether it is the purpose of the gentleman from Texas to have other than general debate this afternoon? This is Saturday afternoon. We met at

Mr. BUCHANAN. I may state to my colleague that it is very important to get this legislation passed as quickly as possible. I do not want to rush it too much so that it will not be given proper consideration, but it must be recalled that this bill has to go to the Senate, to the Senate Committee to be investigated by them, reported by them to the Senate itself; then a conference committee must be appointed to consider it, and we are going to have trouble with the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. In prior sessions this bill is usually not presented until two or three days before the last day of the

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is usual.

Mr. STAFFORD. As it is, we are several days ahead of schedule. I wish to compliment the distinguished gentleman from Texas and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for having advanced the appropriation bills to this stage.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Texas mean that general debate will be confined to the bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No. Mr. STAFFORD. I hope there will be nothing but general debate this afternoon.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is understood that we will not start to read this bill this afternoon?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I have reached no such understanding.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us what he intends to do?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I had thought that if the time allotted for general debate is not taken up and we have time to read part of the bill we might do it. I do not know of any controversial matter in it. There might be one item of a controversial nature, but that is all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the second deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the confor his efforts in enacting radio legislation that gives equality | sideration of the bill (H. R. 14769) making appropriations session.

to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, with Mr. RAMSPECK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. BYRNES.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to emphasize what the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Buchanan, said a moment ago about the passage of this bill. It is comparatively short. There is nothing controversial in it. It will not take very long to read. The bill carries about $2,745,000, as I recall, in addition to the tax refund item. I hope it will be possible to get the bill through to-night, because it ought to get over to the Senate to enable that body to pass on it and be certain that it becomes law before the end of the

I have asked for this very short time because this is the last bill to be reported by the Committee on Appropriations at this session. I thought it well, therefore, to refer to the record which has been made by the Committee on Appropriations, and also by the House, at this session with reference to appropriation bills.

I think the House has reason to take very great pride in what it has accomplished in the way of reducing appropriations in these various bills, because, as you know, they were gone over before they came here, first by the department, then by the Director of the Budget, and then sent here for our consideration. As these bills, 11 in number, have been reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations they carried a reduction under the estimates of $77,657,-262.69.

The House in the consideration of those bills which have passed—and it has passed all of them except this bill—added $3,196,203 to them as reported by the committee.

The net result of the action of the House upon these bills as they have passed this body and gone to the Senate, was a reduction of $74,461,059.69 under the estimates of the President.

I think, as I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, that this is a matter in which every Member of the House can take a just pride. In my opinion, this is a considerable accomplishment in the interest of economy.

I said some time ago in a conference, when I was asked as to what, in my opinion, Congress would do with reference to the appropriations, that I could only speak for the Committee on Appropriations, but I felt that the House of Representatives, which was economically minded, would follow the recommendations of its committee; and that it has done to a remarkable extent. I said then that I felt satisfied we would undoubtedly reduce the estimates as reported by the committee in the sum of $75,000,000, and I am happy to say that that prediction has been more than fulfilled, because we have reduced by $2,657,000 more than I estimated at that time.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by publishing a statement showing the amounts reported in each bill and the reductions made therein.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Allgood].

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, I send a resolution to the desk and ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read it in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas an attack has been made on the life of the President elect, Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt; and Whereas injury to the person of the President elect was possibly averted by the prompt action of Mrs. W. F. Cross, of Miami, sibly averted by the prompt action of Mrs. W. F. Cross, of Miami, Fla.; and

Whereas subsequently a package of mail containing explosive material designed as an attack on the life of the President elect was discovered as being addressed to the President elect: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives express its thanks and grateful appreciation to Mrs. W. F. Cross, of Miami, Fla., for her efforts in preventing possible danger to the President elect; and be it further Resolved, That the House of Representatives calls upon all true, loyal, and patriotic citizens of the United States who are present at the inaugural ceremonies of the President elect, Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, and the Vice President elect, Hon. John Nance Garner, to be conservers of the peace and the public safety.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include that resolution in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Horn].

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, the President elect has selected his new cabinet to assist him when he takes up his duties on March 4. We all wish the incoming administration the greatest of success, and if good wishes could be turned into accomplishments no one would be happier than myself-and I am sure I also speak for my colleagues of my own party.

In the selection of the new cabinet the President elect has indeed made provisions for the forgotten men.

Along these lines may I read a little dissertation from our foremost humorist and foremost Democrat and who, as I also understand, at one time was suggested as a candidate for the Presidency of the United States on the Democratic ticket? May I read into the RECORD at this time his ideas and thoughts on the selection and qualifications of the members of the Cabinet of the President elect?

Will Rogers says:

BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF., February 24 .- Say, that list of new Cabinet members sent everybody scurrying through Who's Who, the World Almanac, and the United States fingerprint department files trying to find out who they were.

The forgotten man has been found. And there were nine of 'em and a woman.

So we open March 4 with the "unknown Cabinet." The rogues' gallery photographs show us that three of 'em escaped from the Senate. That's like going to the old folks' home to get an athlete. But I believe they are going to be all right. They all have their reputations to make, which is better than feeling that they have reputations already made.

[Laughter.]

I shall smile through my tears when the new Secretary of State takes office and exerts his influence in putting into effect the policy of tariff reductions. I shall try to "Buy American" in spite of the fact that I know there will soon be no American goods to buy. No protection for our timber, our pulp, our fish, our wages, or our industry!

I shall believe in and hope for a bigger and better Navy even though the new Secretary of the Navy was a delegate to the Geneva Disarmament Conference. I shall feel assured that an inferior Navy will be kept on the Pacific to protect the State that I shall occupy for the next two years as a private citizen.

I fear for the peace of mind of the new Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Woodin. How similar is his career and the career of the former Secretary of the Treasury under the present administration, Mr. Mellon. And will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Parman] make a distinction between aluminum and sugar. Will the gentleman again introduce his famous H. R. 1-the soldiers' bonus, and has he in advance a promise of support from the new Treasury head?

I am sure the gentleman from Texas is sincere in his advocacy of the payment of the bonus and that the introduction of the bill to pay the bonus was not for the purpose of embarrassing the Republican administration. I presume that the "bonus" will be H. R. 1 in the new Congress and that the new secretary will approve, and that the day of the bonus marchers is over. Otherwise breakers are ahead. May I respectfully point out this barrier to the new Secretary of the Treasury so that he also may escape the pitfalls that almost proved destructive to Mr. Mellon.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORR. In just a moment.

The Democratic National Committee's report on campaign contributions shows Mr. Woodin gave $40,000 to the 1932 campaign. Mr. Farley's statement that those who gave will get is certainly proven in this instance.

The report of Mr. Walker, Democratic national treasurer, to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, on contributions to the 1932 campaign, shows that Mr. Woodin, the new Secretary of the Treasury, made the following contributions on the dates listed:

Aug. Aug. Sept. Sept.	27, 31, 9, 21,	1932	$3,000 2,000 5,000 10,000 5,000
Sept.	30,	1932	15,000

I yield now to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does not the gentleman believe that the great American sugar interests, agricultural and manufacturing, will be placed at a disadvantage under this new Cabinet set-up with Woodin the new Secretary of the Treasury interested in Cuban industries; with Roper, the new Secretary of Commerce, a former star lobbyist for seven or eight Cuban sugar companies; and now the new Attorney General becoming interested in Cuban sugar plan-

Mr. HORR. I admit that without doubt it is certainly going to be a sweet question. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER. And perhaps we may be paying 29 or 30 cents a pound for sugar, the way we did under the last Democratic administration

Mr. HORR. I admit that the gentleman is correct.

My desire is that no entangling alliance either at home or abroad shall embarrass the new President. Having this in mind may I refer to the lady who will be the first of her sex in the history of our country to head the great Department of Labor. This appointment is a wonderful gesture to the sex we all love. A tribute to the mothers, the wives, the sweethearts of the Nation.

The American Federation of Labor, the organization most vitally affected by the appointment, is not so well pleased. But the American Federation of Labor is becoming accustomed to disappointments. That organization has taken it on the chin before and will do it again. Chivalry is not dead and the workers will lift their hats to the lady Secretary from New York.

Desiring as we all do that everything should be avoided that would cause embarrassment to the incoming administration, may we be pardoned if we point out at least one pitfall that lies in the pathway of the newly elected Secretary

The press accounts designate the new Secretary of Labor by the name of Miss Frances Perkins. In the same article it is stated that the lady Secretary is the wife of Paul C. Wilson. Having in mind a former incident, when a woman employed in Government service married, and the question of the use of her maiden name or the name of her husband arose in the payment of salary due her from the Government, the Comptroller General held in a decision, set forth in United States Comptroller General Decisions 4. July-September, 1924, at page 165 (A. 4176) entitled "Pay Roll Signatures-Married Women Employees," and I quote from the decision, as follows:

Comptroller General McCarl to the Secretary of the Interior,

August 8, 1924:

By your reference date July 17, 1924, decision is requested whether a woman employee who has married and continues in the service may be carried on the pay roll under her maiden name or whether the surname of her husband must be shown on the pay roll.

It appears that an employee of St. Elizabeths Hospital, Dr. Marjorie M. Jarvis, notified the superintendent that she was to be married to a Mr. Hutson on May 24, 1924, and that she was so married. Accordingly the employee's name was changed on the pay roll from Jarvis to Hutson. The employee has since refused to sign her married name on the pay roll and her attorney has notified the superintendent that the employee desires to retain her maiden name.

In volume 21, American and English Encyclopedia of Law, 312, the following rule is laid down: "Married women—By custom a woman at marriage loses her own surname and acquires that of her husband." In volume 29, Encyclopedia 264, on the subject of husband and wife, it is stated that "at marriage the wife takes the husband's surname." the husband's surname.

The following quotation is taken from volume 1, pages 66 and 67 of Schouler's work on Domestic Relations:

"Marriage at our law does not change the man's name, but it confers his surname upon the woman. Until a decree of divorce giving a married woman leave to resume her maiden name goes into full effect, or widowhood is succeeded by a new marriage and another husband, she goes by her former husband's

In discussing the same subject Schouler says this is the law of England and America and it would appear a wife can only obtain another name by separation. The foregoing rules of law are sustained by the following authorities: Carroll v. State, 53 Nebr. 431.

And he goes on to note any number of decisions.

"In the Ohio and Texas cases, supra, the courts expressly held that 'the law confers upon a wife the surname of her husband upon marriage.

"It is the universal rule of practice in the courts of this country that on granting a decree of divorce, the court may by decree restore the maiden name of the wife. This is also the law of the District of Columbia. Section 979 of the District Code reads as follows:

"Maiden name of wife restored. In granting a decree from the bond of marriage the court may restore to the wife her maiden or

"It is apparent from this language that the law presumes the name of the woman is changed to that of the husband on contracting the marital relation, and the court has the option under section 979, on granting a decree of divorce, to either restore the maiden name or the name of a deceased husband. She must have lost her maiden name, otherwise it could not be restored.

"It is true our law has been liberalized by the passage of the so-called married women's acts in most of the States of the Union, but these acts have to do largely with the property rights of the wife. At common law the husband not only became liable for the support of his wife but took title to her property as a sort of compensation for the marital responsibility. While the married woman's acts recognized the wife in the married state as a femme sole, capable of suing and being sued, and these acts in some States give her the right to alienate her individual property without being joined by her husband, yet the old rule of marital unity is still preserved. All law writers agree that marriage is a civil contract, and most law writers agree that it is more than a mere contract. So far as the legal status of a man and wife is concerned their relation is contractual, but marriage is an institution contemplating homes and families. Each family is a unit in the body politic, and it can hardly be imagined of husbands, wives, and children composing the same family bearing different names."

I might state at this point that this opinion is an opinion which was not written, I anticipate, with the thought that some time it would become applicable to as distinguished a personage as a Cabinet officer of the United States Govern-

The law in this country that the wife takes the surname of the husband is as well settled as that the domicile of the wife merges in the domicile of the husband. A wife might reside apart from her husband, but so long as she remains his lawful wife she has but one legal domicile, and that is the domicile of the husband. So it is with the name. She may have an assumed name, but she has but one legal name. The separate legal entity of the wife is not so generally recognized as to accept the maiden name rather than the surname of the husband. It is to-day the main distinction between a single woman and a married woman and such fact tion between a single woman and a married woman, and such fact has in the past appeared upon the pay rolls. There appears no valid reason why it should not so continue, and the pay roll should state the fact accordingly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORR. Right away.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, I do not know whether the gentleman is familiar with the law of the State of New York or not.

Mr. HORR. We are talking about the United States. refuse to discuss any State law with anybody, because we have Representatives here from all 48 States and I have not time for 48 discussions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am prefacing my question by saying this lady has been a very distinguished chairwoman of the Labor Department of the State of New York, probably the biggest office in the country next to this Cabinet position. Under the laws of the State of New York any person, whether married or single, may adopt any name he or she chooses. That is the situation there. I do not know what the situation is in Washington, but what I am eager to hear is whether or not there is any objection to this appointment.

Mr. HORR. I have no objection, and I have nothing to do, much to my discomfiture, with the appointment of anybody in this next administration. I will say in all kindness to the lady I am only pointing out the pitfalls into which she may fall. I wish her all the luck and success in the world.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman must know that the lady has a family including several children.

Mr. HORR. I might say, if I wished to be critical, that your Democratic Economy Committee of this House brought out the fact that married women who have husbands who are employed should not be holding Government jobs. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORR. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is not the gentleman too critical of this newly selected Democratic Secretary of Labor? Perhaps, it may be necessary to have Mr. Wilson, the new secretary's husband, take "Mr." Dolly Gann's place at all social functions. [Laughter.]

Mr. HORR. And the thought occurs to me with respect to the Presidential procession at White House functions, whether the lady will be on the right or on the left of her husband. [Laughter.]

Mr. AMLIE. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HORR. Yes.
Mr. AMLIE. I notice the gentleman used the pronunciation "martial union"-I presume the gentleman is married.

Mr. HORR. That is probably an interpretation that could be better understood by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. AMLIE] if I mispronounced the word. His failure to catch the pronunciation shows that his mind was on marital conflict. [Laughter.]

I am sure that the lady from New York, the new Secretary of Labor, will appreciate my solicitous and painstaking delving into authorities on matters of pay roll-one of the most important prerogatives of office. I wish her all the success in the world in her new undertaking, and I hope my little journeys into pay-roll requirements will be helpful to her in her new undertakings.

The decision quoted is in the words of Comptroller General McCarl in 1924 and at present the Comptroller General of the United States. I presume that if the law applied to an employee of St. Elizabeths Hospital, a governmental institution, the same law will apply to the new Secretary of Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORR. Yes.
Mr. BLACK. I want to suggest to the gentleman that the Republicans will not have such technical difficulties with pay rolls after March 4.

Mr. HORR. That is something about which we are very much in agreement. If that is all the gentleman has to ask me it is not a matter of news to the Republicans that we will soon be off the pay roll.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORR. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. The Republicans have not made it a practice in the administration of any Government unit to follow the principles and policies enunciated in an article in a recent issue of Collier's entitled "The Tammany Take."

Mr. HORR. That is something upon which I am not an authority. I will let the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] have two minutes of my time to answer that, if he

Mr. PARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORR. Yes; I see I have started something. Mr. PARKS. The gentleman speaks about Tammany running things. If Tammany should have charge of this Government for the next 12 years, does the gentleman think it could possibly make as poor a job out of it as the Republican Party has made of it in the last 12 years? [Laughter.]

Mr. HORR. I can say this much to the gentleman from the South, and I congratulate you, as I did the other day.

You from the South are now in possession of 30 chairmanships and Tammany has only 6. I would suggest that if you feel that way you from the South divide up your chairmanships that you took in the last elections from my country, the West, and share them with Tammany, and then we will see what happens to this country. [Laughter.]

God help the country if Tammany would run the Federal Government in the same manner that a recent article in Collier's, entitled "The Tammany Take," charges that Tammany runs New York City. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. Parks] must remember that Democracy includes Tammany as well as the gentlemen from the South. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. You can have your two minutes back.

[Laughter.]

Mr. HORR. In this Government of ours the theory of law is that justice is blind and that all laws apply equally to the high and low, the rich and poor alike. Of course, no distinction in its application between individuals is contemplated under our theory of democracy.

Really and truly, friends on the other side, I am hoping that in these new Cabinet selections you have selected men who will carry on successfully the affairs of Government. I do not think you know whether they will, and I do not think anybody knows whether they can; but if untried and new timber is what is necessary in the conduct of government, you have certainly produced a new type of statesmen and stateswomen.

Remember, your campaign was a campaign of promises. You Democrats promised, if returned to power, to change conditions, and as a patriotic citizen of this great United States I hope you will be able to deliver. I want to say this much to you: Your promises are of record. You promised to make a 25 per cent reduction in cost of Government and at the same time made promises that called for expenditures many times the promised saving. I sincerely hope you will do it, although I know, and you know, you can not do it. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Gilbert].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the House Committee on the Library, I feel it my responsibility to call attention to a situation existing in the Library of Congress. This is not made in opposition but supplementary to an able address made on the floor of the Senate, February 10, by my learned friend, Senator Fess, of Ohio, chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library.

He spoke of the Library's service to Congress, of the facilities it gave to researchers and writers and of its contributions to knowledge, but made no reference to the Law Library which is probably that department of the Library with which all branches of the Government are in most intimate contact, except to refer briefly to its invaluable guides to the law of foreign countries.

The Library is "The Library of Congress" and Congress is a law-making body. Senator Fess is a profound scholar. However, he is not a lawyer and has not that special interest in legal literature which the study and practice of this profession develops.

The law is the greatest of the professions. Law must first establish peace and order before progress in the arts and sciences is possible. Its ever present benefits cause us to be oblivious of their presence. The medical profession is a great profession but many men go through the years without consulting a doctor. But throughout every one of those years and every day and hour they are advised, aided, and protected by law and after their death the law protects their remains until time has effaced all evidence of where they lie. Thus, every nation has been great in proportion to the greatness of its lawyers. The Jewish nation was unimportant until the coming of Moses, its great lawgiver. Rome, inferior to Athens in culture and learning, has contributed more to the world's progress through its capacity for government. "The last of the Cæsars has fallen," says Roscoe Pound, "but the thought of the juris-consults of the days of the first Cæsar is still law in half the world." Napoleon predicted his civil code would live long after his 40 victories would be forgotten. England, but a small island in the sea, has dominated the thought and action of the world for centuries through the ability of her statesmen. Among all the glories of America, its greatest achievement is the work of its lawyers and statesmen, the Constitution of the United States.

Although I join with Senator Fess in his appreciation of the other branches of the Library of Congress, I assert and regret the subordination of the law branch to other activities less important and less in keeping with its purposes.

Perhaps even many of us lawyers do not appreciate the importance of the law library to the Congress. So little is known about the law library that in 1932 when the Senate was discussing the appropriations for the purchase of books for the law library it was not realized that it consisted of anything more than that branch at the Capitol familiarly known as the Supreme Court library, and as a result of this misunderstanding the appropriations were cut from an already reduced appropriation of $40,000 to $25,000.

In fact, the law library at the Capitol forms a small though very essential part of the total law collections, whose importance is strikingly attested to by an enactment which provides that—

The law library shall be kept open every day so long as either House of Congress is in session.

So long as a light glows in the dome of the Capitol, so long is the law library open to meet the legislative need of Congress. But essential as this library is, it could not stand alone, for if a problem calls for extensive research, it is to the main branch of the law library that the Capitol must turn as an ultimate reservoir.

Fortunately the error of 1932 has been corrected and an annual appropriation of $50,000 has been restored to the law library. In moving the amendment, Senator Reed stated:

The amount ought to be $75,000, and that has been strenuously urged by the American Bar Association and by other groups of lawyers, the Federal Bar Association, and the American Patent Law Association. Some of the justices of the Supreme Court have urged that we make the amount much higher. The Budget estimate, however, was held down to $50,000, but for some reason not explained the committee cut it down further $20,000. That is only about one-half of what is required to keep up a law library in a first-class university.

Charles Wickliffe, a former distinguished Member of this House from Kentucky, later Governor of the Commonwealth. and Postmaster General of the United States, who may be called the father of the law library, foresaw the impropriety of keeping the law material as an integral part of the general collections. Accordingly he introduced a resolution in 1826, followed by others in 1828 and 1830 providing that the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency of separating the law books from the other books in the library. His perseverance was finally rewarded by the act of July 14, 1832, which created the law library within the orbit of the Library of Congress. Unfortunately, this partial emancipation was not sufficient, and the law library has suffered the comparative neglect which is the fate of all law libraries which are not totally autonomous. In his notable address, Senator Fess states:

We may be aware that the collection of music—one of the three largest in the world—is known to every musicologist, both here and abroad * * we might be surprised to learn that the collection of Slavic literature in the Library is the most important outside of Russia, and that the 150,000 volumes of Chinese books constitute the most important such assemblage outside of China.

In his speech, which has been published as a document, mention was also made by the Senator of other features as well in which the Library of Congress excelled. But of the law collections the learned Senator sayeth not. I would fail in my duty, therefore, as chairman of the House committee, if I did not say a word in its behalf and make known some of its needs to the Members of Congress, who, although more than half of them are lawyers and although they derive constant benefit from its collections, seem indifferent to its development on a par with general literature, manuscripts, maps, music, Chinese, Russian, fine arts, and other sections of the Library. Like the able Senator from Ohio, I am proud of our primacy in these fields of learning and culture, but by all means let the law library have parity with them.

I am informed that the United States Government possesses the greatest medical library in the world, a library of over 900,000 volumes and pamphlets, which is under the control of the Surgeon General of the Army. I state the fact with pride. All honor to the medical profession of the Army, which has the acumen to assemble the world's finest library for the study and research of medicine. But why has not the Congress, in its own library, through all these hundred years, been able to gather a law library comparable

I again quote Senator FESS:

I am constrained to believe that the workings of the Library are not generally appreciated. I know they are not by the public, and I think they are not fully appreciated even by those who are intimate with the Library—Members of Congress.

If this is true of the Library of Congress in general, what should be said about the law library? The Members of this House use its books constantly, expect it to render speedy service in supplying information during a House debate, and call on it for extensive researches in widely diversified fields. For example, the Members of Congress have requested the law library to investigate and report on Russian laws in Alaska, liquor legislation abroad, the nationality laws of various foreign countries, and so forth and so forth. Besides, Congress profits indirectly from the law library through the wide use that is made of it by the legislative reference service of the Library, the Brookings Institution, and all other research agencies, which supply the Members with important factual studies of current social and economic problems. It appears from the list of questions answered by the legislative reference service, reported in the recent hearings, that more than one third of them involve points of law. Nevertheless the annual appropriation for this department of the Library until recent years has been little more than would be expended by a successful law firm in New York or Chicago. In fact, Justice Stone of the Supreme Court, came twice before the Appropriations Subcommittee to tell this committee the quite obvious fact that the Government could not function without a first rate law library and that law books cost money.

Lest my fellow Members think that despite this neglect the law library has not suffered impairment and that we can still continue to neglect it let me give them a few facts and figures. The law library as it now stands, consists of some 275,000 volumes of which some 60,000 English and American reports and other books are kept in the Capitol branch of the law library, known as the Law Library of Congress and the Supreme Court and in the conference room, for the immediate use of these two bodies. In the congressional building, I am told, are housed collections duplicating those in the Capitol, and also the foreign, the rare law books, including American colonial laws and early English law, a collection of the Supreme Court records and briefs, and a large amount of miscellaneous law matter such as bar association reports, texts not normally called for at the Capitol, and so forth. While a law library of 275,000 volumes may seem large, it should be considered that probably 100,000 of these volumes are duplicates, the numerous calls of the Library from the Members and justices requiring it to carry many extra copies of reports, statutes, and text

The truth is that the law library is lacking a considerable number of important law reports, statutes, treaties, and session laws, and is surpassed in many fields by several law libraries here and abroad. At the recent hearings the law librarian, John T. Vance, pointed out that some 75,000 volumes of primary sources were lacking, resulting in large gaps in essential material. It is on the face of it inconsistent that the Government of the United States, with its great practical needs in the field of legislation and jurisprudence, should have a smaller library to draw from than the faculty and law students at Harvard University, which has a library of 435,000 volumes. Rather it should approximate the ideal of a perfect law library drawn by one of the benchers of the Middle Temple, who said of that old law library:

It contained (or ought to contain) the laws of all the ages, and of all countries, and the laws which governed them, the legum leges. Next, the most important, it showed the application of those laws in the thousands and tens of thousands of adjudged cases, reported from all the courts and accumulated and recorded in the law library. All good and evil—quinquid agunt homines, spes, timor, ira, voluptas—all men's proceedings were preserved there, with all their actions, deeds, and wills, there you are all with all their actions, deeds, and wills, there you are all

That Dr. Herbert Putnam, the Librarian of Congress, is in harmony with this view can not be doubted, for at one of the recent hearings he stated:

We ought to have as fine a collection of law, every branch of law, as exists anywhere.

The national bar associations, I am glad to say, have at last manifested great interest in the law library, and have shown a desire to cooperate with Congress in building it up to the position it requires as the national research law library. In pursuance of a resolution favoring the expansion of the law library, President Clarence E. Martin, of the American Bar Association, recently appointed a committee to inquire into means looking to that end, composed of James O. Murdock, of the Department of State; William L. Frierson, former Solicitor General of the United States; Roscoe Pound, dean of the Harvard Law School: Charles Warren. author of The Supreme Court in United States History, and George W. Wickersham, former Attorney General. The Federal Bar Association and the American Patent Law Association have likewise appointed similar committees composed of prominent attorneys.

Preceded by Justice Stone, whose appearances before the subcommittee has been referred to already, representatives from these organizations made statements before the legislative appropriations subcommittee giving concrete examples from their own experience of the need for an adequate law library. At the hearings Justice Stone reiterated his views expressed in 1930 before the same committee when he said:

You have here in Washington greater demands for a law library now, and looking to the future, than in any other place. You have the Supreme Court and the other courts of the Dis-You have the Supreme Court and the other courts of the District; you have the great departments of the Government; you have both Houses of Congress; you have the diplomatic service. These call for constant practical use of the law library. Therefore, you ought to build it up for them. But I see increasingly coming to this city various organizations created for the purposes of legal scholarship and research. * * * They are typical of many other institutions which will come to Washington in the future which will require a really great law library. There are other fields of historical, social, and economic research which are not primarily legal at all and yet have sooner or later to do with the law, because all the problems of past history, of social and economic significance, ultimately find expression in the law in one form or other.

sion in the law in one form or other.

To stress the practical utility of old and scarce material, Justice Stone gave, during the course of the same hearings, illustration from his own experience showing the use to which such volumes are put. I am quoting the learned justice:

Unless you are familiar with what people do who are engaged in legal research and study from the point of view of the historical, analytical jurisprudence, it might seem very fantastic to you that one should ever want a law book 100 or 200 years old. But I have lately had two personal experiences, which I use by But I have lately had two personal experiences, which I use by way of illustration, showing how even in the workaday life of a justice of the Supreme Court we need out-of-the-way material.

The able justice then referred to the case of Hudson v. United States (272 U.S. 451). In that case the decision turned on the effect to be given a plea of nolle contendere. In reaching their decision the Supreme Court had to have recourse to a case translated by him from the old English yearbooks. In his other illustration Justice Stone showed how he had had to examine numerous treatises on medieval Danish and French law in the case of Neilson v. Johnson (279 U. S. 47) to get at the proper interpretation of a treaty. Had he desired the justice could undoubtedly have cited other cases. One that comes to mind is the case of the Paquete Habana (175 U. S. 677), where the Supreme Court upheld the right of fishermen to pursue their peaceful calling without molestation in time of war. To arrive at this result countless venerable authorities were examined and cited from Cleirac's Us et Coutumes de la Mer to Bynker-shoek's Quæstiones Juris Publicæ.

The corresponding need for modern foreign law and legislation was pointed out by Mr. Murdock and Mr. William R. Vallance, solicitors of the State Department, and Mr. Karl Fenning, of the Washington bar, who respectively represented the American and the Federal Bar Associations and the American Patent Law Association at this year's hearings. Mr. Murdock gave this illustration:

In the recent arbitration of a $3,000,000 claim of the Swedish Government against the United States, which was successfully defended, it became necessary to examine the entire war-time shipping legislation of Sweden. The Swedish laws were not to be found in the United States. It was necessary to go to the expense of cabling to Sweden for them. The laws finally reached Washington, only in time to be hurriedly examined. If the case had turned on a question of Swedish law, the legal sources in this country would have been inadequate. A $3,000,000 case might have been lost for lack of legal tools with which to defend it.

Among the illustrations given by Mr. Vallance the following may be quoted:

* * there was a case in the Court of Claims where a Czech claimant filed suit. The question came up as to whether an American, suing the Czechoslovak Government, would be permitted to prosecute a claim in the courts of Czechoslovakia. That is a reciprocity provision that is in the Court of Claims act. We telegraphed to our legation in Prague and had them purchase the necessary books on this subject and send them over here.

Mr. Fenning said:

There is a vast literature relating to industrial property in such countries as Italy, France, Germany, and England. To be on a par with those countries, at least, we should have a place where we can read what they have said and to know what they mean when they make a proposal at an international convention. We do not have that at the present time.

Were these illustrations given by theorists one might be able to discount them. But they are not. They were given by a justice of the Supreme Court and by practical lawyers defending the United States Government who have had practical need for rare and foreign material within recent times.

Furthermore, although not brought out at the hearings, it should be noted that the Federal courts take judicial cognizance of the laws of certain foreign countries whose possessions once lay in the present territory of the American empire. Thus the Supreme Court has had to examine Mexican law in determining the validity of certain titles to land in territory formerly under Mexican jurisdiction (Crespin v. United States, 168 U.S. 208; Fremont v. United States, 17 How. 541), Spanish law in cases coming up from Puerto Rico and Louisiana (Municipality of Ponce v. Roman Catholic Apostolic Church in Puerto Rico, 210 U. S. 296; United States v. Turner et al., 11 How. 663), and Panamanian law-actually Colombian law-in an accident case that was taken to the Supreme Court from the Canal Zone. And it is possible that the laws of Russia and possibly Holland may arise like wraiths to plague the stolid structure of the common law, for although the superior court of the city of New York has held that the Dutch never had title to New Netherland, it is by no means certain that a higher court would follow this interpretation.

Besides that the civil law still lingers in the present jurisprudence of some of our States. In Louisiana which furnishes the most notable example, the system of law has its roots in French and Spanish as well as Anglo-Saxon sources. It is trite to mention that difficult questions of foreign law can not be resolved correctly without the aid of an adequate library. As observed by Story in a letter to Edward Everett, one of the most active members of the Library Committee of his day:

It would be a sad dishonor of a national library not to contain the works of Cujacius, Vinnius, Heineccius, Brissonius, Voet, etc. They are often useful for reference, and sometimes indispensable for a common-law lawyer. How could one be sure of some nice doctrines in the civil law of Louisiana without possessing and consulting them? What is to become of the laws of Florida without them?

Even Marshall, who relied on his own great mind as well as on judicial precedents for the formulation of his incomparable decisions, found that he was helpless without books in the field of foreign law. In Soulard v. United States (4 Peters 511), he said:

If the duty of deciding on these various titles [Spanish land titles] is transferred by the Government to the judicial department, the laws and principles on which they depend ought to be supplied. The edicts of the preceding governments in relation to the ceded territory; the powers given to the governors, whether expressed in their commissions or in special instruction; and the deputy governors and other inferior officers who may have been authorized to allow the inception of title, are all material to a correct decision of the cases now before the courts, and which may come before it. We can not doubt the disposition of the government to furnish this information if it be attainable. We are far from being confident that it is attainable but have determined to hold the cases which have been argued under advisement until the next term, in the hope that in the meantime we may be relieved from the necessity of deciding conjecturally on interests of great importance.

More recently the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, in a case characterized as of—importance * * * to residents of the Virgin Islands-was led to complain that the question was complicated by—the necessity of searching for the law in force before the acquisition of the islands by the United States and finding it in human repositories—the memory of one-time Danish subjects—rather than upon statute books. (Thornberg v. Jorgensen et al., 60 Fed. (2d) 471.)

Surely we are too far advanced in our national life to have to depend on the short memory of man for the solution of some of our knottiest law problems, particularly when these foreign legal sources can be supplied.

The above examples illustrate the need of the executive, and particularly the judicial, branches of the Government for adequate collections of foreign and domestic law.

But it is not to be presumed that the Congress will not derive a practical profit from a complete law library to which they could turn when need be. In a recent article in the New York Times entitled "What's Wrong With Congress," Senator Tydings said:

To pass upon the larger questions now, more than ever, requires some substantial measure of familiarity with the problems and conditions of other countries as with one's own. To consider currency legislation requires a knowledge of India's gold-standard venture, the debasing of silver in Belgium, Great Britain, and France, and how this has affected not only our own currency and trade but those of China, Mexico, and South America. So it is with other questions. Research into such matters, not normally important enough to require such consideration, now must be made, for without such examination the solution will be of no avail.

And inasmuch as such research must, in a large measure, consist in the examination of foreign juridical sources their rôle in legislation becomes clear as the result of the cogent statement of Senator Tydings.

I think that I have made it clear that the Congress and the coordinate branches of the Government have an immediate and an imperative use for a complete law collection. The law library should be provided not only with a reference collection but with one that will anticipate the problems of to-morrow. It is true that some of its needs may, in time, be filled by the generosity of private contributors. As Senator FESS pointed out, the establishment of the Library of Congress trust-fund board opened the vehicle for such gifts, and already more than a million dollars have been donated to the Library of Congress for the purchase of books, and the development of its facilities for research. Unfortunately, while other branches of the library have been profiting from material gifts, the law library has been overlooked. The recent active interest shown by the national bar associations in the law library may remedy this situation. But, in any event, any contribution that may be forthcoming will not relieve the Government of its plain duty to provide adequately for the law library.

And so I repeat that Senator FESS in honoring the library has honored himself, and I share with him the laudable pride he takes in the Library of Congress—one of America's noblest institutions-but let us not longer neglect that department which deals with the law, which-as it relates to the conduct of man is a moral science of great sublimity; as its object is individual and national happiness, it is, of all others, the most important; as it respects the moral actions of men, and of nations, it is infinitely varied; and as it concerns all our rights and obligations either derived from or due to God, our neighbor, our country, or ourselves, it must necessarily be a science of vast extent.

[Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, when shall we again see the 2-cent postage stamp—not the 5-cent cigar nor the mug of beer, but our good old friend, the 2-cent stamp of former days? That is the question before the country to-day.

I am opposed to canceling foreign debts. I am in favor of higher prices for farm products and lower interest rates and against mortgage foreclosures while this world-wide depression lasts. But at this moment I want to cut firstclass postage rates.

In the Federal tax bill of last year an attempt was made to raise revenue by raising first-class-letter postage rates from 2 cents to 3 cents per letter. This was one of many inequities in that bill.

That was illogical. First-class mail was already more than paying its way. Why increase the rate 50 per cent? At that time I believed it an unjust tax on the public and that it would not' increase revenues. I, therefore, voted against the increase. I voted against the 3-cent postage stamp. I did not believe it fair to the casual letter writer. I regarded it as a burdensome and unfair tax on commerce and business.

Time and experience have long since demonstrated it was a mistake to increase first-class postage.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to ask if the gentleman in his investigation has not found that all classes of people are opposed to this 3-cent postage—that it is not confined to the small user, but also to the large user—that it is unnecessary, that it is a nuisance to people all over the country.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I think it is an unnecessary tax on all the people; they are opposed to it and it has not produced postal revenue. Business has found ways of billing its customers direct. Thus postal receipts have decreased instead of increased. Legitimate postal revenues have been driven to other channels.

From the opening days of this session in the interest of better business I have sought relief from the burdensome 3-cent postage stamp.

On December 5, Mr. Kurtz, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. MEAD, chairman of the Post Office Committee of the House, introduced bills "To restore the 2-cent rate of postage on firstclass mail matter." These bills were referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

I have repeatedly urged the proponents of these bills and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to action. The gentlemen who introduced these bills and all of us want action, but the bills lie dormant in the committee, smothered, while business resents an unjust tax and the department suffers a loss of revenue.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I yield.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. I am in thorough accord with the gentleman on this matter. I voted against this increase of postage and regret that it was ever made. Does the gentleman show in his remarks which classes of mail have produced an increase in revenue and which have produced a loss?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I do not wish to discuss that now, but first-class mail has always produced a

Mr. SWICK. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SWICK. Since the inauguration of the 3-cent stamp has not the Post Office Department lost in revenue?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. There is some disagreement in regard to that, but every postmaster that I can learn of over the United States agrees that it has decreased revenue instead of increasing it. There has been a decrease in the first-class mail revenue since the 3-cent postage went into effect.

Mr. SWICK. Is it not a fact that when we increased the postage on post cards from 1 to 2 cents that there was a loss in revenue?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That is a fact.

Why can not we get action on this bill?

Why the delay? Can it be possible the Democratic Ways and Means Committee in charge of the bill plays politics with a business problem so simple of remedy? Must business be thus penalized by politics when action could be had any hour?

When will the Ways and Means Committee, which raised the postage a year ago, give the Congress an opportunity to restore the 2-cent postage stamp? Big problems must be settled, but small problems that affect the people must also have attention.

I implore the aid of every member of both parties to join to-day in an effort to cut postage rates-not at some later date, but now. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC].

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have as much respect for the Chief Executive as any other citizen of the Nation, yet when he or any other person ruthlessly runs roughshod over the rules and regulations of any department I think it is my public duty to call it to the attention of the body of which I am a member and to the Nation. Some time ago I called attention to the fact that many thousands of employees had been blanketed into Civil Service positions, which enables them to hold those places for life. This kind of discrimination promotes inefficiency. It lowers the morale, and it shows that a person who does it without any respect for efficiency does not have the interest of the public at heart.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Has such a thing been done?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read the President's recent Executive order in my

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will read. There was no objection and the Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER

Appointment of Special Investigators in the Immigration Service, Department of Labor

The following-named persons may be appointed special investigators in the Immigration Service, Department of Labor, without regard to the requirements of the civil-service rules:

Wallace D. Bassford, Ervin F. Brown, W. Woodruff Chisum, Carlo deVio, Abraham Dickstein, Edward S. Doak, William L. Ford, J. Theodore George, James Hoover, Thomas A. Lewis, James H. O'Connor, Mabel Rewman, Harry L. Tetlow, and John W. Williams. This order is issued upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Labor, who advises that these officials have been in the Depart.

of Labor, who advises that these officials have been in the Department of Labor for varying periods of time and have each rendered such highly meritorious service, often under most trying and difficult circumstances, in the performance of their duties as to warrant this action.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 16, 1933.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does that cover them into the civil service?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Or do they come in under the general provisions of the $200,000 for inspectors under the alien contract labor law?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. This order gives them a civil-service status so that it is not necessary for them to take civil-service examination in the future, as I understand it. They would not need the order, if that were not so. If we are going to have a Civil Service Commission, the President and all others ought to abide by its rules and regulations. Either the President of the United States is not in sympathy with this department of the Government, or he wants to take care of certain individuals whom he feels might not qualify if they were required to take an examination.

I am advised that between five and ten thousand of the best positions of this Government have been given to certain individuals by covering them into office with a blanket order, thus enabling them to hold such appointments for life. In this particular order the political chicanery that has been used is noticeable, as the name of a Democrat has been placed at the head of the list. It is true that he is a most excellent person; however, I am advised that his service in this department only covers a period of one year and no doubt he received this consideration for the purpose of softening the criticism that would come to the President if all were affiliated with his party. Anyhow, there are thousands of efficient men and women who have had their morale impaired by such a procedure, as they would be entitled to be promoted to fill certain positions if it were not for this kind of indefensible practice on the part of the Chief Executive. In order that my colleagues may have some idea as to the character of positions that have been given to certain persons by this very bad practice, I call attention to a list that has been furnished to me covering the attorneys that have been blanketed into fine jobs by Executive order on the part of the President. There are thousands of others in this same class.

I do not believe that the citizens of this country as	prove

I do not believe that the citizens of this country approve any such conduct, and I hope when the next administration comes into power that an order will be put into effect requiring every person who has been covered into the civil service by a blanket order to take an examination, and to qualify under the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission. If it does not do that, then we can not hope to have harmony, efficiency, or happiness in the departments. You gentlemen would be surprised at the number of employees who have come to me and said, "Here is a bunch of lawyers, or a bunch of employees, who have been put into key positions over those who are well qualified, just because they happen to be the political friend of some particular individual." I am not speaking for any party, I am pleading for efficiency, and I sincerely hope something can be done to remedy this evil in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the Commissioner from the Philippine Islands [Mr. GUEVARA].

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Chairman, it is with profound regret that I rise now to bid good-by to a man to whom the Filipino people are eternally bound by gratitude. I refer, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE], chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs. In delivering these farewell remarks, I am positive that I express the sentiment of my distinguished colleague, Commissioner Osias, who, I know, cordially indorses every word I am about to utter.

In a short while Mr. HARE's congressional service will be ended. He has voluntarily retired to private life, leaving behind him glorious achievements for himself and for his

It is very pleasant to recall those days of the Sixty-ninth Congress, when he was first elected to represent the second district of South Carolina. Unpretentious, but strong in his convictions, he foresaw that the Philippine question would be solved by the United States sooner or later and wished fervently that when that day came he might still represent his patriotic district in the Congress at Washington. His wishes were to voice the sentiments of his constituents in honoring America's pledge, and he was determined to contribute his share in the task of preventing anyone ever questioning America's honor. Then, as now, when the whole world seemed to be distrustful of pledges made by powerful nations, these predictions of the gentleman from South Carolina were an inspiration to me and presaged a new lease on life for the Filipino people.

Eight years have elapsed since then. With a clear understanding, which was never perverted by passion nor corrupted by theory, he set out to undertake the task of finding a solution which would honor America and do justice to the Filipino people. Such a task necessarily required most of his time. Through study and through information furnished by the Resident Commissioners of the Philippine Islands to the United States, he learned much of the Filipino people, their ideals and their aspirations, but he needed to know them better. He wanted to know more intimately their idiosyncracies, their civilization, and their progress, and this, of course, called for concentrated study. His first step in the furtherance of this determination was to become a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs. These were troubled days. Bills and more bills were introduced in the House to increase the power of the executive branch of the government of the Philippines, and Mr. HARE, jointly with the illustrious gentleman from Texas, my distinguished friend, Mr. Guinn Williams, fought them to the utmost, firmly convinced that such measures were wholly un-American and against the principles upon which the Government of the United States was founded. I do not believe that I disclose any secret when I say now that the late Representative from the sixteenth district of Pennsylvania, Mr. Kiess, who was chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, was equally reluctant in his innermost mind to lay before his committee the bills thus introduced. The untiring efforts of the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WIL-LIAMS] finally were successful, and the Filipinos are deeply grateful to them for the parliamentary failure of those bills.

In the congressional fight in which Mr. HARE and Mr. WILLIAMS were engaged in those days of difficulties certain conditions were developing in the Philippines as the result of the dual authority arising from the very political system established therein. With a chief executive appointed by the President of the United States and a legislature whose membership was elected by the people, in the natural course of human affairs the situation was certain to be a source of conflict and antagonism between these two branches of the Philippine government. The situation thus created was not new in the history of mankind. The colonial history of he said publicly that his self-imposed mission was to become England is full of examples of this nature. It seemed as days went by that the trend of America's national policy was to follow the path of England. This, however, could not succeed, for patriotic Americans and firm believers in American traditions and principles could not tolerate the idea that this Nation should embark on such a political enterprise. Frequently their voices were heard in the forum of both Houses of Congress or in the tribune of public opinion. Their patriotic pleas often filled newspaper columns of the United States in defense of what they considered the right of the Filipino people to handle their own domestic affairs.

I am relating these events, not for the purpose of embittering the memories of the past, but to emphasize the great service Mr. Hare has rendered to his own country as well as to the people of the Philippines. And the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILLIAMS] deserves the same credit and the same gratitude of the Filipinos.

Recent events of transcendent portent brought to the Filipinos the dawn of a new day. The gentleman from South Carolina, chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, and its membership were all men of high qualifications and gifted with the spirit of real Americanism. Every one of them loves America, her traditions and principles, with profound devotion. No one of them believes in the imperial destiny of the United States. They all believe that no man or nation is big enough or good enough to rule another people without its consent. With a membership so constituted it was not difficult to forecast the probable attitude, at least of the Committee on Insular Affairs, as to the destiny of the Philippines.

A few days after the convening of the Seventy-second Congress a bill was introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE] entitled "An act to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes." Extensive hearings were held and very seldom, we can safely affirm, was any question so exhaustively considered by any committee of any parliament of the world as that of the bill introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina. The bill called for an intensive consideration, for in it were involved many conflicting interests, domestic as well as international. Any false step might shatter everything which had been done in the last 34 years, and many interests would suffer tremendous damages, which would disgrace both the United States and the Philippine Islands. All points of view were freely expressed in the hearings, and after a conscientious consideration of all the questions involved, the Committee on Insular Affairs came to the conclusion that it would report the bill with the recommendation that it be passed.

The leadership of this House, moved also by principles of highest statesmanship, supported cordially the measure and passed the bill with an unprecedented majority. Mr. HARE thought that his duty to the United States as well as to the Philippines had not ended with the approval of his bill by the House of Representatives. He wished to be sure that such measure if enacted into law would be of service to the best interests of both countries and peoples. With his own eyes he wanted to see the people and the conditions prevailing in the Philippines. He wished to grasp completely the international situation in that part of the world. While a firm believer in American ideals, he had a real conception of his responsibilities as a representative of the American people concerning the welfare and national dignity of his country and of the Philippines.

He therefore set out on a romantic political adventure and made a journey to the Far East including the Philippines. He visited China and Japan. He saw the ruins of Shanghai and the devastating effects of human misery. When he arrived in the Philippines, the 13,000,000 inhabitants greeted him with adoration. While he was traversing a flower-strewn road, he became aware of sordid voices of condemnation of his patriotic work. This served only to increase his determination to carry out his plan, and informed rather than to inform, and that he was studying the question with a judicial mind as an American citizen interested in the honor of his country and in the welfare of the Philippines. After his investigation was completed, he returned to the United States more than ever convinced that he had done the "right thing at the right time."

At this juncture, permit me to say that I agree with the poet who said:

That man is great, and he alone, Who serves a greatness not his own, For neither praise nor pelf; Content to know and be unknown, Whole in himself.

It is unnecessary for me to say that the Senate of the United States adopted the same attitude and policy taken by this House, and before long the world had witnessed the passage of the Hare bill and finally its enactment into law. The justice and high motives of the bill, which is now a law, are evidenced by the fact that the Filipino people were given the opportunity to say the last word as to their future. America wisely placed upon the shoulders of the Filipino people all the responsibilities of the new situation to be created in the Philippines. America wants to instill in their minds that they must have a government which they deserve. America wants the Filipinos to organize their nation under the guidance of a constitution of their own making. America also wants the Filipinos freely to write into their fundamental charter their own conception of government and liberty. To this end, she gave them all the essentials of a modern democracy.

There are no words in any language that can properly express the gratitude of the Filipino people to the gentleman from South Carolina, and particularly to the members of this body for their generous action in recognizing and proclaiming the right of the Filipino people to determine their own destiny.

While this action now constitutes one of the most glorious chapters in the history of America, I have every reason to hope that the Filipino people will do their part toward the consummation of this humane policy of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, may I assure the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Hare] that he has the warmest place in the heart of every Filipino. The present and future generations of the Filipino people will hail him as the hero of their freedom and liberty. Nothing will make them so happy as to have him in their midst. His kind and constructive help always will be looked upon by the Filipino people as an inspiration to them, and as a guide in their future conduct. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I have watched with considerable interest the progress of the bill paying to the families of Emilio Cortez Rubio and Manuel Gomez $15,000 each. Those were Mexican boys, as will be recalled, who were students in this country and killed in the city of Ardmore, Okla., about a year or a year and a half ago while en route home. That bill passed the Senate the day before yesterday. Press reports indicated that was a most unnecessary tragedy in Oklahoma. I am happy in the thought that our Government has done the magnanimous thing and made reparation as far as possible. I am taking advantage of this opportunity to express the hope that the Mexican Government will now feel as kindly toward American nationals who may happen to be in that country. We are on friendly terms with Mexico and I hope will continue to be. I have lived in the city of El Paso for many years. I lived there at the time the Santa Ysabel massacre occurred, when nine prominent American engineers were brutally assassinated in the Republic of Mexico, and nothing whatever was ever done about it. I could recall many other instances where like crimes have been committed in that country, but I desire to briefly call attention to a case now pending there about which I have some personal knowledge.

In 1924 some Mexicans from Juarez, Mexico, came into of this country. We let it go as poetic license, and I am sure our city of El Paso, went to the offices of the Southern the Members who uttered those optimistic statements did it Pacific Railroad, committed a holdup there during the noon hour, taking several thousand dollars, and killed William H. Meers, a prominent officer of that city. He was brutally murdered. The Mexicans made their escape back into Mexico. The man who committed the crime was Villareal by name. For some two or three years afterward he hung around the city of Juarez, but the Mexican Government refused to grant extradition and allow him to be brought back for trial. Meers had a devoted young son, Jeff Meers, who worshipped his father, and who swore vengeance for that crime. He is a fine young man, of good family, law abiding, and never in trouble before.

On June 18, 1930, while young Jeff Meers was in the city of Juarez he killed a man named Visconte, whom he honestly and sincerely believed to be the man who had assassinated his father. It was a case of mistaken identity. The next day Jeff Meers was taken to the city of Chihuahua and placed in jail, and he is still there. It was a sad case. Meers admitted his mistake and was willing to accept reasonable punishment. His punishment was not assessed but held in abeyance. The next day after the Ardmore trial, which was June 27, 1931, when William Guess was promptly acquitted for the murder of the Mexican boys, the court in the city of Chihuahua met and imposed the death penalty on this fine young man, Jeff Meers. I know him well and know him to be a fine young American citizen. I know his wife and baby, who are now in my city. He has now been in the Chihuahua penitentiary nearly three years, part of the time incommunicado. He deserved punishment, but I claim he has already suffered enough. I understand his sentence has been reduced, but he ought to be released. The Mexican Government immediately retaliated after the Ardmore trial. They ought now to show their spirit of justice and reciprocity.

I have many times asked our State Department to intervene in his behalf. They have made some effort in that direction. I fear, however, that they have not taken the active interest in his behalf that they have shown in the payment of this money to the families of these Mexican boys.

We have heard much during the debate on this bill about the cordial relations that should exist between the two countries. I am in hearty accord with that sentiment. We have shown our friendship and our desire to do the right and just thing. Let them now show their friendship to us. Jeff Meers is a fine man, devoted to his country, as he was to his father. He has more than paid his debt to the Mexican Government. I hope our State Department will now use its great influence in seeing to it that justice is done to an American citizen in Mexico, the same as this Congress has so magnanimously done to Mexican citizens who suffered in our country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The three foregoing sums to be disbursed by the Sergeant at Arms of the House.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I will only take a few minutes, Mr. Chairman. For the last few years the American public has been lulled into a state of indifference by continued and repeated promises that the crisis was over and normal conditions were just around the corner. Many of us of the House have exercised a great deal of restraint in speaking frankly of the existing conditions. I take this opportunity to state that some of us are commencing to doubt whether this continued restraint and silence is an honest policy for us to pursue, or whether it is not our duty to frankly tell the American people of the impending danger.

Considerable poetic license was taken on the floor of the House to-day in talking about the sound financial condition of this country. We let it go as poetic license, and I am sure the Members who uttered those optimistic statements did it with the hope and intention, hoping against hope, that what | they were saying might materialize.

The situation is so serious, Mr. Chairman, that we are on the threshold of our very future existence, and we might as well know it. Not even in a state of war, whether foreign or domestic, was this country confronted with the dangers we are now facing and which may materialize within the next few weeks.

I believe that every Member of Congress should be willing to subordinate his personal and political interest at this time and all join forces to do everything which may be necessary within the next few days and before this Congress adjourns. I believe that the newly appointed Secretary of the Treasury should select his assistants, move into Washington, move into the Treasury office so as to cooperate with the present officials and have the situation well in hand by the time he takes office. I believe that President-elect Roosevelt should put everything else aside, should move to Washington and be on the spot and in constant touch and contact with the situation, and with President Hoover, for the remaining few days of his administration. Things are happening so rapidly that many matters can not be delayed. I say this in view of what has taken place to-day, so that some of our colleagues may be apprised of the actual situation. We, as legislators, have responsibilities, and we can not be lulled into inaction by optimistic statements that are not justified by the facts.

I simply wanted to take this time to express this thought so that every Member may be on the alert and ready to take up legislation in morning, afternoon, and night sessions, if necessary, because the situation calls for action, and immediate action. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Black]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. A short while ago in the general debate the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Horr] suggested that I take two minutes of his time to answer the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer] concerning an article on Tammany Hall, written in one of our leading fiction magazines. The article itself justified the title "Fiction Magazine."

I did not get the two minutes from the gentleman, so I am forced now to intrude on the House.

It was rather a tribute to the selections of the President elect as to Cabinet officers that the only suggestion from the Republican critics that one might take amiss came from the gentleman from Washington to the effect that the lady the President has in mind for the position of Secretary of Labor is known by a name made famous in the war in this country for industrial reform. I refer to Frances Perkins.

I was in the Legislature of New York as far back as 1911. I saw the fight there through the years for decent working conditions for the men and women in industry, for safeguards against industrial accidents, for decent hours, for decent money; and the crusader in all of this fight was Frances Perkins.

Frances Perkins, by her work and the heart and the brain she gave to this noble cause, is entitled to have the name Frances Perkins respected by everybody in this country, particularly those connected with industry. [Applause.]

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLACK. Not just now.

The war for industrial reform was a savage and relentless war on the part of the conservative reactionary interests in this country who were then represented by the Republican Party in the State of New York, excepting our good friend, Major Laguardia, who was not in the legislature. On the side of Frances Perkins, and on the side of industrial reform at all stages in this great war were the members from Tammany Hall in the New York State Legislature. Such men as Alfred E. Smith, ROBERT WAGNER, James J. Walker, and James A. Foley. Talk about "Tammany Take" in this Fiction Magazine, let us speak generally about "Tammany give."

I ask the Members of this House to judge Tammany Hall—and I am not from Tammany Hall—to judge Tammany Hall by the men from Tammany Hall they meet here in this House. I doubt if there is a delegation in this House more respected for their effort and sincerity than the delegation from Tammany Hall in this Congress. As well in Albany were the men of Tammany Hall always in the forefront of the fight for liberal government.

I now say that there is not a group in this country, any place in this country, be it an official group or an unofficial group, that had more to do with the victorious liberal fight that we saw here consummated the other day in the vote on repeal than the Members from Tammany Hall. Day in and day out during the dark days of prohibition, the un-American days of prohibition, the Members of Tammany Hall, when there were only three or four other votes sometimes in their favor, never quit once. They knew their cause was a just cause and they have convinced the American people of it.

I say of Frances Perkins that her name as Secretary of Labor will easily compare favorably with the name of the present Secretary of Labor and his immediate predecessor, Hon. James J. Davis. [Applause.]

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one additional minute in order to answer a question.

Mr. DYER and Mr. MILLARD objected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery allowance for Stanley H. Kunz, fiscal year 1932, $83.33.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Buchanan: On page 3, after line 14, insert:

"JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

"Congressional Directory: For expense in compiling, preparing, and indexing the Congressional Directory for the first session of the Seventy-third Congress, $800, one half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and the other half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

JUDGMENTS

For the payment of final judgments, including costs, rendered against the District of Columbia, as set forth in House Document No. 551, Seventy-second Congress, $77,983.73, together with the further sum to pay the interest at not exceeding 4 per cent per annum on such judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman a question about the rate of 4 per cent on these judgments. Is this affected in any way by the vote here the other day in connection with the interest charge of 4 per cent in one instance and 6 per cent in the other?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; this is matured interest. The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF IMMIGRATION

Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, Bureau of Immigration, Department of Labor, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1933, $450,000, for use only for or in connection with the deportation of aliens.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We come to a point in the bill now where we are appropriating $450,000 to the Department of Labor for deporting aliens, and it was only a few days ago here on the floor when we had up the question of the border patrol. We cut down on the border patrol to such an extent that possibly many of these aliens came in, and now we are appropriating an additional $450,000 to possibly deport these same aliens. Can the gentleman give us any information on that subject?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I can not give the gentleman any information about deporting the same aliens.

Mr. GOSS. Not the same ones necessarily, but the same question is involved here.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This appropriation is necessary if the Department of Labor is to continue to deport aliens who are already here illegally or are indigent, because the law requires it.

Mr. GOSS. In one instance we cut down on the border patrol by this furlough or what not, so we only get about 20 per cent protection up there on the border. We economize and cut down in one instance and now we find it necessary to spend $450,000 additional in a deficiency bill to deport aliens that have come in because of lack of proper border-patrol facilities.

I hope the gentleman will bear this in mind, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, next year when this question of the border patrol comes up.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will bear the gentleman's suggestion in mind, but this appropriation is necessary for the balance of this fiscal year to carry out the regular program of deportation under which we will deport between 24,000 and 25,000 aliens.

I also call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is real economy for the Department of Labor to have the money and be ready to deport these aliens promptly and not have to keep them in detention where they have to feed and take care of them.

Mr. GOSS. I am not objecting to the appropriation. I am inviting attention to the fact that this amount would not be necessary if we properly patrolled the borders.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That may be true.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT

Rent of temporary quarters, public buildings: For an additional amount for rent of temporary quarters, public buildings, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1933, $165,000.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in reference to the language in lines 11 to 16, on page 20, appropriating $165,000 additional for the Treasury Department for temporary quarters for the architect's office, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

About a month or so ago, in one of the bills we appropriated $90,000 for additional quarters and at that time the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] stated that this amount was for additional quarters already secured and that they did not intend to increase the facilities of the architect's office. Now you come along and want $165,000 more and I would like to have an explanation of this.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think the gentleman is laboring under a misapprehension. The $90,000 that the gentleman refers to was exclusively for additional quarters in the District of Columbia. This item of $165,000 is for rent of quarters mainly for postal purposes all over the country where public buildings are being constructed.

Mr. RICH. In the cities where they have demands for these offices, do they use the post office and other public buildings that they now have?

Mr. BUCHANAN. This is used in connection with the construction of Federal buildings, where they have to move out of the old building in order to put up a new building on the same lot. Of course, when they move out they have to rent quarters elsewhere.

Mr. RICH. If they are securing the services of architects in these local communities, why does the architect's office here in Washington require $165,000 additional?

Mr. BUCHANAN. This has nothing to do with the architect. For example, we are putting up a new post office, we will say in Boston. The gentleman will understand that when we are putting up a new building on the same site as the old building, the old one is torn down, and they have to rent temporary quarters.

Mr. RICH. But this is for the Supervising Architect—that is what it says.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is under the direction of the Supervising Architect.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boston, Mass., parcel-post building, etc.: For acquisition of land belonging to the Boston Terminal Co., fronting on Dorchester Avenue, and construction of a building, and for raising the level of Dorchester Avenue to such extent as may be necessary to provide proper grade for loading-platform facilities, etc., under an estimated total cost of $3,700,000, in lieu of $2,700,000 as provided by the act of July 21, 1932 (47 Stat. 718), as modified by the act approved June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412): Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may accept title subject to reservations by the grantors for light and air and the right to use for railroad purposes the space below such plane or planes as may be agreed upon: Provided further, That the limit of cost herein fixed shall not be reduced by the operation of section 320 of the legislative appropriation act, approved June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412).

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Here is an increase of a million dollars for a post office in Boston. Why are we continually putting these sums in the deficiency bills? If they had been judicially superintended in the first place, it would not be necessary. Why are we continually increasing these appropriations for buildings?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is because they were not accurate in the first place. Beginning in 1926, we have passed several lump-sum authorizations for public buildings. At that time the Treasury and Post Office Departments made a survey of the entire country as to where these buildings should be built and estimated the space required and the cost. But it was necessarily an estimate. Now, when the emergency relief act was passed it authorized the Secretary of the Treasury and Postmaster General to select the places named in the survey under an appropriation in that act of $160,000,000. So they selected, among others, this building at Boston. When they selected it they found the figures of space and cost were underestimated, and these are the first accurate figures that Congress has had.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of the claims of British nationals in the following amounts awarded them by the Commission for Adjustment of British Claims in full satisfaction of all their claims for the use of their inventions by the United States under the arrangement or agreement entered into prior to November 12, 1918, and approved by the Secretary of War in accordance with the authority contained in section 3 of the act approved March 2, 1919 (40 Stat. 1273): Thomas Graham and Sir E. H. Tennyson d'Eyncourt, $22,500; Commander A. L. Gwynne, $37,000; Gwynne and Taylor, $22,500; Colonel Henry Newton, $100,000; Robert A. Sturgeon, $17,500; Thornycroft & Co., $50,000; Read Admiral Cecil V. Usborne, $6,000; in all, $255,000.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 26, between lines 3 and 4, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"For continuation of buildings heretofore authorized for the Fitzsimons General Hospital for which plans have already been commenced, $135,000."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. What is the point of order? Mr. BUCHANAN. It is not authorized by law.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. On the contrary it has been authorized by law, and an appropriation heretofore made but withdrawn.

The authorization was in an emergency bill passed last July. The gentleman will find a direct reference to it on page 26 of the War Department appropriation bill. The authorization has heretofore been made and work has already been commenced on the plans, and the money heretofore appropriated.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have not seen the War Department appropriation bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I gave the gentleman a copy of that bill a few moments ago.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it of this year?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes; this year.

Mr. GOSS. It is not germane to this section of the bill. Mr. EATON of Colorado. Oh, yes; this is the place in the bill where it comes.

Mr. GOSS. This is for claims of British nationals, page

Mr. EATON of Colorado. That is the general subject. The subject is the War Department, military activities, and then comes the United States Military Academy, in the regular order in which the different subjects were put into the bill. This subject comes in between the claims of British nationals and the United States Military Academy. A title could be put upon it if you want to do it. The title would be "Barracks and Quarters and Other Utilities."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not germane to this place in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I do not care to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I very seriously tried to get consideration on the floor of the House of this $135,000 that was inadvertently included in an amount of $1,000,000 which was taken over from enterprises that had heretofore been authorized and in which no progress had been made. In this enterprise progress had been made to the extent of $1,200 to $1,500. When the matter was first presented on the floor of the House when the War Department appropriation bill was here, the chairman of the subcommittee said it was too bad, that it was like old dog Tray, it had gotten into bad company. The result was it was included in the million dollars that had been appropriated for a gymnasium and riding hall which were taken away and reappropriated for barracks. I ask your favorable consideration to restore this amount and make the appropriation so that the work may continue.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. In the first place, this project was authorized and then appropriated for in the War Department appropriation act. The War Department appropriation bill at this session unauthorized it, so to speak, because it took the money away. An estimate has never come to us from the Budget or anywhere else for this bill. We can not afford, for the accommodation of one Member or several Members to vary from the rule of the committee. Such a project must come through the Budget to Congress; otherwise we would have no orderly procedure. I ask the House to vote down the amendment. It is not a deficiency item and has no place in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Wood of Indiana: Page 26, after line 3, insert a new paragraph as follows:
"Quartermaster Corps, barracks and quarters: For an addiduartermaster Corps, barracks and quarters: For an additional amount for the construction of a sewage-disposal plant at Fort Slocum, N. Y., including septic tanks, selecting chambers, ejector pumps, and the installation of chlorating apparatus, together with such collecting mains and intercepting sewers as may be necessary, fiscal years 1933 and 1934, $25,000."

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. GOSS. I reserve the point of order in order to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. A bill has come before the Committee on Military Affairs in this Congress as I recall deeding portions of Fort Slocum to the City of New York for a park.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman refers to happens to be in my district. It is not Fort Slocum, but Fort Schuyler.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I make the point of order that there is no authorization for the amount.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, there is authorization for the amount. This item was duly budgeted to the committee. When the hearings were had, there was confusion with reference to whether it was Fort Slocum or Fort Schuyler to which it applied.

As the gentleman from New York has already stated, this applies to Fort Slocum and not to Fort Schuyler. Fort Slocum is the property of the United States, an active fortification. There are about 2,000 men there, and it was the sense of the committee that the item should be allowed until some one suggested it was to apply to Fort Schuyler instead of Fort Slocum.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I submit the gentleman has not stated an authorization for this amount or any place where it may be found.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This is a regular Government fort, belonging to the United States. Some 2,000 people are there, all in service except the families of the men. Certainly, if we have a going institution, maintained by the War Department, we have a right under the rules to take care of the sewage. There can be no question about the point of

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the Members that if we had not been advised, as we thought reliably, that this fort was scheduled for abandonment by the War Department, we would have voted this appropriation, because the sewage is an actual menace to the health of that community. Every other city connected with or close to it has taken care of its sewage, and it is only right that the Government should provide for proper disposal.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They are not going to abandon it, but they are transferring the men from Fort Schuyler to Fort Slocum.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly. We made a mistake in the committee, and I am free to acknowledge it, and the item ought to be allowed.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.
Mr. LaGUARDIA. The city of New York and the bay of New York are under orders now to change their sewage disposal by reason of the sanitary conditions, and this is a part of that adjustment.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. This was commenced by an order from the State board of health, saying that it was in a disgraceful and insanitary condition. There is a beach operated by the Park Commission of Westchester County, where six or seven hundred thousand people bathe every year. I wish to take this opportunity to thank the committee for consenting to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RAMSPECK). The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Wood.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, audited claims, section 4, $28,441.44, together with such additional sum due to increases in rates of exchange as may be necessary to pay claims in the foreign currency as specified in certain of the settlements of the General Accounting Office.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Cochran of Missouri: On page 32 after line

Amendment by Mr. Cochan of Massacra of page 3 and a new section:

"Sec. 5. No claim for increase of compensation under the act of May 12, 1917 (40 Stat. 40, 74); section 6 of the act of July 3, 1918 (40 Stat. 814); section 7 of the act of March 1, 1919 (40 Stat. 1267), or any similar act providing for increased or additional compensation of a state of a state of a state of the Government. sation to certain classes of civilian employees of the Government for the fiscal years 1918 to 1924, inclusive, shall be allowed or considered unless filed in the General Accounting Office before July 1, 1933, and no such claim heretofore settled shall be reviewed or reconsidered by the General Accounting Office pursuant to any application or request received in said office after June 30, 1933."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order, but I have offered the amendment solely for this purpose. The General Accounting Office called our attention to this amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to be permitted at this point to place a statement in the Record showing the amount it is costing the Government to look up these claims that are now being filed, with a view to calling it to the attention of another body to see if they will make a day certain when these claims will be totaled.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I reserve a point of order on the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] that he be allowed to extend his remarks in the Record at this point, as indicated?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the proposed amendment barring claims for increased compensation, the payment of which, during the period July 1, 1917, to June 30, 1924, was authorized by the act of May 12, 1917 (40 Stat. 40, 74); section 6 of the act of July 3, 1918 (40 Stat. 814); and section 7 of the act of March 1, 1919 (40 Stat. 1267), and similar acts, which provided that all civilian employees of the Government of the United States who received a total compensation at a stated rate, to wit: $1,800 per annum, or less, for the fiscal year 1918, and $2,500 per annum, or less, for subsequent fiscal years, 1919 to 1924, inclusive, should receive additional compensation, I submit the following:

It is estimated that 1,500 claims for increase of compensation were received in the General Accounting Office during the year ended January 31, 1933. Of this number it is estimated 500 represented claims for services rendered in the Philippine Islands, usually by Filipinos, and 1,000 represented claims on account of services rendered at posts, camps, or activities of the Army, principally at Camp McClellan and Muscle Shoals. Of the 1,000 claims thus received and settled covering the services performed in the United States it is estimated that less than 5 per cent resulted in allowances. Frequently such allowances as were made were trivial. It is estimated that of the 500 claims received and settled covering services rendered in the Philippine Islands, that not in excess of 40 per cent resulted in allowances, such allowances ranging in amount from more or less trivial sums to sums which might be deemed considerable. In this connection attention is invited to House Document 510, Seventysecond Congress, second session, pages 29 to 32, inclusive, listing claims for increase of compensation allowed and certified for appropriation. Other and similar documents list the prior claims settled and allowed. All allowed claims of this character of necessity must be certified for appropriation.

It is estimated that these claims are now being received in the General Accounting Office at the rate of 100 per month; however, it has been noted that the receipts of this character of claims fluctuate considerably. The receipts at times run along evenly for several months and then, due to certain causes, they suddenly swell. This was particularly true of the situation at Camp McClellan, Ala. For quite a period of time the receipt of claims for services rendered at that camp were very nominal, then suddenly the office became flooded with claims from that camp with the receipt of approximately 300 per month. There is no way of telling if the receipts of this character of claims will be suddenly swelled on account of some other activity where services were performed during the war.

The handling of these claims involves a considerable amount of work and expense. In all claims involving services rendered in the Philippine Islands and in practically all cases covering services rendered at Muscle Shoals the administrative reports must be based on the records stored at those places, necessitating reference of all such cases to those places.

I think it may be safely stated that not exceeding 3 per cent of all the claims received from now on will be such as to warrant an allowance of any amount. In other words of all the claims received it is safe to say that 97 per cent will be disallowed and there is just as much work in connection with the development and disallowance of a claim as there is in connection with a claim which is allowed.

The second amendment follows:

No claim for arrears of pay or allowances growing out of or based on service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, which accrued during the World War from April 6, 1917, to July 2, 1921, except for services in the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, shall be received or considered unless filed in the General Accounting Office on or before December 31, 1933.

I present this draft to bar the filing of a claim for arrears of pay or allowances growing out of or based on services in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, which accrued during the World War from April 6, 1917, to July 2, 1921, that are not filed in the General Accounting Office on or before December 31, 1933. This draft does not include claims for members of the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard. It appears to me that a claim not filed within 12 years should be barred. The General Accounting Office has been receiving thousands of such claims each year, but only a small per cent of them are allowed. However, it requires as much work to handle a disallowed claim as it does a claim wherein something is found due.

There is an inordinate amount of work and expense required in handling this class of claims. The claim must be received and recorded, the records searched to determine whether a similar claim has been previously filed by applicant, or whether as a matter of fact he had been before the office with a claim of any nature theretofore. If prior claim is found relating to the same items, the claimant is advised relative to the action previously taken in connection therewith. If it develops the claim is new, it must then be jacketed, recorded, given appropriate reference number, acknowledged, and transmitted to the preliminary development unit to be examined, the nature of the claim determined, and then a call made upon the proper department for a complete record of the claimant's military service for the purposes of identification and as a basis for examination of his pay records filed in the General Accounting Office. Also, a call must be made upon the United States Veterans' Administration for information relating to allotments and insurance. Upon receipt of the report from the proper department containing a record of the claimant's service, the pay records of the General Accounting Office, showing all payments made to him during the period of his services, must be examined and a transcript made of each and every payment so received. After all this necessary preliminary work has been accomplished, the case is transmitted to the claims division for examination and settlement. If there is anything found due, the settlement is prepared in the claims division and transmitted to the bookkeeping division of the General Accounting Office, where a certificate is written and transmitted to the bookkeeping division of the Treasury Department for payment. If the claim is disallowed, the settlement is written up accordingly, signed, and transmitted to the claimant.

The Congress heretofore having placed a limitation upon Civil War and Spanish-American War claims, it would appear to be in line with economy to now bar certain claims arising out of the World War.

PROCEDURE FOLLOWED IN THE DEVELOPMENT AND SETTLEMENT OF A SERVICE CLAIM

The following is a hypothetical case:

A soldier who served during the period of the World War, April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, claims that he failed to receive the $60 war-service bonus, act of February 24, 1919 (40 Stat. 1151); that he was sentenced to forfeitures of pay by military courts-martial which were not justified; that in addition excess deductions over and above the amounts of the forfeitures were made from his pay, and that an allotment which he authorized to be paid from his pay to an allottee of his own designation was not received by said allottee.

The claim is received in the records division of the General Accounting Office, where the records are searched to determine whether a similar claim had been previously filed by applicant or whether, as a matter of fact, he had been before this office with a claim of any nature theretofore. If prior claim is found relating to the same items, the claimant is advised by the records division relative to the action previously taken in connection therewith. If it appears from the tenor of his present claim that he is cognizant of the fact that the matter has been previously acted upon and is dissatisfied with such action, the papers are transmitted to the Comptroller General for review. If, however, it is found that the claim is new, it is jacketed, recorded (carded), given an appropriate reference number, acknowledged, and transmitted to the preliminary development unit of the records division, where it is examined, the nature of the claim determined, and the following calls made:

War Department: (1) For a complete record of the soldier's military service for purposes of identification and as a basis for the examination of his pay records filed in the General Accounting Office; (2) for a report relative to any allotment of his pay which he may have made while in the military service, and claims made, and/or paid, including $60 bonus payments.

United States Veterans' Administration: (1) For information relative to any Government war-risk insurance which he may have carried during his service, and (2) for any war-risk allotment of pay which he may have made.

If replies are not received within a specified time, correspondence is had with the various offices named until satisfactory information has been received.

Upon receipt of the report from the War Department containing a record of the claimant's military service, the pay records of the General Accounting Office, showing all payments made to the claimant during the period of his service are examined, and a transcript made of each and every payment received by him.

When all necessary preliminary information has been received, the case is transmitted to the miscellaneous settling section, claims division, where the report from the War Department containing the soldier's military history is examined to determine whether or not his service is such as entitles him to the $60 war-service gratuity and whether the soldier was, in fact, fined by military courts-martial. The transcript of pay is checked to determine what deductions, if any, were made from pay for an allotment, as claimed. The report of the United States Veterans' Administration is examined to determine if the payments made were in accordance with the deductions from pay; likewise the report of the War Department relative to any allotments which may have been paid through that agency. If it appears that the soldier's service was such as would entitle him to the war-service gratuity, and it appears that no previous payment thereof has been made, his account is credited with this item. If it appears that the court-martial fines which may have been assessed against him were legally imposed and properly deducted from his pay, no credit is allowed therefor, but if it appears that the court-martial fines were improperly deducted from his pay, his account is credited with the amounts so improperly deducted. If it appears that the allotment deductions from pay are not in accordance with the payments as made, resulting in a balance due the soldier, this item is credited to his account. If, after complete examination of all items of the claim, it is determined that an amount is due, a statement of settlement is prepared showing the amount due on the allowable items, and the other items are disallowed, giving the reasons therefor. If none of the claimed items are found to be allowable, a certificate of settlement, termed a disallowance certificate, is prepared showing in full the reasons why payment can not be made.

After this action by the miscellaneous settling section is taken, the claim is forwarded to the settlements review unit where the proposed settlement, and the evidence on which it is based, is reviewed. If the proposed settlement is approved and involves an allowance, it is transmitted to the bookkeeping division of this office, where a certificate is written and transmitted to the bookkeeping division of the Treasury for payment. If the claim is wholly disallowed, the settlement (disallowance certificate) is signed and transmitted to claimant.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RAMSPECK). The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee just one question: Do the increases that have been made in the Boston post office of $1,000,000, the St. Louis post office of $1,075,000, the St. Paul post office $650,000 for additional post-office building, include facilities for restaurants and cafeterias?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It includes the complete building.

Mr. RICH. Does that include a recommendation, the same as was made last year, for $50,000 each for these cafeterias?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman understands there is nothing in this bill that controls or governs that in any way. We have just made the authorization for the construction of the buildings on the plans that they have adopted. They can not put cafeteria equipment in without authority to do so.

Mr. RICH. They have the rooms and everything, but the money is not authorized?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They may not have the rooms. I do not know about the plans of all these buildings.

Mr. RICH. Do they authorize funds for that particular purpose in those buildings?

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is nothing for equipment in this bill. This is for construction.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAMSPECK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 14769, the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1933, directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Buchanan, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 2601. An act for the relief of William Mathew Squires;

H. R. 5367. An act for the relief of Jerry V. Crane;

H. R. 14602. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Alabama to construct a bridge across Elk River between Lauderdale and Limestone Counties, Ala.," approved February 16, 1928.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 5625. An act authorizing an appropriation to provide for the completion of the George Rogers Clark Memorial at Vincennes, Ind.

STATE OF IDAHO

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, House Joint Resolution 138, for the relief of the State of Idaho, and for other purposes, and disagree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were disagreed to.

FARM-MORTGAGE RELIEF

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flood] be permitted to extend his own remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I regret that it now seems this session will end without the passage of legislation relieving the farm-mortgage situation. In conjunction with a number of the Members of the House, I have given considerable thought to this question. This is a matter of vital importance not only to the farmers but to the Nation as a whole.

More than half of the farms of the country are mortgaged and more than half the owners of these farms are unable to pay the interest on their loans. Farms are being sold by forced sales on a market with little or no demand. As a result, both the mortgagor and the mortgagee are losing, and the price of land is being rapidly depressed to unheard of levels. The farmers are losing their farms to purchasers who do not want them and have no profitable use to make of them, but who are forced to buy to protect their loans.

The situation has become so acute in some of the Western States that farmers are banding themselves together in open defiance of the law to prevent the sale of their lands and property, and so pitiful is their situation that their action is rather praised than criticized by the press and people of the country. Surely no better evidence should be needed to convince Congress of the urgent need of immediate relief.

Not only are the owners of these farms suffering acutely but the very foundation of our most conservative investment is crumbling. I refer to the billions of dollars invested by insurance companies and trust funds in mortgages and mortgage bonds. Nothing could be more calamitous to the Nation than the failure of the great insurance companies and the distress and loss of confidence which would follow in the wake of such failure.

The last Congress made an appropriation which enabled the Federal land banks to extend payments to their members. When the present Congress convened, we were besieged with requests to give similar help to the joint-stock land banks. It was apparent that such help could not in justice be given to privately owned and controlled institutions. The help we should give to relieve the farm-mortgage situation should apply to all classes of farm mortgages, whether the mortgagee be a Federal land bank, a joint-stock land bank, a private banking institution, or an individual. Furthermore, this help should be given directly to the mortgager and not the mortgagee.

Congress should make a substantial appropriation designating some existing agency and authorizing it to refinance farm mortgages at a low rate of interest on a long-term loan. The act should either provide for a guaranty of the bonds to be issued by the agency or for an appropriation sufficient to guarantee them, thus permitting the bonds to be sold at a low rate of interest which could be passed on to the borrower. The farmer should be given the benefit of any reduction in the mortgage at the time that it is taken over from the original mortgagee. For instance, suppose the mortgage was originally for $10,000, that the representative of the Government agency believed the property was at the time of his inspection security for only $7,500, and that the mortgagee was willing to let the Government agency take it over at that amount, the farmer would be given the benefit of the difference, and would execute his mortgage to the agency established by the Government for only $7,500 and pay on this loan interest at a rate much lower than he is now required to pay, the loan to be made for a sufficient length of time with amortization payments in small amounts each year.

DIRECT VOTE ON PROHIBITION REPEAL

The Constitution of the United States provides two methods, and only two, by which a resolution passed by Congress and submitted to the States for ratification may be ratified, to-wit, by the legislatures or conventions of the several States.

Undoubtedly there is a desire on the part of the American people to cast a direct vote on the resolution submitting the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the several States. There is a method by which this direct vote could be given to the people and yet be constitutional.

Congress has provided in its resolution submitting the eighteenth amendment to the States that it shall be passed upon by conventions in those States. There is a mooted question as to whether Congress may further provide for calling such conventions and fixing the time, place, and mode of electing the delegates or whether this authority should be exercised by the legislatures of the several States.

this question, because the plan I have to suggest would apply to either mode of procedure.

The plan I have in mind is either by an act of Congress or an act of the legislature to provide for nominating conventions to be held in some designated political units of the State. The act might provide that political units holding nominating conventions should be the congressional districts of the State, or it might adopt smaller units-senatorial districts or districts which elect the members to the lower branch of the State legislature.

Whatever unit is adopted as a nominating unit would be directed to elect in its convention or mass meeting 2 nominees, 1 of whom would be for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and 1 of whom would be opposed to the repeal of that amendment. The act would further provide that the names of these nominees be certified by the secretary of the nominating convention or mass meeting to the proper State election official and that such officials should direct the election officials of the State to prepare a ballot on which all of the names of the nominees favoring repeal of the eighteenth amendment be placed under a caption for repeal of that amendment and all the nominees opposed to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment be placed under a caption against repeal of that amendment. It will be seen that upon the ticket would then appear the names of 2 blocks of nominees of equal number, 1 block opposed to repeal and 1

An election would be provided for by the same act of Congress or the legislature, providing that all qualified voters would be permitted to vote, and further providing that said voters would, by either scratching the caption or the names of a sufficient number of nominees, elect delegates to a State convention. It is perfectly apparent that either one or the other set of nominees would be elected; and although there would be no legal manner by which these delegates could be compelled to vote either for or against repeal, nevertheless the question would be decided by the people at the election of the delegates and the convention when held would be a mere matter of formality, comparable to counting votes of the Electoral College for President.

Still another method of permitting the people to vote directly on repeal of the eighteenth amendment would be to change the foregoing plan as follows: Provide that after the nominations had been made by nominating conventions, as outlined above, the ticket in the political unit of the State selected should only carry the names of the nominees from that unit who would be elected, of course, by the qualified voters of that political unit.

This method would give a greater degree of discretion to the different political units of the State, and delegates to a convention would be elected, all of whom would not hold the same views on repeal of the eighteenth amendment. It may be assumed that under this plan the rural districts would possibly elect delegates opposed to repeal and city delegates who would be for repeal; but the people would still be expressing themselves by popular vote rather than be represented by delegates elected in mass meetings, who, in many instances, would not be truly representative of the people in that political unit. The support of the first or second plan outlined above would depend somewhat upon the view of whether, in passing upon a constitutional amendment, the vote should be so taken as to express the will of the State as a whole or to express the will of the political subdivisions of the State. Much might be said in support of both of these views, but suffice it to say that either method would insure the people the right to express themselves by direct ballot.

ARMS EMBARGO

A joint house resolution has been reported from the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House authorizing the President, acting in conjunction with such other arms-producing countries as he may think necessary, to declare an embargo on arms and munitions of war to any American country engaged in war or preparing for war. This is House Joint

It is not necessary, however, to enter into a discussion of | Resolution 580, and will, if adopted by Congress, go a long way in both stopping and preventing wars in the Central and South American countries. It is an extension of the authority the President now has to declare an embargo in case of internal strife in such countries.

The major arms-producing nations of the world are Great Britain, France, Sweden, Japan, and the United States. There are in all about 11 countries which produce arms. Nations at war, or preparing for war, must depend upon one or more of these producing nations to furnish the necessary arms. If this supply could be cut off in such an emergency, the war would of necessity stop, and, for that matter, never begin. The resolution should immediately be adopted and should be extended as soon as practicable to include all nations at war or preparing for war. It is one of the most constructive pieces of legislation ever suggested to insure peace in the Western Hemisphere.

THOMAS JEFFERSON AND PUBLIC EDUCATION

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a statement made by the superintendent of schools of my

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, what is the length of this statement?

Mr. MILLIGAN. Only a couple of short pages.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, the principles of public education advocated by Thomas Jefferson have, in my opinion, been the salvation of our Nation. Our public-school system has been within the reach of the humblest citizen.

Under permission of February 25, 1933, to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to incorporate an article on this subject entitled "Thomas Jefferson and Public Education," written by the Hon. Charles A. Lee, State superintendent of schools for the State of Missouri.

The article is as follows:

THOMAS JEFFERSON AND PUBLIC EDUCATION

Thomas Jefferson was perhaps our first American statesman to ake "education by the State" a fundamental doctrine of our make "education by the State" a fundamental doctrine of our political belief. The old system of education was founded upon the premise that "education was primarily for the benefit of the individual." Accepting that doctrine we could not term individual." Accepting that doctrine, we could not tax everybody to secure funds to educate the masses. The new conception of education, which was proclaimed by Jefferson, is that all the people will tax themselves for the purpose of securing funds to educate all the children in order that the welfare of all may be preserved and perpetuated. This conception really means that the leaders of a democratic government should always consider first the problem of providing adequate educational facilities for all its

the problem of providing adequate educational facilities for all its citizens because the general welfare and perpetuity of the Nation depends upon the education of all its citizens.

With Jefferson liberty was a passion. It was the fundamental thought of his life. In all his writing and planning, "liberty for all "was his big objective. He advocated and worked for a system of education for all the children so that liberty might be gained, safeguarded, and preserved. Dealing with this thought in his autobiography we find the following sentence, "And the people, by the bill for a general education, would be qualified to understand their rights, to maintain them, and to exercise with intelligence their parts in self-government." And in a letter to Mr. Wythe, dated August 13, 1786, he wrote: "I think by far the most important bill in our whole code is that for the diffusion of knowlportant of in our whole code is that for the diffusion of knowledge among the people. No other sure foundation can be devised for the preservation of freedom and happiness." Jefferson, in proclaiming the new conception of public education, was indeed the builder of a state on a sure and lasting foundation.

Jefferson's program of education included: First, a system of elementary schools all over the State within reach of all the chilelementary schools an over the State within reach of all the cinderen. Such schools were to be free and were to provide competent instruction in reading, writing, common arithmetic, and general geography. Second, a college within a day's ride of each home where would be taught ancient and modern languages, higher arithmetic, geography, and history. These institutions were to be maintained at public expense and students from among the near who should enthess of judgment and correct disposithe poor, who showed aptness of judgment and correct disposi-tion, were to be selected. Third, a university in which should be taught all the sciences in their higher degree. It was not until toward the end of his life that he saw the realization of the third part of his program.

If the maintenance and perpetuity of our Nation depend upon an educated electorate as taught by Jefferson, why should we not, during this critical period, do everything possible to see that public education is carried on in an efficient manner? Let us again emphasize the fact that the future of our Nation depends upon the education of all its citizens. Yes, it will cost money to provide adequate educational facilities for all the children; but, in the words of Jefferson, "the tax which will be paid for this purpose is not more than the thousandth part of what will be paid if we leave the people in ignorance."

In view of the fact that the new conception of public education, which makes it the duty of the State to provide adequate educational facilities for all its youth, was first proclaimed by Jefferson, may I suggest that each school district in this State, by appropriate exercises, honor this great statesman on the anniversary of his birth, Thursday, April 13, next. again emphasize the fact that the future of our Nation depends |

GRAZING ON THE FOREST RESERVES

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of grazing fees in the national forests.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement made by myself before the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture, January 27 and February 1, 1933:

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I thank you very much for the courtesy of letting me come before you this morning. My congressional district is the western half of Colorado, 24 large counties. I have lived in that district nearly 52 years. We have 14 national forests in Colorado, containing over 13,000,000 acres of public land, and about 10,000,000 acres of those forest reserves are in my congressional district, and there are also about 6,000,000 acres of public domain outside of the forest reserves in my district.

6,000,000 acres of public domain outside of the forest reserves in my district.

I lived there many years before there were any forest reserves, and I have been an honorary member of some of our stockmen's associations for many years.

I have not come here to make any complaints against the Forest Service. As a matter of fact, I have been trying very hard to put several hundred thousands of acres of that public domain in my district into the forest reserve, for the purpose of systematizing, regulating, allotting, and apportioning the use of the public domain.

We have had many sheep and cattle wars and conflicts in former years in that country and a great deal of overgrazing.

On the public domain, outside of the forest reserve, there is absolutely no supervision, control, or regulation whatever. There is no charge; the grazing is free, and anybody who can get it and the dog go out with them.

Consequently we have many migratory, roving, nomadic herds of sheep on those public lands. The owners of them usually hire a Basque, or a Mexican, or a Greek, to herd the sheep, and he and the dog go out with them.

They pay practically no attention to the rights of other people. They destroy the range for local residents, tramp out our side-hill roads, pay little or no taxes, and are a nuisance to the country. We want some systematized regulation of the use of those public lands, and for that reason I have been trying to have parts of it put into the forest reserve.

The stockmen are perfectly willing to pay a reasonable fee for a definite tract of land and for protection in its use if they know definitely that they can have a renewal of the right from year to year. It stabilizes the industry, which is not at all stabilized on the open public domain.

So the Forest Service is doing a great deal of good in that way and in many other ways. But I think that allotment and control of the range is the greatest item of benefits.

But, gentlemen, the conditions of the stock business now are entirely different from what they have ever been before at any time. It is absurd to talk about a 10-year program when we are going through times like this. It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us.

When sheep were worth $15 or $18 a head, and now they are that confronts us.

When sheep were worth $15 or $18 a head, and now they are down as low as a dollar or two a head, it is absolutely impossible for stockmen to pay much for their feed.

This is not a criticism of these officials from the Forest Service; it is simply a question as to whether or not we are going to permit these stockmen to continue in business.

Our cattlemen and sheepmen are nearly all broke, and the banks who have tried to finance them are broke. There are several counties in my district which have no banks left.

The stockmen are in a desperate condition, and they can not are the stockmen are in a desperate condition, and they can not pay the fees they paid during good times.

Secretary Hyde says it is only a trifling amount, merely an insignificant item. That is almost insulting to our people. These fees are not a trifling sum to the stockmen. It is a part of their capital investment at this time and they are going broke all over the West.

There is approximately a million dollars involved. If it were paid they say practically one-third of it would go back to the States, part of it for roads and part of it for schools, and that those counties seriously need those fees for our schools. Well, permit me to say those officials need not shed any crocodile tears over our schools or roads.

I represent the roads and schools of those 24 counties of west-ern Colorado the same as I represent the cattlemen and sheepmen. We are not only willing but very anxious to take a cut on those fees and save the stock industry of our State. That is practically what it amounts to.

It affects you Members of the House from back in the Central States. You buy these feeders from us and you do not want us put out of business. We are making an appeal to you not only put out of business. We are making an appeal to you not only for fairness but for our existence.

Let me take up the arguments that have been repeatedly made by Secretary Hyde. These are the regular stock arguments that are made every time this question of grazing fees comes up.

They have usually about seven stock arguments each time they raise the fees and the same number they use against any reduction of fees. I will take them up in their regular order as they appear in Secretary Hyde's letter of December 16, 1932, to Senator ROBERT D. CAREY. The leader, the main objection No. 1, is—

"The fees charged for national forest range are materially below the prices paid by stockmen for private land comparable to forest range."

The absurdity of that is that there absolutely is no "private below the prices paid by stockmen for private land comparable to forest range."

The absurdity of that is that there absolutely is no "private land comparable to forest range." in our country for our millions of sheep and cattle to graze on in the summer time. There is not enough privately owned land in Colorado available for the grazing of cattle and sheep in the summer time to take care of 5 per cent of the stock that graze in our State every summer. In fact, practically speaking, we do not have privately owned lands in Colorado for range stock to graze on during the summer time. Private lands that have an irrigation water right are used for farming purposes, and if they have no water right they would not be worth much for pasturage purposes.

But let me tell you the difference. Supposing we admit for the sake of the argument that there was some possibility of having privately owned, fenced, and watered grazing land. If we had any lands of that kind, they would be worth fully three times as much as the forest reserve is, and I will tell you why.

The forest reserves are mostly in the higher altitudes, in rough, wide-open, broken, mountainous, and usually timbered or brushy country. Much of it is also above timber line—that means over 2 miles high.

country. Mu 2 miles high.

First. By actual experiment the number of calves produced by cows within the inclosures is 25 per cent more than on the forest reserves. No matter how many bulls are furnished there are always a large per cent of the cows that are barren among cattle grazed in forest reserves. That loss of calf crop is a very large and serious loss.

Second. The predatory wild animals in our country destroy an enormous number of calves, sheep, and many grown cattle every year. The loss from predatory wild animals is always enormous in the forest reserves; that does not occur in pastures.

The national forests are the natural breeding grounds of wild animals. The mountain lions, the gray wolves, the coyotes, the bear, and the wildcats, called "bobcats," all have their breeding grounds in the forest reserve of our country. They multiply and thrive upon the cattle and sheep unmolested. They are not killed off or much interferred with.

In the report Secretary Hyde made to this committee on March 29, 1930, he stated that the losses to stockmen by predatory wild animals on the forest reserve amounted to from twenty to thirty million dollars a year. You will find that report in the hearings before this Committee on Agriculture of April 29 and 30 and May 1, 1930, on H. R. 9599.

before this Committee on Agriculture of April 29 and 30 and May 1, 1930, on H. R. 9599.

Mr. ADKINS. What does that bill provide for?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It was a bill by Congressman Leavitr asking for an appropriation or authorization for the extermination of these predatory wild animals, and your committee refused to favor the bill.

When the stock are in an inclosure, or in a pasture, these wild animals do not go in there. There is comparatively little loss of this kind on the privately owned lands.

Third. In many of the forest reserves there is an enormous amount of poison weed and the loss of stock from that cause is simply appalling. While that same loss occurs out on the public domain to a certain extent, there is very little loss of that kind in private pastures.

Fourth. There is always a large number of stock lost somehow every year on the forest reserve. They are out where there is no-body to protect them. Some are stolen, some killed for meat, some die for lack of any attention that would be saved in an inclosure. They just are not found in the fall round-up. Practically speaking, none of those losses occurs in pastures or on inclosed privately owned land.

I am referring to these four different kinds of losses to show you the differences between turning cattle and sheep out on the wild mountainous forest reserves and turning them into a privately owned and fenced pasture.

Practically all of those losses do not occur when the stock are in an inclosure.

The Secretary's second objection to any reduction of fees for this year is—

"Compliance with the request for a 50 per cent reduction would deprive the Treasury of approximately $1,000,000."
Well, what of it? Congress is "depriving" the Federal Treasury of a great many billions of dollars for relief operations of a thousand different kinds, and there is mighty little of it that ever comes to the stockmen of the West. Theoretically, we can get some; but practically very few are getting any. It goes to the big banks and big railroads and big insurance companies and other big instructions, while the little fellows are being foreclosed on and ruined. on and ruined.

on and ruined.

I feel that Uncle Sam can well afford to forego collecting this million dollars during these tragically desperate times and thereby preserve from ruination this great livestock industry throughout that country and thereby benefit not only the stockmen but every human being in the United States.

The Secretary's third objection is—

"A reduction in national-forest receipts means a reduction in the amount that goes to the counties for road and school purposes."

My answer is the schools and roads would both be greatly benefited by the adoption of my bill and the reduction of these fees. In those counties that would get the most of those fees the growing of cattle and sheep is their principal industry. At this time that industry is threatened with disaster.

Local school taxes assessed against livestock produce a revenue for school purposes far in excess of that derived from forest fees, and anything that benefits the livestock industry would greatly benefit our schools. There are about 14,000,000 acres of forest reserve in Colorado and about eight or ten million acres outside the forest reserve, and I represent the most of it, and I speak for those people.

orest reserve, and I represent the most of it, and I speak for those people.

The Secretary's fourth objection is—
"The department has endeavored to establish a stable grazing fee over a 10-year period which would not be subject to fluctuations due to economic changes."

There is nothing that is not subject to "fluctuation" during the days that we are going through now. How can he or anybody fix a hard and fast rule for 10 years that covers this appalling period of desperate destitution and utter financial ruin everywhere? Whether the Secretary realizes these conditions or not period of desperate destitution and utter financial ruin every-where? Whether the Secretary realizes these conditions or not, Congress should and does every day; and we have got to legislate for the welfare of these conditions as they are now and not try to enforce any stabilized rule that was adopted before the panic and say that we shall hew to that line and demand our pound of flesh and crush those bankrunt stockmen to get these fees and say that we shall hew to that line and demand our pound of flesh and crush those bankrupt stockmen to get these fees.

The Secretary's fifth objection is—

"It is granted that livestock producers, as all others, are in a distressed financial condition, but the department can not assume the responsibility of financial relief."

In other words, the Department of Agriculture did not cause this "distressed financial condition," therefore the Secretary will not grant any relief. I submit that is a "fine" argument for a Cabinet official to make to 26,000 stockmen—permittees—and their families and creditors. families and creditors.

He says further:

"That is a province of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other financial institutions set up by the Federal Government."

That is a typical sample of bureaucratic passing the buck.
I have not the record here, but I would bet something that there is not one out of a hundred of these stockmen that ever had or ever can get any relief from that Reconstruction Finance Corporation for this year's grazing fees.
The Secretary's sixth objection is—"The relief requested, if granted, would benefit only a small percentage of the producers affected."
The forest-reserve stockmen of the West are from a thousand to fifteen hundred miles from the markets.
The freight rates are about the highest of any place on God's green earth.

green earth.

When we ship to Chicago, or even to Kansas City or Omaha, we pay a freight rate that in many cases practically takes not only all the profits but the stock itself and leaves the owner nothing.

the profits but the stock itself and leaves the owner nothing. But because relief can not be given to all stockmen is no reason why these people should have none.

The great mass of stockmen throughout the United States are near the markets and know nothing about the ruinous handicap of freight rates and losses in long shipping.

The main range of the Rocky Mountains, the backbone of this continent, runs north and south through the center of Colorado. The western half of my State slopes to the Pacific Ocean and the eastern half slopes to the Atlantic. I represent 20 counties on the Pacific slope and 4 counties on the Atlantic slope, about one-half of the State. We have only one railroad running through Colorado east and west, and the stockmen must patronize that road that has an absolute monopoly, and I will not go into any details but will say that you gentlemen whose constituents live near a market and have competitive railroad facilities do not realize what a and have competitive railroad facilities do not realize what a blessing you have.

THE FOREST-RESERVE SITUATION IN CONGRESS

I would like to digress a moment to call the attention of the committee to a situation that confronts us western Members of Congress, who represent the 12 Western States, that contain practically all of the remaining public domain and the forest reserves. On the 1st day of last July there were 173,318,246 acres of public domain remaining throughout the entire United States, and on the same date there were 140,016,409 acres in the 148 national forest reserves throughout the United States. When I came to Congress in March, 1909, Mr. Hawler, of Oregon, and Mr. Howell, of Utah, were members of this Committee on Agriculture, and they were ere members of this Committee on Agriculture, and they were the only Members from the West upon the committee. Mr. Howell remained on the committee for one or two terms, when he was retired to private life. Mr. Hawley remained on the committee until about 1917, when he went onto the Ways and Means Committee. And from that day to this, for the past 15 years, I do not recall that any State in which there is a forest reserve, throughout the entire West, has ever had on this great committee of 21 members (the third most important committee in the House) any Member whatever in either party from any one of those States. During all of these years about one-third of the entire membership of the Senate Committee on Agriculture have been Senators from those Western States. The members of this Agricultural Committee of the House, during all of the past 24 years, have been high-class men and it is a wonderful committee.

But, with all due respect, I trust you will all realize that it is exceedingly difficult to explain as intricate a matter as the forest reserves and the use of them by the stockmen presents to men who have no personal knowledge and whose constituents have no direct interest in these forest reserves. There are a hundred angles to the matter of the use of the forest reserves that nobody who does not live in that country and have personal knowledge of the conditions and the people can ever fully appreciate. Not only on account of the forest reserves, but on account of the agricultural interests and problems that are peculiar to the arid West and to the conditions involved in irrigating our lands, the people of the West can never understand why (and they have always resented the fact) that they have no individual representation on this committee.

I certainly do hope that when the committees of the Seventy-third Congress are organized, that each party may have at least one man upon this committee from some one of those 12 great Western States.

The Secretary's seventh and last objection is—

"The Payment of grazing fees to the Federal Government should the only Members from the West upon the committee. Mr. Howell

The Secretary's seventh and last objection is—
"The payment of grazing fees to the Federal Government should be considered in the same light as the payment of similar charges to private individuals."

Even if we put it on that basis, the stockmen are entitled to and have got to have a moratorium on these grazing fees, but much further and more favorable consideration than that if that industry is to survive and if the American people are to continue to eat beef and mutton at a reasonable figure.

If the universal bankruptcy bill becomes a law, I fear nearly all beef and mutton at a reasonable figure.

If the universal bankruptcy bill becomes a law, I fear nearly all the surviving cattle and sheep men will have to avail themselves of its provisions. But all we are asking for is that we be given merely what the Secretary calls this "trifling amount of relief."

Instead of utterly ignoring existing conditions and compelling these stockmen to pay the high rates that are the culmination of all these 25 per cent annual increases during the several years of good times and high prices, beginning over a period which began the year before the slump came, I appeal to the common sense and honest judgment of you gentlemen on this committee that that position of the Secretary of Agriculture is not only utterly unfair and unjust but it is an unwarranted disregard of the imperative necessities of those stockmen.

The Secretary also says, "While it is expected that the users of national forest range will meet their obligations." What right has he to expect those people to comply with an unconscionable or ruinous obligation that was imposed upon them several years ago during flush times? Congress should not tolerate that kind of an attitude. Uncle Sam is not dealing that way with a lot of other much less deserving people.

He goes on to say, "Assurance has been given that no deserving applicant will be refused a permit next year because of his inability to pay the amount due." Those stockmen can not pay taxes, feed bills, and borrow money to keep going on that kind of visionary, mythical, and hypothetical promises. The range stock business of the West can not be stabilized on "assurance" of sympathetic consideration. That attitude is no foundation for the stock business. My impression is that the present and past letters and objections of the Secretary are not at all encouraging of favorable consideration.

If he really contemplates "extension of credits," this would be of favorable consideration.

If he really contemplates "extension of credits," this would be a good time to do so.

The concluding sentence of the Secretary's letter of December 16, from which I have been quoting, is—

"A full consideration of these and other facts, which I shall be glad to present on request, should enable Congress to indicate its desires."

He invites Congress to indicate its desires. In pursuance of that statement I am very earnestly asking you gentlemen of the Agricultural Committee to indicate your judgment as to whether or not the stockmen of the West are entitled to this relief; and if so, I appeal to you to so indicate to Secretary Hyde.

That is the reason I introduced this House Resolution No. 305 on December 5, the opening day of this session of Congress, and which reads as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is requested to fix the fees to be charged during the year 1933 for the grazing of cattle and sheep on land within the boundaries of national forests at not more than 50 per cent of the fees charged during the year 1921." year 1931."

One of the basic and most serious features about this entire One of the basic and most serious features about this entire matter is that the present scale of charges by the Government for grazing on the national forests was based on the highest price levels ever known long before the commencement of this depression, and it was expressly stated at that time that those price levels were fixed "under conditions now existing." That was in 1927. In his decision and order of January 25, 1927, for enforcement of said scale of charges, the Secretary of Agriculture did give assurance that these charges would be revised for the 10-year period beginning in 1935, "should there be a material change in conditions existing now which affect the elements entering into an equitable determination of fair compensation for grazing on retional forests."

national forests."

The Secretary has recognized the very great change that already has come about by granting a temporary reduction for the year 1932, and there is no reason or occasion for waiting until 1935 to bring into effect "the method proposed by Mr. Casement of relating grazing fees to the current market value of livestock," for the reason that it is apparent to all that revolutionary change for the reason that it is apparent to all that revolutionary change is already upon us.

In view of that situation, and for those reasons, the stockmen now have a perfect right and are thoroughly justified and warranted in appealing to the Secretary of Agriculture; and if he refuses to recognize their rights, they are eminently justified in appealing to Congress to consider the present situation in connection with the terms of the decision of 1927, and to have inaugurated such steps as may be needed to permit within this year the announcement of a new scale of grazing fees in accordance with conditions as they are and with the original policy of the Government as announced in 1905.

Of course, all of we Members of Congress are thoroughly, and I might say almost painfully, cognizant of the fact that all of these Washington bureaus, including the Forest Service, grew like a mushroom during the heyday of flush times, and now it is looked upon here in Washington as almost cold-blooded murder to try to in any way reduce the personnel, the salaries, the activities, or the appropriations in any way for those bureaus as they were flourishing in their heyday of prosperity prior to the slump in October, 1929. Notwithstanding this very serious condition, the Federal Government itself is dealing with the stockmen of the West in this matter, and those stockmen are on the verge of ruination, and we are appealing for their very existence; and the continuance of that industry, which has been built up by 50 years of hard work, is of vital importance to the entire West, and of very great importance to our entire country.

And we feel that there is no comparison whatever between the grazing upon the open mountainous forest reserves and on private land. We gave the reasons to the committee very fully the grazing upon the open mountainous forest reserves and on private land. We gave the reasons to the committee very fully the other day. Now, so far as trying to enforce a yardstick set up in 1927 for a period of 10 years, in view of economic changing conditions, such as we have at the present time, why, that is utterly beyond reason. There is not a business in the United States but what has had to take that condition into consideration at the present time, and to make very great reductions

Mr. Adrins. But do you not think it is a proper yardstick, or one could be established, when we learn from these gentlemen that there are a lot of people who are ready to take this forest grazing over at the proposed fees?

Mr. Taylor. Let me tell you about that: The people who would take the place and supplant the local taxpaying, old residents who have built up that country, about 90 per cent of them would come from outside of the State or from some other place. They would not be the permanent home citizens who pay the taxes and maintain our schools. The fee that we get from this source for our school system is of small concern compared with the welfare of the stock industry. It would be the ruination of our substantial resident taxpayers, voting citizens of the State. That would be the effect of supplanting these people by competitive bidding. We had at one time about 15,000 sheep in my district that came from Oregon. We emphatically resent being driven out of the country we have settled and built up because of the present business conditions under which these people are unable to pay their taxes and are unable to meet these high good-time grazing fees. The stockmen absolutely can not pay the high fees now that they could and did pay during good times and high prices of beef and mutton.

I have a great many resolutions, letters, and telegrams from stockgrowers' associations, boards of county commissioners, chambers of commerce, and other representative bodies of our citizens, very earnestly urging the passage of this resolution. I will not insert them in the record because I have endeavored in my remarks to give the substance of their expressions. But I feel I should mention a very able set of resolutions by the Western Slope Cattle Growers' Association of Colorado, the Colorado Wool Growers' Association, the Western Colorado Cattle Growers' Association, and resolutions by the Grand Mesa Livestock Association; also resolutions by the Rio Blanco Farmers and Stockgrowers' Association. I have here a copy of a forceful and unanswerable statement of this situation in the form of a letter from Dr. I. L. Gotthelf, of Saguache, Colo., to Senator Robert D. Carry. I also have telegrams from the chambers of commerce of both Montezuma and Dolores Counties, Colo., and a great many others.

Mr. Hope. Mr. Taylor, your resolution merely requests that the

Mr. Hope. Mr. Taylor, your resolution merely requests that the Secretary of Agriculture fix the fees to be charged during the year 1933 at not more than 50 per cent of that charged in 1931. Is it your idea that this will meet the situation? Will the Secretary do that?

Mr. Taylor. Mr. Hope, he says in this letter—
"A full consideration of these and other facts which I shall be glad to present on request should enable Congress to indicate its desire."

Now, my resolution does not force him to do so, but by this letter he is saying to you that he is inviting Congress to indicate its desire in the matter. In other words, he apparently desires to have you gentlemen to assume the responsibility of walving these fees to this extent for this year. That is my impression and I am asking the approval of this resolution in order to get an expression of the will of Congress.

My resolution requests the Secretary to fix the fees at not more than 50 per cent, during the year 1933, of those charged during the year 1931.

Mr. Hope. I wanted your opinion as to make the secretary to the second control of the second control of the year 1931.

the year 1931

Mr. Hope. I wanted your opinion as to whether you think that would be sufficient to take care of the situation or whether you think some other action should be taken?

Mr. Taylor. Oh, yes; I am confident the Senate will pass Senator Carey's resolution like mine, and I think that if the House of Representatives should pass my resolution that Mr. Hyde will grant this relief. I think that he will then feel that he has the backing of those responsible for the Budget, since the Budget must come to Congress. We hold the purse strings. I feel that he will do that. And I think that I can say this, without fear of contradiction, that I believe that the President of the United States will not, in the slightest way, oppose this, out of consideration of the stock-raising interests of the West. I feel that if Congress expresses an opinion that the stockmen are entitled to the same waiver of 50 per cent that they had last year, when conditions were not as bad as they are now, I believe that the President will approve it.

Mr. Flannadan. What time in the year can the cattle and sheep men graze this land?

Mr. Tayloz. Oh, that all depends on the altitude of the range. They start in the lower altitudes early in the spring. The lowest altitude in my district is over 4,000 feet, and it ranges from that elevation on up to over 14,000 feet. As everybody knows, Colorado is by actual geological survey by far the highest State in the Union. Colorado is the crest of this continent. There is a chain of crystal peaks 300 miles long extending through the center of the Centenniel State from Wyoming to New Mexico. the Centennial State from Wyoming to New Mexico.

In the entire United States there are only 64 mountain peaks over 14,000 feet high. One in the State of Washington, 13 in the State of California, and 50 in the State of Colorado; and about 45 of those are in my district. I have the distinction of representing the top of the world; my congressional district is the highest district in the United States. The snow gradually melts off in the spring, starting in April and on until in the summer.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Beginning in your lowest altitude, about when does grazing start?

Mr. Taylor, Oh, in the lower altitudes they begin in March—on the lower lands, the public domains, outside of the forest reserve. But they do not enter the forest reserves until usually around the 1st of May. These gentlemen from the Forestry Service can give the exact data on that. The stock gradually graze up, getting farther and farther upward, and they do not get to the highest altitudes until about June. The grazing season is usually from May to September. It is a summer-time season.

The sheep go up higher than the cattle. A large part of this land is above timber line. Timber, as you know, in this section does not grow above about 11,000 feet; sheep go up above that some; cattle seldom graze above timber line, because the flies and gnats are terrible up there during the summer—worse than they are down lower. But sheep can go up and graze over that land above timber line. If that high and very rocky land were not grazed it would go to waste. The grazing of the forest reserves prevents fires which would cause the destruction of these forests televist the timber line.

prevents fires which would cause the destruction of these forests below the timber line. It is therefore a benefit for the whole country to have this grass eaten out in all the forests of the West, both in the timber and above the timber line, and that is done with sheep and cattle every year.

Now, gentlemen, if there are any other questions the members of the committee or the representatives from the forest reserve desire to ask me concerning the practical operation or commonsense view of this matter, I shall be glad to answer you, because I know those stockmen and their problems. I have lived among them all my life. My father was a cattleman all his life, and I was a cowboy during my boyhood days.

There are a lot of nonresident sheepmen who would be glad to come in there and take over the land and put 5,000 head of sheep on it with one herder, or 10,000 sheep under one man—people who would come in from some of the other States that would come in there and pay no taxes and eat us out of house and home. They there and pay no taxes and eat us out of house and home. They can afford to pay more for that land than the local people that pay the taxes to support the local government, school system, and build up the country, our bona fide residents. So in that way, if you want to commercialize it, if you want to drive out the citizens who have built up that country, drive them out of business and let the nonresidents come in there and pay nothing and have no responsibility, because, no matter where they go, they pay nothing; they pay no taxes there and they pay none elsewhere; it is possible for them to pay a higher fee. But these people do not offer to pay more than the local people. They are the kind of people that will come in there and take the land away from the local people who are developing the country, paying high taxes to maintain their schools, and they can not afford to pay more.

If during the heyday of our flush times in 1927 and before the slump of October, 1929, you had adopted a definite scale of living and a scale of expenses and determined the number of employees and a scale of expenses and determined the number of employees and the amount that you were going to spend during each year, all of that 10-year period, you would now have to cut down all that expense and personnel, would you not? This scale of forest-reserve fees was fixed back in the good times; and this bureau, like every other bureau, has grown like a mushroom, and they have built up an enormous personnel and are spending many millions of dollars each year, and they decline to make any reduction whatever.

When that scale of fees was made, the language was expressly put in there that these grazing fees were subject to adjustment according to conditions prevailing and prices of stock, and officials have no right now to repudiate that agreement or deny that provision specifically authorizing this scale down. Neither the Secretary nor this committee can in justice or good faith ignore that adjustment provision.

I would like permission to revise and to correct my remarks.

Mr. Doxey. Yes.

Mr. Taylor. I do not care to take up the time of the committee Mr. Taylos. I do not care to take up the time of the committee any more. In view of the stubborn opposition to this resolution, I feel warranted in saying that the Forest Service activities have been enormously increased and enlarged in recent years. When that bureau was established it was promised to be self-sustaining, but since that time it has developed marvelously and is now spending every year many millions of dollars, and it seems to the stockmen and to me that it has become top-heavy both with employees and expenses. The stockmen feel that in these desperate times that bureau should be willing to make a very substantial ployees and expenses. The stockmen real that in these desperate times that bureau should be willing to make a very substantial reduction in both its expenses and operating machinery.

On the 30th day of January of this year the total Federal pay roll of our Government was as follows:

Number of persons: Civilians _ 731,000 Military Total ____ 1,023,000 Total Federal pay roll:

Total Federal pay roll..... __ 1,316,000,000 fast as possible.

Congress is now, and has for a long time, been spending about $6,000,000 a day more than our receipts. That condition is rapidly leading to national bankruptcy, financial ruination, and economic collapse. One of the main causes of this appalling destitution and ruinous calamity is the enormous increase in the cost of our Government. The overhead expenses of our Government are out of all proportion to our country's present tragic condition. If Congress does not promptly reduce the cost of our Government, and as near as possible balance the Budget, our present so-called depression will, I fear, soon turn into a disastrous panic, and no one can even prophesy the horrible consequences that may follow. It does seem to me that when we have an opportunity, as we do here now, to afford a very important relief and encouragement to the great range-stock industry of the West, if we refuse them this absolutely necessary relief we are inviting ruinous disaster and not rendering our full duty to a great, patriotic, industrious, and red-blooded class of our American citizens.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Joint Memorial 2 (by Senators King, Headlee, and Wheeler)

Whereas there is a tremendous indebtedness in the form of farm mortgages against a large per cent of the farm lands of the United States, which mortgages are now held by Federal land banks, commercial banks, insurance companies, and individuals;

whereas, by reason of the unparalleled depression now existing not only in State but in national and even in world affairs, resulting in a very large proportion of said mortgages as now existing being in default as to principal, interest, and taxes, by reason of the fact that the price of agricultural products has for years been below the cost of production, resulting in the inability of the farmers of the United States to meet the interest and/or principal payments; and

Whereas, unless immediate relief is given, thousands and hundreds of thousands of additional farmers will lose their farm homes and millions more will be forced into our cities and villages, thereby increasing the already too large an army of unemployed and precipitating a condition that threatens the very life of this Nation; and,

Whereas there is no adequate way of refinancing existing agricultural indebtedness, and the legislatures of many States have memorialized Congress to pass the Frazier bill (S. 1197) or some similar measure without delay, which proposed legislation provides that existing farm indebtedness shall be refinanced by the Gov-ernment of the United States; and

Whereas, by said refinancing, not only will the farmers be spared their homes but there will be released frozen assets in the hands of banks, insurance companies, and individuals, and thereby spared their homes but there will be released frozen assets in the hands of banks, insurance companies, and individuals, and thereby funds made available for the refinancing of industry and other purposes: Now, therefore, be it

*Resolved in the Senate of the Twenty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the House of Representatives concurring therein). That we indorse and approve the enactment by the Federal Congress of any legislation along the lines of Frazier bill (S. 1197), or any other similar or improved bills providing for the refinancing of existing outstanding farm mortgages over a period of 50 years at a very low rate of interest not exceeding the borrowing ability of the Government, including interest and amortization, to be done through a central land bank by the issuance of Government bonds secured by said farm mortgages liberally appraised and by the issuance of currency against said bonds by the Federal reserve bank, so that the proper refinancing of present outstanding farm mortgages can be accomplished at the earliest moment possible. Be it further

Resolved, That the United States Senators and Members of the House of Representatives representing the State of Colorado in Congress are hereby earnestly requested and urged to exert their efforts to secure the passage of such legislation; be it further Resolved, That engrossed copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the State of Colorado in Congress.

in Congress

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

STATE OF ILLINOIS,

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, Edward J. Hughes, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true photostatic copy of Senate Joint Resolution No. 14, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of the State of Illinois.

Done at the city of Springfield this 23d day of February, A. D.

[SEAL.]

EDWARD J. HUGHES. Secretary of State.

Senate Joint Resolution 14

Whereas the continuous ruinous price levels of basic farm commodities have precipitated a crisis in the agricultural industry; and Whereas the national welfare demands that some adjustment be made or relief furnished to enable owners of farms to retain

Whereas the national welfare demands that some adjustment be made or relief furnished to enable owners of farms to retain equities in their property which on the basis of existing false market values will be wiped out at foreclosure sales; and Whereas the Congress of the United States at its present session is devoting itself to formulating legislation that will serve to restore a reasonable parity between the prices of basic farm commodities and the production costs thereof, and pending the adjustment of such price and cost levels to a point where the agricultural industry is able to finance itself it is imperative that Congress provide means by which the farmers may retain and operate their farms: Now, therefore, be it

*Resolved by the senate of the fifty-eighth general assembly (the house of representatives concurring herein). That the General Assembly of Illinois, in view of the existing emergency, respectfully importunes Congress at its present session to enact legislation to effectuate the following proposals and to appropriate such funds as may be necessary for that purpose:

1. Provide for the appointment of local conciliators to effect compositions and extensions, and to stay foreclosure and other legal proceedings while conciliation negotiations are pending.

2. Provide financing for the extension of mortgages held by Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks, and to provide a means for the reduction of interest rates on such mortgages.

3. Provide additional funds for the Federal land-bank and loan-association systems to protect mortgagors in the liquidation of banks and to finance the making of new loans; and be it further Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the present Congress, the Secretary of Agriculture, and to each Congressman and Senator from Illinois.

Adopted by the senate February 15, 1933.

THOMAS F. Donovan,

THOMAS F. DONOVAN,

President of the Senate.
A. E. EDEN, Secretary of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house of representatives February 16, 1933. ARTHUR ROE, Speaker of the House of Representatives. Chas. P. Carey, Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

House Joint Memorial 4 (introduced by Willis Ford)

A memorial to Congress to allow home owners to borrow directly from the Government upon a plan similar to the Federal land loan act

Whereas under present conditions all industries and all property owners are being encouraged, except the home owner, for whom little or no relief is being provided; and Whereas because of such conditions, people, rather than attempt to have and own their homes, are turning away from the indi-vidual homes and living in apartments, hotels, tenements, and other rented property; and whereas it is essential to the public welfare and vital to our American civilization that the building and owning of individual homes be encouraged among our people. Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of New Mexico does hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to pass such legislation as will allow the individual to borrow directly from the Government of the United States, through such agencies as may be established, for the purpose of building, buying, or improving the home, under a plan similar to that allowed farmers under the provisions of the Federal farm loan act; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to our Senators and Representative in Congress and to presiding officers of both Houses of the United States Congress.

ALAN N. WHITE Speaker of the House of Representatives.

GEORGE W. ARMIJO, Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives. Taylor E. Julien, President of the Senate pro tempore.

Attest:

F. E. MCCULLOCH. Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Approved by me this 21st day of February, 1933.

ARTHUR SELIGMAN, Governor.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Ririe Grain Growers (Inc.), Ririe, Idaho, favoring the prompt passage of Senate bill 1197, known as the Frazier farm relief bill, and also the adoption of the farm-allotment plan or some other plan or measure of relief, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Brown Manufacturing Co., Houston, Tex., praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Common Council of the City of Whiting, Ind.; the Common Council of the City of Dearborn, Mich.; the Common Council of the City of Lakewood, Ohio; the Council of the City of New Rochelle, N. Y.; the Common Council of the City of Monessen, Pa.; the Council of the City of Charleston, S. C.; the Common Council of the City of Charleston, W. Va.; and the Board of Aldermen of the City of Beverly, Mass., favoring the passage of legislation authorizing the issuance of a special series of postage stamps of the denomination of 3 cents commemorative of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen and appointment as brevet brigadier general of the Continental Army of Thaddeus Kosciusko, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also laid before the Senate several petitions, a telegram in the nature of a petition from F. D. Edwards, of Abbeville, and four telegrams in the nature of petitions from citizens, all in the State of Louisiana, praying for a continuance of the investigation of the Louisiana senatorial election of 1932 and the necessary allotment of money therefor by the special committee of the Senate to investigate campaign expenditures of the various presidential, vice presidential, and senatorial candidates in 1932, which were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Lee Franklin, of Jennings, La., relative to the handling of unemploymentrelief funds (supplied by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) by the executive department of the State of Louisiana through the highway commission, and favoring an investigation thereof along with the investigation of the Louisiana senatorial election of 1932, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate letters in the nature of memorials from Z. B. Broussard, attorney at law, of Abbeville, and J. U. Frazier, deputy sheriff and member Democratic executive committee, of Farmerville; a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Dr. E. F. Salerno, of New Orleans; and also 13 telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry other citizens, all in the State of Louisiana, remonstrating against a continuance of the investigation of the Louisiana senatorial election of 1932 and the spending of additional money therefor by the special committee of the Senate to investigate campaign expenditures of the various presidential, vice presidential, and senatorial candidates in 1932, which were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. REED presented a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Monessen, Pa., praying for the passage of legislation authorizing the issuance of a special series of postage stamps of the denomination of 3 cents commemorative of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen and appointment as brevet brigadier general of the Continental Army on October 13, 1873, of Thaddeus Kosciusko, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. DILL presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington, which was ordered to lie on the table:

House Joint Memorial 11, relating to Federal relief for George Charles Walther

To the honorable the Senate of the United States

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington in legislative session assembled, most respectfully present and petition your honorable body as follows:

Whereas George Charles Walther, a citizen of Portland, Oreg., was accidentally shot by a Federal prohibition enforcement officer in 1923 and received injuries which have made him a cripple for life; and

Whereas the said George Charles Walther was a law-abiding citizen, who had no part in the criminal activities which resulted in the raid, but was merely an innocent bystander; and

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the United States Congress, and has passed the House of Representatives, to provide the said George Charles Walther with a pension of $100 per month for life, and the said bill is now before the Senate of the United for life, and the said bill is now before the Senate of the United States of America: Now, therefore,

Your memorialists petition and memorialize the Senate of the United States of America, now in session in Washington, D. C., to take immediate action to approve the measure which will grant a pension of $100 per month for life to the said George Charles Walther, and thereby provide him with the means of livelihood of which he was deprived by the action of a Government agent.

the RECORD, as follows:

President of the Senate.

O. H. OLSON, Chief Clerk.

This is a true and correct copy as adopted by the Legislature of the State of Washington.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the West Walworth (N. Y.) Dairymen's League Cooperative Association (Inc.), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in

Whereas it has been brought to the attention of West Walworth Dairymen's League Cooperative Association (Inc.), in meeting regularly assembled this 28th day of January, 1933, that consideration is being given to reduction of rural mail delivery service; and posed to any reduction of such service which would mean a further decline in the standard of living of rural people: Be it Resolved, That we urge you to use your influence to curb this or any legislation that will tend to further lower the standard of living of rural people.

BIMETALLISM, THE GOLD STANDARD, AND DEPRECIATED CURRENCIES

Mr. WHEELER presented a letter written by W. I. Wright. of Butte, Mont., which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. as follows:

BUTTE, MONT., February 18, 1933.

To the CHICAGO JOURNAL OF COMMERCE:

To the CHICAGO JOURNAL OF COMMERCE:

Many articles have appeared, and are still appearing, in our magazines and financial papers that convincingly demonstrate how with the rest of the world off the gold standard the depreciated foreign currencies are playing havoc with our trade.

In the December 3 issue of the Saturday Evening Post an article by Samuel G. Blythe detailed how, by reason of depreciated currencies, foreign nations can import their wares and products and undersell us, and, conversely, although not brought out by Mr. Blythe, other writers show how the same set of facts prevent the everytation of our products in competition with the degree.

Mr. Blythe, other writers show how the same set of facts prevent the exportation of our products in competition with the depre-ciated currencies of our competitors. Incidentally, Mr. Blythe's article is refutation of the recent campaign argument that our troubles are the result of our tariff wall, for does he not prove that 60 per cent of these imported articles are tariff free?

The writer is amazed at the frankness with which it is admitted that the gold standard—or rather the lack of it among our neighbors—is working to our disadvantage. Such rank heresy would never have found its way into the columns of our financial journals in 1896.

The great difference, however, between now and 1896 is that we have become a creditor Nation; then it was to the financial interest of the great creditor nations, particularly England, to maintain the gold standard, while now, conditions being reversed, it is to their advantage to abandon it. In 1896 the great argument against bimetalism was that it would cheapen our money, and that we could or should not adopt or rather restore bimetallism without the consent of the rest of the world. Bryan's great plea was to restore the status quo of silver before its surreptitious demonetization in 1873, "without the aid or consent of any nation on earth." Our present plea seems to be, "we must maintain the gold standard despite the fact that the rest of the world has abandoned it." abandoned it."

the gold standard despite the fact that the rest of the world has abandoned it."

Despite the fact that gold is at a terrific premium (evidenced both by "depreciated" currencies in relation to the gold standard and low commodity prices) and that this premium is leaving us high and dry, so far as exports are concerned, and at the same time open on every frontier to "depreciated-currency" imports, seemingly the only remedy open to our business men infected with the gold fetish is to try and induce the rest of the world to get back onto the gold wagon. Like the new recruit, they insist that every man in the company is out of step but your Uncle Sam, and many seem to be willing, and some even contend, that it is necessary to cancel foreign debts owed to our Government in a desperate effort to save the gold standard from utter collapse. They brag about our immense gold reserve and yet, despite the fact that we have the greater part of the world supply, if 10 per cent of our bank deposits were demanded in gold, it would exhaust the entire stock of gold in our reserve banks. If hoarders had demanded gold instead of currency last year, we would have been forced off the gold standard notwithstanding Senator Glass, in what Governor Roosevelt called his "fine phillipic," practically called President Hoover a liar when the latter let the cat out of the bag as to how near we were to that predicament.

But, fortunately, the great majority of the people don't know what a gold coin looks like, and if you would try to pass a $10 or $20 gold piece on the ordinary business man, he'd shy away from it. Try it and see. Hence, the gold standard is like a deuce in the hole—its perfectly good so long as the bluff isn't called. An insolvent bank could run on indefinitely if depositors didn't call for their money.

But while there seems to be a propaganda to cancel debts owed call for their money.

But while there seems to be a propaganda to cancel debts owed to the Government the idea of canceling any debts owed by our Government seems to be overlooked, so let's try this:

To all who deem it necessary to economic rehabilitation to have those debts canceled; to those who believe cancellation will in-crease their own business or earning power, let's give them the chance to demonstrate it.

Our Government owes some $21,000,000,000 in different forms of securities, viz, bonds, Liberty issues, Treasury notes of varying dates of maturity, etc., principally held by interests advocating cancellation of foreign debts.

Let the Government Printing Office (or even give the job to the Journal of Commerce in exchange for a canceled bond) get out a printed form something like this:

.. 1933. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY, Washington, D. C .: Inclosed find (1) ____ on the amount owed by it to the United States.

Then let's work up a mass psychology for cancellation just as we did when we raised the money to give to those "furriners" by selling Liberty bonds. Organize corps of 4-minute speakers; get all the best singers and crooners, including Al Smith, the burden of whose song will be "Cancel, boys, cancel; cancel till it hurts!"

Use the radio (give Walter Lippman this job) to reach the few holders of bonds living "out in the sticks."

Get this campaign under way while there is plenty of help in the Government offices to take care of the expected deluge of bonds for cancellation, for under the new deal we expect there will be only a few Government complexes left on the pay well.

Let the speakers stress the point that unless we cancel some of our Liberty bonds Senator Wheeler will surely get his silver bill through Congress.

There's nothing to lose in this campaign, for every bond sent in for cancellation pleases everybody—the donor, the foreigner, the taxpayer, even the politician—for it will help balance the Budget without his help, and every bond canceled will strengthen the gold standard! Get busy. Yours truly, Yours truly.

W. I. WRIGHT.

FINANCIAL SATURNALIA

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an editorial from the St. Louis Star and Times entitled "Financial Saturnalia" and ask unanimous consent that the clerk read it. I want to say that it expresses my views, and I concur in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and the editorial will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

FINANCIAL SATURNALIA

Charles E. Mitchell's testimony before the Senate Banking Committee, supplemented by that of his associates, condemns the whole superstructure of American finance as concentrated in Wall Street. Mr. Mitchell, chairman of the board of the National City Bank of New York, should not be looked upon as an individual, revealing an individual record. He should be looked upon as the dominant type of American financial overlord. He is one of those upon whom the United States has relied for guidance, for ethical standards. He is one of the handful for whom our laws are written, by whom our institutions are molded. He is an owner of America.

of America.

What Mr. Mitchell has done others have done.

If he dodged his 1929 income tax by a fictitious loss of $2,800,000, others have evaded on billions.

If he unloaded $31,000,000 worth of worthless Cuban sugar loans made by his bank onto the stockholders of its investment affiliate, made by his bank onto the stockholders of its investment affiliate, he merely adopted the standards of American superfinance.

If he pulled $3,400,000 in bonuses out of the profits of the National City Co. unknown to its stockholders, he did no more than follow the custom of those who have the power to pull bonuses.

If his company floated and sold to the public every sort of security for which there was a public demand, with the executives secretly taking 20 per cent of the excess profits, he was a true follower of the American code.

If the funds left by depositors for safe-keeping were used to play the stock market in gigantic pool operations, with short selling of the bank's own stock, the confession of error is but an aftermath of discovery.

the bank's own stock, the confession of error is but an aftermath of discovery.

If when the crash came $2,400,000 of bank funds were loaned to bank officers without interest and largely without security to protect their Wall Street speculations, and later were charged off or bailed out as a loss, it shocks nobody in Wall Street.

And if poor devils of bank clerks who contracted to buy bank stock on the installment plan are still being forced to pay $200 a share after the stock has lost 80 per cent of its market value, that, too, is part of the American picture.

Not Mr. Mitchell, not the National City Bank alone, could practice this sort of finance on a scale sufficient to land the United States in the ditch, but in combination with others they have done so. They built the speculative pyramid whose crash brought business down. That is the least they did. The real indictment is that their ethics, their leadership, their vision has been so warped and sordid that in three years of national travail it has offered the country nothing—absolutely nothing—toward recovery.

The financial morals revealed by Mr. Mitchell's testimony, broadened into the general economic life of America, have given us the doctrine that dividends are more sacred than a living wage, that the cost of deflation must be heaped on the weakest, that no concerted action in behalf of all shall restrict the profits of those at the top, and that wealth confers no obligation upon its holder to serve the country.

There is the weakness of America—wealth without responsibility,

There is the weakness of America—wealth without responsibility, wealth without duty, wealth without a heartbeat.

Since that is the situation, let us accept it. But how? Shall we, in Christian humility, turn the other pocket to Mr. Mitchell? Or shall we resort to the Mosaic law, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, an income-tax penalty for an income-tax evasion?

Senator Walsh, who is to be Attorney General in the Roosevelt Cabinet, has his first job cut out for him. It is to find the point, if he can, where chicancery within the banking law ended and criminality began. In a more personal field, Mr. Walsh's job is to collect an income tax on $2,800,000 from Charles E. Mitchell, and then do the same with thousands of others who have created our Treasury deficit by slippery systems of establishing fictitious our Treasury deficit by slippery systems of establishing fictitious

Mr. Mitchell, during the 1929 panic, set up a loss of $2,800,000 by selling 18,300 shares of bank stock to a relative. Then he bought it back. He suffered no loss whatever. Is the income-tax Then he law to be turned upside down by any such jugglery as that?

law to be turned upside down by any such jugglery as that? With a $2,000,000,000 deficit in the Treasury are we going to allow the wealthiest people in America to go tax free by the device of selling securities to relatives and then buying them back?

First soak the public and get the dough; then hang on and dodge the Government. That is the motto not merely of Mr. Mitchell, the eminent banker, but of the entire financial dictatorship set up over the economic life of America by the Wall Street oligarchy.

The holders of such a doctrine recognize no restraint except force. If they were capable of regeneration from within, three such years as the Nation has gone through would have taught them humility. It has taught them nothing.

We talk of imitating the British or Canadian banking system to get rid of bank failures. What would branch banking do for this country with the National City Bank of New York at the head of one of the systems? It is not the British and Canadian bank system, but British and Canadian banking ethics, that prevent failures in England and Canada. We need to remold American banks and American business, but far more than that we need to remold American bankers and business men.

Capitalism, it is said every day and on every hand, is on trial for its life. It is being tried, in the last analysis, in a court of morals. If it is doomed to destruction, the doom is being pronounced from within. If it is to be saved, it can be saved only by recognizing that power is not a license to prey but a call to recognizing that power is not a license to prey but a call to recognizing that power is not a needed to play but a can be responsibility.

Laws, and the white light of publicity, may drive the money changers out of the temple. Only in spiritual exaltation can they be replaced to the country's good.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14643) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1318) thereon.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2907) for the relief of Walter Sam Young, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1320) thereon.

PRESCRIPTION OF MEDICINAL LIQUORS

Mr. BLAINE. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 14395) relating to the prescribing of medicinal liquors, and I submit a report (No. 1317) thereon.

While I am directed by the Judiciary Committee to report the bill with amendments, I reserve the right to resist the adoption of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Patterson in the chair). The report will be placed on the calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS LITTLE RIVER, ARK.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, to report a routine bridge bill, which ought to be passed immediately if there is to be action in the House of Representatives at the present session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Chair hears none, and the report will be received.

Mr. VANDENBERG. From the Committee on Commerce I report favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 5571) to extend the times for commencing and completing the reconstruction of a railroad bridge across Little River, in the State of Arkansas, at or near Morris Ferry, by the Texarkana & Fort Smith Railway Co., and I submit a report (No. 1319) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill. The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 9, after the word "from." to strike out "the date of approval hereof" and to insert in lieu thereof "June 23, 1933," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the reconstruction of a bridge across the Little River at or near Morris Ferry, Ark., authorized to be reconstructed, maintained, and operated by the Texarkana & Fort Smith Railway Co., its successors and assigns, by an act of Congress, approved June 23, 1930, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from June 23, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CELEBRATION OF THE FOUNDING OF ROANOKE COLONY

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I desire to report favorably without amendment Senate Joint Resolution 241, to enable the United States Roanoke Colony Commission to carry out and give effect to certain plans for the comprehensive observance of the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Englishspeaking civilization in America.

I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the resolution be reported. Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I can make a statement respecting the joint resolution which I think will serve the purpose of the Senator from Wisconsin.

A joint commission of the two Houses was appointed to make arrangements for the celebration of the establishment of the first English colony in America and the birth of the first white child born in America. That was at Roanoke Island, State of North Carolina. The historical incidents connected with the establishment of the first English colony are very interesting, but I will not go into them now.

The commission met, visited the scene of the colony, and made its report, recommending the appropriation of $50,000 for the appropriate celebration of the anniversary of the establishment of the first English colony at Roanoke Island. The joint resolution authorizes the appropriation of that amount of money.

The joint resolution is unanimously recommended by the Committee on the Library, and should be passed during the present session, in order to enable the commission to go forward with the preparations.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does it carry an appropria-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; but it authorizes an appropriation, as I have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the six commissioners of the United States Roanoke Colony Commission (hereinafter referred to as the commission) appointed pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution 26, passed June 27, 1932, shall continue to serve as commissioners whether or not they will be Members of the Congress. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of such commission may be

SEC. 2. The commission, in order to provide for the proper celebration in 1934 of the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the landing on Roanoke Island, N. C., of the first English-speaking colonists to settle in America, is authorized and directed to—

(a) Prepare, print, and distribute to public libraries, public schools, universities, and colleges, material containing such historical data as the commission may deem necessary to acquaint the public with the nature and significance of the celebration;

(b) To conduct a nation-wide campaign of educational activities in the form of suitable celebrations, and especially of essay, declamatory, and oratorical contests in the public schools, with appropriate programs of celebrations in connection therewith and to encourage and promote local celebrations in all towns, cities, and villages throughout the United States;

(c) Provide for appropriate ceremonies on the site of Fort Raleigh which marks the spot where the first colonists landed on Roanoke Island, July 4, 1584, and that suitable markers shall be dedicated in order that the public may have an opportunity to learn through this means the deep historic significance of the place and the occasion;

(e) Accept contributions of money and material for expenditure or use in the various activities of the commission; and

(f) Do all things it deems necessary and appropriate to carry out the plans prepared by such commission under House Concurrent Resolution 26, passed June 27, 1932.

SEC. 3. The commission is authorized to employ and fix the compensation of, without regard to the civil service laws and the classification act of 1923, as amended, a director, an executive secretary, and such assistants as may be needed for stenographic, clerical, and expert service within the appropriation authorized by this joint resolution.

SEC. 4. In carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution the commission is authorized to procure advice and assistance from any governmental agency, including the services of technical and other personnel in the executive departments and independent establishments, and to procure advice and assistance from and to cooperate with individuals and agencies, public or private.

SEC. 5. The President of the United States is authorized to invite, by proclamation, the governments and people of the several States, Territories, the District of Columbia, and possessions of the United States to participate and cooperate in commemorating, throughout the year 1934, the founding of the first English settlement in America.

SEC. 6. The commission is authorized to rent suitable offices in settlement in America.

Sec. 6. The commission is authorized to rent suitable offices in the District of Columbia. The commissioners and employees of the commission shall be allowed actual traveling, subsistence, and other expenses incurred in the discharge of their duties.

Sec. 7. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $50,000, to be available until expended, to cover all expenses of the commission in connection with the celebration, including compensation for personal services, traveling expenses, furniture and equipment, supplies, printing and binding, and rent of offices in the District of Columbia, notwithstanding the provisions of any other act relating to the expenditure of public moneys. All expenses of the commission shall be paid by the disbursing officer of the commission upon vouchers approved by the chairman, or such person as may be designated by him to approve vouchers: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 5694) for the relief of Withycombe Post, No. 11, American Legion, Corvallis, Oreg.; to the Committee on

A bill (S. 5695) to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury to employees in interstate commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 14769) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES-LIMIT OF COST

Mr. CAREY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 374), which was referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures of the various presidential, vice presidential, and senatorial candidates in 1932:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures under Senate Reso-Resolved, That the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution No. 174, Seventy-second Congress, agreed to July 11, 1932, as continued in force by Senate Resolution No. 324, Seventy-second Congress, agreed to January 13, 1933, is hereby increased by $25,000, and the committee acting pursuant to the authority contained in such resolutions is authorized to employ counsel at a rate of compensation not in excess of such rate as may be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS-CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 190)

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14458) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, and 10, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$780,000, of which $280,000 shall be available for the completion of the public-utilities investigations undertaken pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 83, Seventieth Congress"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$800,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,003,159,779"; and the Senate agree to the same.

RELIEF OF THE STATE OF IDAHO

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) for the relief of the State of Idaho.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, last June, to a small bill for the relief of the State of Idaho, the Senate added an amendment providing for the repair of a steam plant at Carlisle Barracks, Pa. Subsequent to that action a relief bill was passed which contained the Carlisle Barracks item. Consequently, it becomes unnecessary and unwise to pass it a second time. Therefore, I move that the Senate recede from its amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE, TEX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Dickinson in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5445) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex., which was to amend the title so as to read: "An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex."

Mr. CONNALLY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the title of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

WHY EUROPEANS GET DISTORTED PICTURE OF UNITED STATES

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the Chicago Sunday Tribune of January 8, 1933, entitled "Why Europeans Get Distorted Picture of United States." It is a most interesting demonstration of the propaganda that is utilized in foreign countries by certain agencies to the detriment of the best interests of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave is granted.

The article is as follows:

[From the Chicago Sunday Tribune, January 8, 1933] WHY EUROPEANS GET DISTORTED PICTURE OF UNITED STATES—NEWS PROPAGANDA CHAIN IS REVEALED

By Edmond Taylor

Paris, December 28 (by mail).—A striking example of how American news with a distorted propaganda angle is disseminated throughout Europe from London through interlocking news-trading agreements between the British news agency, Reuter's, and the various official continental agencies appears in the French Virtually every large newspaper, both morning and afternoon, in this country has given prominent position to a short news item on the new American Budget, revealing that "43 per cent of the projected Government expenses will be used for military purposes.'

NONMILITARY COSTS

Study of the figures given in the French news dispatch reveals that the 43 per cent for military purposes includes such nonmilitary expenses as bonuses, pensions, upkeep of veterans' hospitals, and the like, although the dispatch carefully refrains from saying this. It simply mentions the sum of $628,517,319—the combined War and Navy budgets—for "military upkeep and development," and omits to say that the rest of the 43 per cent—$869,885,000—is entirely for the Veterans' Administration.

The article as presented is a striking bit of propaganda, calculated to make even a well-informed European reader believe that his own military expenses are far less than those of the United States, and that Uncle Sam as a leading exponent of disarmament is the world's champion hypocrite. Needless to say, debt revision is subtly introduced into the picture.

But that is every-day stuff. The kick this time is less in the nature of the propaganda than in the manner of its distribution. Study of the figures given in the French news dispatch reveals

DOCTOR UP DISPATCH

The news dispatch cited above has had several metamorphoses in the French press. It first appears in morning papers—notably the Matin—as a 2-paragraph item, with the credit line of the Havas agency and a Washington date line. This, according to newspaper practice all over the world, means that the message was sent direct from the Washington bureau of the official Havas was sent direct from the Washington bureau of the official Havas agency to Paris, and published in the papers which subscribe to this service. But wait and see!

In the afternoon papers the same item appeared with new trimmings. This time it appeared under a London date line and quoted an editorial on the subject in this morning's London Daily Express which brings out the appropriate edifying comments the Havas correspondent did not have space to make.

The semiofficial Temps was one of the many afternoon papers to run the Daily Express story, and it published it on the front page—usually devoted to the most important political developments—under the head "The Respective Armaments of England and the United States." Then followed a condensed translation of the Daily Express editorial, entitled "The Mote and the Beam."

COMPARES MILITARY COSTS

The Express article compared the American military expenses, finding that Great Britain spends only 13½ per cent of its budget on national defense, while America spends 43 per cent. [Obviously the British figures do not include veterans' expenses.] It pointed out America's more favorable strategic position and its compactness as against the far-flung British Empire.

It wound up with a sly dig at President Hoover's policy of linking disarmament with debt revision. All this was translated in the French messages.

These messages, while not credited, are unmistakably from the Havas Bureau in London, as they are worded identically in different newspapers. Thus the French reader is not only treated to a shining example of "Uncle Shylock's" hypocrisy but likewise gets it contrasted with the noble and misunderstood position of John Bull.

HOW NEWS IS TREATED

But the most interesting feature of the case is not in the vinegary editorial propaganda of the Daily Express being reproduced in France but in the modest and seemingly objective little duced in France but in the modest and seemingly objective little news dispatch which ran in the earlier editions.

In the same edition of the Daily Express with the famous editorial was a news dispatch from the Washington Reuter Bureau, on which it was based. In order to compare this with the similar dispatch sent by Havas, supposedly from Washington, a literal translation of the French message follows:

"Forty-three per cent of the expenses which the Government of the United States expects to make [literally foresees] for the fiscal year of 1934 will be used for military purposes; the Budget of $4,248,169,731 drawn up by President Hoover includes, as a matter of fact, an expenditure of $1,628,517,319 for military upkeep and development.

"The largest expense for the rest of the Budget is devoted to the public debt, which absorbs 33 per cent."

From this translation it can be seen that with the exception of the third paragraph of the British message, removed from the

the third paragraph of the British message, removed from the French one for lack of space, the two messages are identical. The French one is merely a smoothed-out translation of the other. It did not come at all from the Washington bureau of Havas. It came from the Havas London bureau and was a direct translation came from the Havas London bureau and was a direct translation of the message Reuter received from its own [British] correspondent in Washington, although the item was presented in France as coming directly from a French correspondent in America.

The reason for this is that Reuter and Havas exchange news, just as Reuter exchanges with all official European agencies and with the Associated Press. Since Havas' budget is limited, while Reuter maintains a high bureau in America it is cheener for the Reuter maintains a big bureau in America, it is cheaper for the Havas correspondent in London to translate and send routine items from America—and sometimes items that aren't routine—over a leased wire to Paris than for the Havas correspondent to send the news direct.

GETS FLAVORED DISPATCH

Often this is frankly indicated by putting the dispatch under a London date line and quoting Reuter.

As Havas has a news monopoly in France—the smaller and likewise subsidized Radio agency is not a competitor—the arms propaganda story above went all throughout France and into French colonies. Doubtless it went all over Europe as well, for Reuter also trades with the Stefani in Italy, Wolf in Germany, and other agencies. agencies.

There is much more than a mere exchange of news, however. Incredible as it may seem, Reuter has close financial connections with Havas. In fact, Havas is considered by many to be a subsidiary of Reuter despite the fact that the French Government heavily subsidizes Havas and uses it as the official medium of French governmental propaganda.

Why the French Government should allow the British foreign office to place its propaganda in a French official agency is a Havas is more than an agency. It is a great newspaper trust, involving advertising and news services, distribution and actual publication. It is run as a commercial venture and receives a subsidy from the Government to handle the Government's publicity "account" along with other interests. Unless French interests are compromised, the Government need not object to Havas running a little British propaganda along with French running a little British propaganda along with French.

A PROPAGANDA CHAIN

Thus a highly interesting propaganda chain is established with Thus a highly interesting propaganda chain is established with London as its center. Reuter, a British concern under the influence of Downing Street, feeds American news to Havas, official distributor of all news in France. Havas feeds the French papers, And just as Reuter has financial as well as news connections with Havas, so Havas not only serves French papers but actually controls or participates in the financial control of a number of them—notably the Matin and the Intransigeant.

That is the explanation of why cock-eyed pictures of America and legends like "Uncle Shylock" spring up "spontaneously" in the European mind the European mind.

Washington, 27 décembre (Dép. UNITED STATES WAR BUDGET-£325,000,000 FOR ARMY, NAVY, AND AIR FORCE

Washington, Tuesday, December 27.—Out of the £850,000,000 which the United States Government expects to spend in the next fiscal year, 43 per cent will be used for military purposes.

The Budget which President Hoover has drawn up includes an expenditure of £325,000,000 for military upkeep and development. This sum provides for the general national defense, £105,000,000; military construction, £442,000; aircraft construction, £3,000,000; naval construction, £8,600,000, besides other sums.

For the rest of the Budget the next largest expense is 33 per cent for the public debt. (Reuter.)

LINCOLN. THE HARMONIZER

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered over the radio by an eminent lawyer of my city, Emanuel Hertz, on the 12th of February on Lincoln, the Harmonizer.

To venture at this day upon pointing to a new phase of the Emancipator is to court condemnation from those who pose as the ultimate judges of what may be uttered without their consent. They have held undisputed sway so long, with no one to expose their methods, that few outside of their limited circle are safe from censure. They decidedly favor the debunker; Washington has been the victim of one, Lincoln of another, Beecher of a third, and so we might go on. It is to be regretted that Washington has found no one to expose these unmerited assaults. It is different with Lincoln. When in the course of the years some one attempted such work—men and women who saw and heard Lincoln—unceremoniously anathematized the offender and hurled the facts at him and drove him from the platform when he was attempting to do his sinister work in the open. When these boll-weevil critics make one of their unwarranted attacks Lincoln students generally come to the rescue and state the facts these boll-weevil critics make one of their unwarranted attacks Lincoln students generally come to the rescue and state the facts or offer in evidence a document, or speech, or letter, which disposes of the author and the charge. These faultfinders never examine either the old or the new evidence upon which the true estimate of Lincoln as a man or as a lawyer or as a statesman is to be made. They see Lincoln through Lamon's estimate, which he never believed but which was written for him by Lincoln's enemy. They quote Rhodes, the historian of a period, who touches upon some high spots in Lincoln's Presidency, but who never made a thorough study of Lincoln. But not one of these has done more than look at the surface of the events in which he played his part. They especially love to vilify anyone who dares to praise Lincoln. But what else can one do who is honest in his appraisals? Little do they know that the greatest men of the last 75 years, the world over, spoke in highest praise of Lincoln's accomplishments in law, in statecraft, in literature, in debate, and in forensic achievement. in forensic achievement.

The list of these commentators begins with John Hay, to whom Lincoln was the greatest figure since Christ, and Victor Hugo, and ends with Elihu Root and Calvin Coolidge. In between appear the names of Garfield, Roosevelt, and Woodrow Wilson, together with Beaconsfield, John Bright, Lloyd George, Viscount Curzon, Lyman Abbott, Horace Greeley, John D. Long, Charles Evans Hughes, Frank S. Black, Henry Ward Beecher, Robert G. Ingersoll, Henry Watterson, Edwin Markham, Walt Whitman, Ralph Waldo Emerson, William Cullen Bryant, and James Russell Lowell, and hundreds of others—the ablest of governors, Senators, leaders in Congress, educators, journalists, and preachers of all denominations who knew Lincoln. And what about the avalanche of testimony from his Vice Presidents, the members of his great Cabinet, the members of the judiciary of his day, his fellow lawyers, his generals, his private secretaries?

This is what Emerson says, in part:

"His mind mastered the problem of the day; and, as the prob-

This is what Emerson says, in part:

"His mind mastered the problem of the day; and, as the problem grew, so did his comprehension of it. Rarely was a man so fitted for the event. In the midst of fears and jealousies, in the babel of counsels and parties, this man wrought incessantly with all his might and all his honesty, laboring to find what the people wanted, and how to obtain that."

Here is part of the tribute of Bishop Charles H. Fowler, of the Methodist Church:

"Lincoln had the faith of Abraham, the leadership of Moses, the courage of Leonidas, the contentment of Cincinnatus, the statesmanship of Pericles, the massive intellectual force of St. Paul, the political sagacity of Richelieu, the integrity of Cromwell, and the patriotism of Washington."

Horace Greeley, a great editor in his day, says:

"He was not a born king of men, ruling by the resistless might of his natural superiority, but a child of the people, who made himself a great persuader, therefore a leader, by dint of firm resolve, and patient effort, and dogged perseverance."

Charles A. Dana, of the New York Sun, who saw much of Lincoln resolve.

coln, says:

"He was the least faulty in his conclusions of any man that I have ever known. He never stepped too soon, and he never stepped too late."

Bishop Newman says:

"Here is one more honored than any other man while living, more revered when dying, and destined to be loved to the last syllable of recorded time."

Frank S. Black, so much like Lincoln, says:

"How long the names of men will last no human foresight can discover, but I believe that even against the havoc and confusion in which so many names go down, the fame of Lincoln will stand as immovable and as long as the pyramids against the rustle of as immovable and as long as the pyramids against the rustle of Egyptian winds."

These sentiments, these appraisals of genuine and unbiased observers, and hundreds of similar ones are available, the army of debunkers have never seen, and have never heard. Their utterances, therefore, are valueless because the truth is not in them. And so we will, after this lengthy but necessary introduction, proceed to discuss Lincoln as a harmonizer, as a force of spreading good will not only among all the sections of the country but also among the different religious denominations as they existed in his day

To the Methodists in convention assembled in Baltimore he

"Nobly sustained as the Government has been by all the churches, I would utter nothing which might, in the least, appear invidious against any. Yet, without this, it may fairly be said that the Methodist Episcopal Church, not less devoted than the rest, is, by the greater number, the most important of all. It is no fault in others that the Methodist Church sends more soldiers to the field, more nurses to the hospital, and more prayers to Heaven than any. God bless the Methodist Church—bless all the churches—and blessed be God, who, in this, our great trial, giveth churches—and blessed be God, who, in this, our great trial, giveth us the churches."

To the Catholic sisters in three different States he extended a protecting strong arm, guarding their property, assisting and helping them in their great work of charity on the battlefield, and consulting freely and frequently with the leader of the Catholic hierarchy. He was very much at home in pew 89 in Plymouth Church, where Beecher spoke and pleaded for universal freedom. He quotes the sentiments of Theodore Parker and prays with bishop, Catholic priest, or rabbi, as he was at one with all, Rupert Hughes to the contrary notwithstanding; his conclusion that Lincoln, as well as Washington, had no religion and quoted religious formulæ for political purposes is unwarranted and without the slightest foundation. "By the help of an All-Wise Providence, I shall endeavor to do my duty, and I shall expect the continuance of your prayers for a right solution of our national difficulties and the restoration of our country to peace and prosperity," or "Take all of this Book," speaking of the Bible, "upon reason what you can and the balance on faith, and you will live and die a happier man," were not spoken for political effect.

Lincoln is at his best when he rights a great wrong, and equally sound and just in the setting forth of his reasons in each case. Whether it be the setting aside of Stanton's order to dismiss a patriotic soldier in the Army or when he vacates a harsh and unjust order made by Grant and denounces the idea of condemning a whole people for the sins of a few or when he protests against the maltreatment of Faris-El-Hakin, an agent in the employ of the American Missionary Society in Egypt, in those days when the victim of persecution was almost inaccessible, yet in all ploy of the American Missionary Society in Egypt, in those days when the victim of persecution was almost inaccessible, yet in all these cases Lincoln is heard and heeded in his efforts for a better these cases Lincoln is heard and heeded in his efforts for a better understanding among the adherents of the different religions. To those who are acquainted with his words and his deeds the religiosity of the man is so apparent that anyone who cares to examine the facts must become convinced; even the perversely blind must hear and understand.

Way back in 1858, when the outlook was as dismal as it ever was in this sad man's life, he finds comfort in the following thought.

"I have never professed an indifference to the honors of official station; and were I to do so now I should only make myself ridiculous. Yet I have never failed—do not now fail—to remember that in the Republican cause there is a higher aim than that of mere office. I have not allowed myself to forget that the abolition of the slave trade by Great Britain was agitated a hundred years before it was a final success; that the measure had its open fire-eating opponents, its stealthy 'don't care' opponents, its dollar-and-cent opponents, its inferior-race opponents, its Negro equality opponents, and its religion and good-order opponents; that all these opponents got offices and their adversaries got none. But I have also remembered that though they blazed like tallow candles for a century, at last they flickered in the socket, died out, candles for a century, at last they flickered in the socket, died out, stank in the dark for a brief season, and were remembered no more—even by the smell. Schoolboys know that Wilberforce and Granville Sharpe helped that cause forward, but who can now name a single man who labored to retard it? Remembering these things, I can not but regard it as possible that the higher object of this contest may not be completely attained within the term of my natural life; but I can not doubt either that it will come in due time. Even in this view I am proud, in my passing speck of time, to contribute an humble mite to that glorious consummation which my own poor eyes may not last to see."

How keen his disappointment at his repeated failures must have been, we have but to read one statement which just came to light:

"Twenty-two years ago Judge Douglas and I first became acquainted. We were both young then, he a trifle younger than I. Even then we were both ambitious; I, perhaps, quite as much so as he. With me the race of ambition has been a failure, a flat failure; with him it has been one of splendid success. His name fills the Nation and is not unknown even in foreign lands. I affect no contempt for the high eminence he has reached. So reached, that the oppressed of my species might have shared with me in the elevation, I would rather stand on that eminence than wear the richest crown that ever pressed a monarch's brow."

me in the elevation, I would rather stand on that eminence than wear the richest crown that ever pressed a monarch's brow."

His courage and fearlessness fitted him for his task.

"Slavery is wrong," he said in a speech at Cincinnati, in the free State of Ohio but in the immediate neighborhood of the slave State of Kentucky and to a mixed audience from both States. He was hissed for the words, and continued:

"Your hisses will not blow down the walls of justice. Slavery is wrong; the denial of that truth has brought on the angry conflict of brother with brother; it has kindled the fires of civil war in houses; it has raised the portents that overhang the future of our Nation. And be you sure that no compromise, no political arrangement with slavery, will ever last which does not deal with it as a great wrong."

But he has now suffered his last defeat at the hands of Douglas.

deal with it as a great wrong."

But he has now suffered his last defeat at the hands of Douglas. He captivates the Nation from the stage of Cooper Institute, where he announced that all men must be free and equal before the law or our land of promise could not endure. He is nominated and elected to the Presidency. He bids his neighbors farewell and journeys to Washington and starts on the road to fame. And then came his great first inaugural address—an appeal for a better understanding among all sections and all classes. And then the Emancipation Proclamation, which made all men free, and upon that deed he invoked the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God—and the chains of 4,000,000 slaves fell broken on that day.

And finally the benediction upon the great deliverance of his people—the second inaugural—the humble litany of a contrite heart.

Toward the end of his Presidency—the epic of America, yet to be appropriately told in poetry and song—when the giant was weary and tired and his features bore the signs of triumph in humility through suffering, his whole life passed before him as in a dream; he reflected in retrospect upon that life—though not long in years, yet crowded with epoch-making adventures as were few others—and concluded that his main life motif was to plant a rose where a thistle grew; and those days were well spent when he had pardoned an unfortunate, comforted a widow, protected an orphan, freed a race, and cemented the broken and warring fragments into a perpetual Union—the last great hone.

spent when he had pardoned an unfortunate, comforted a widow, protected an orphan, freed a race, and cemented the broken and warring fragments into a perpetual Union—the last great hope of the millions of the common people, whom he loved and for whom he offered up the final, the supreme sacrifice—the most precious life of the nineteenth century.

Lincoln the harmonizer indeed! Of what other man in public life in any country may it be justly said what is admitted by the universal chorus of the leaders of the people everywhere? Dr. Sun Yat Sen carried back to China the Gettysburg address, and the Manchu dynasty crumbled. "Thanks to Lincoln," says Prof. William Hung, "we have in China the beginnings of a republic." The voice in the wilderness on the estate of Yasnaya Polyana, Tolstoy, groups him with the Nazarene. We find him enshrined in the workingman's hut on the Volga and in the chancellors' study in the University of Jerusalem. The leader of 20,000 tradeunionists in India pays tribute to Lincoln, and says: "It was he who inspired me to take up the work for my people." Czechoslovakia was founded and is governed by a worthy disciple of Lincoln. Italy has taken Lincoln to her heart, and he is the hero of young Italy. France inscribed a medal to Lincoln, "Dedicated by the French democracy to Lincoln, honest man, who reestablished the Union, saved the Republic without veiling the Statue of Liberty." From the days of Emilio Castelar to President Zamora, of the new Republic of Spain, the same adoration as expressed by the former is put into practice by the latter. England claims him as her own among her famous sons facing Westminster Abbey. Germany's gifted sons, beginning with Carl Schurz and Doctor Canisius and Governor Koerner, have planted the seed of Lincoln's ideals in their own country. South America and South Africa as well were swept by the spirit of the Emancipator. And so the Great Harmonizer wins the hearts of all the races of the world, and will continue to win them in all future ages. By the time 2,000 ages. By the time 2,000 years have elapsed the giant figure may become to the world a symbol of the divine, and to our own coming generations he will for all time remain America's symbol of immortality.

BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU OF NEW YORK CITY AND INVESTIGATION OF BETTER BUSINESS BUREAUS AND NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I ask leave to have published in the RECORD three pamphlets entitled "The Growth of the Better Business Bureau of New York City,"
"A Protective Institution and its Origin," and "Before the Banking and Currency Committee of the United States Senate, in re Investigation of the Better Business Bureaus and New York Stock Exchanges."

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

THE GROWTH OF THE BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU OF NEW YORK CITY By James C. Auchincloss

This is certainly a great honor. I can not express my appreciation of this invitation to speak to you men of business. I realize my limitations and I hope you will bear with me and not expect too much. I wish I could do my subject justice, because it is a work you are all interested in and because it concerns business generally.

When I first became connected with the Better Business Bureau of New York City, little did I realize that it would now such as

When I first became connected with the Better Business Bureau of New York City, little did I realize that it would play such a part in the business life of our city. The scope of its work has grown enormously, and I believe soundly, and the results have justified the efforts expended in its development. This growth and this effectiveness could not have been possible without the support and encouragement of the business men of the city. This desire on their part to drive the rascal and crook out of their business has indeed been an inspiration to those of us who have had a voluntary connection with this work. And we have rehad a voluntary connection with this work. And we have re-ceived further inspiration in the devotion and the unselfish attitude of the staff of employees who have given always their best without thought of reward or favor. The rewards of this work are theirs, and they richly deserve them.

A FACT-FINDING ORGANIZATION

I would like to sketch briefly the life of the Better Business Bureau of New York to you. While it has been in existence for only a few years, its history is full of romance and entertainment as well as hard work, disappointments, and problems. These problems are not all solved yet. Indeed, I like to think of the Better Business Bureau of New York as only just started in its work. We have worked slowly to build a foundation, and now want to raise a superstructure which will embrace all fields of legitimate business.

As you doubtless know, the Better Business Bureau of New York is a fact-finding organization. It does not give opinions, but is ready to give facts to the public about business organizations or business men. It serves newspapers and banks and brokers, realestate firms and merchants, and any member of the public. It endeavors to protect the public by pointing out to advertisers extravagant and impossible claims, and thereby build up good will and confidence. It has a shopping service which reports to stores the inaccurate description of articles for sale, and inci-dentally gives a report to the store on the general aptitude of the sales person with whom it comes in contact. Its policy in seeking correction is to take up any criticism direct with the management, and it does not abandon persuasive measures except as a last resort. In the course of its work there have accumulated in its files thousands of names of individuals and corporations, in its files thousands of names of individuals and corporations, and frequently facts sought by responsible people or organizations are readily obtainable therefrom. It cooperates in the fullest degree with the public authorities, and I am happy to state that it has enjoyed the greatest cooperation from public officers, such as the attorney general of the State of New York and the United States district attorney. And the bureau is not organized for profit. None of its officers or directors receives a cent for his services in any form, shape, or manner.

And this is how it all started in New York: About eight years ago some of us down in the financial district decided that the grooks in the securities business were bringing disrepute to that ago some of us down in the financial district decided that the crooks in the securities business were bringing disrepute to that business, and something should be done to clean up the situation. It was also clear that a great deal of the public's money was being secured by the stock swindler and get-rick-quick rascal, and if this money could be turned into legitimate channels it would not only accrue to the benefit of our business but also to the general prosperity of the country. Mr. David F. Houston, then president of the Bell Telephone Securities Co. (Inc.), now president of the Mutual Life Insurance Co.; Mr. Lewis E. Pierson, then president of the Irving Trust Co., now chairman of its board; Mr. James Gilbert White, partner of J. G. White & Co.; Mr. J. Pulleyn, president of the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, and others, met and discussed the situation and studied the better business bureau movements already actively established in other cities. The better business bureaus were then under the control and sponsorship of the advertising federation; now they are quite independent organizations.

IN FIFTY-TWO CITIES

There are 52 bureaus organized in the United States and Canada, operating in 25 different States, Provinces, and the District of Columbia. While each bureau is quite independent and a separate organization, yet the bureaus exchange information and co-rate organization, yet the bureaus exchange information and cooperate with each other in every way possible.

It was arranged to establish a better-business bureau in New York, and Mr. H. J. Kenner, the first better-business bureau manager in the country, was secured from Minneapolis to start things going. The value of Mr. Kenner's leadership can not be overestimated. Without his courage, his wisdom and his patient, constructive effort, the bureau would have surely gone on the rocks in its first year. Funds were hard to secure. It was something new to New York, and had to prove its worth. We citizens of this town are a hard-boiled lot, and want to be shown before digging down into our pockets to support something new. And then again many business men were skeptical as to just how such an organization would affect their business. The clouds were thick and the gloom was deep, but Mr. Kenner stuck to it and at great personal sacrifice led us through the darkness into the light. Why, for months he and his lieutenants kept the thing alive great personal sacrifice led us through the darkness into the light. Why, for months he and his lieutenants kept the thing alive without receiving a cent of salary! He proved beyond the question of a doubt that the better-business bureau idea was a practical one and with proper and adequate support could be made effective. The board of governors of the New York Stock Exchange were impressed and proved their faith in the work by appropriating $100,000 to put the bureau on its feet and give it a chance to demonstrate its worth to the business world. Out of this appropriation actually $64,000 was paid by the exchange to the bureau. No secret has ever been made about this, and the exchange views with pride the part it was permitted to play in this work. A No secret has ever been made about this, and the exchange views with pride the part it was permitted to play in this work. A committee of bankers and brokers was then established, made up of such men as Mr. Gates McGarragh, then president of the Mechanics & Metals Bank, now president of the Bank of International Settlements; Mr. Thomas W. Lamont of J. P. Morgan & Co.; the late Seymour Cromwell, president of the Stock Exchange; Mr. Clarence Dillon, of Dillon, Read & Co.; Mr. Mortimer Schiff of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; Mr. A. A. Tilney, then president of the Bankers' Trust Co., and others. Under the auspices of this committee, funds were solicited from the banks, trust companies, brokers, and banking houses in this city. That was the start of the Better Business Bureau of New York, and ever since that time the activities of the investment or financial department of the bureau have been financed by subscriptions from the banks and brokerage been financed by subscriptions from the banks and brokerage houses in this city. Our budget for that department is about $70,000. We have paid all our bills and do not owe a cent. And, furthermore, we pay no commissions to anyone to collect money.

MERCHANTS COOPERATE

A few years after the establishment of the financial department, the merchandise department was organized. The work of this department, under the guidance of specially trained executives, deals mainly with the problems of merchants and the retail stores in the city. The bureau endeavors to aid these merchants by eliminating inaccurate advertising and unfair business tactics, and on many occasions the work of the bureau and the stand it has taken in certain situations has been supported and indorsed by the Federal Trade Commission.

The bureau tries to be fair and plays no favorites or politics. If there is cause to criticize the actions of our subscribers we do not hesitate to do so. This is always done in a friendly spirit, without malice, and frank discussion of the matter is invited. From time to time the bureau issues bulletins on various matters. Without question the bulletins have proved most effective in correcting a mistake that might have otherwise gone unheeded, resulting in a continuation of misrepresentation at the expense of the public. Generally when an inaccuracy is pointed out to a merchant a correction follows, and the bureau is thanked therefor, but on a few occasions some of our subscribers have withdrawn from the bureau. This is a pity, because we want to be an aid to the merchants in building up public trust and good will. This is difficult when merchants refuse to cooperate in the elimination of false advertising matter and inaccurate statements concerning the merchandise they offer for sale. I am happy to say, however, that the majority of the larger merchants in the city support the bureau and indorse its work. This is true also of the newspapers, who rely on us to a degree and are generous not only newspapers, who rely on us to a degree and are generous not only in their financial support but also in their news columns.

It is inevitable in the activities of the bureau that sometimes someone sets up a howl and claims all sorts of unrighteous actions on the part of the bureau. On every one of these occasions that has come to my attention, the howler has had an ax to grind or some dirty linen to conceal. We have been sued on more than one occasion, and never yet have we lost a suit.

If time would permit, I could tell you of many cases where the bureau has been active in preventing fraud and even in recovering losses for the victim.

THOUSANDS OF CASES

The day's work in the bureau's office brings all sorts of The day's work in the bureau's office brings all sorts of humanity in review. Widows, preachers, shysters, swindlers, business men—all sorts in all walks of life daily come to our attention. We try to help the worthy and make it hard for the crooks in every way possible. The monthly average of cases handled is 3,158, or 125 cases a day. We have a small staff, 18 in the financial and 18 in the merchandise section—36 in all. They work hard all day, and sometimes well into the night, at very moderate pay and no overtime. They are devoted to their work, and their loyalty is a great source of pride and inspiration.

In times like these, when we have experienced such depression and unsettlement in business, there is always present a great deal of discontent—a sort of feeling of dissatisfaction with the powers that be—and that dissatisfaction is reflected in the public's attitude toward organizations that are trying to maintain lic's attitude toward organizations that are trying to maintain an even balance and do something constructive for the body

Perhaps in the face of discouragement and hard times this is quite a natural feeling, but it puts those who have to bear the brunt of the criticism to a test as to their real character and the soundness of their efforts. In the midst of such a state of affairs it would indeed be unusual if the better-business bureau did not receive its share of criticism. As a matter of fact, if it were not criticized, it would tend to prove that the organization was of such an impotent character that it did not merit attention. The bureau has its critics, and the criticism comes from sources which are logical and to be expected. The rascal whose record and reputation is anything but savory, acting under the guise of a constructionist, has the opportunity to raise his objections and cry out that the bureau, through its relentless war waged against people of his type, will not permit him to make an honest living.

INCREASED VIGILANCE NECESSARY

The bureau to-day is being put to a greater test than ever before to aid in preventing the activities of the swindler and safeguard the public in their investments. In these times some stock promoters or business organizations who under normal conditions may follow practices free from suspicion in their business dealings, are more apt to be tempted by expediency, and lapse into practices which may be questionable, to say the least. The public mind, after the serious stock losses which have been suffered in the past year, is ready to listen to the glib arguments of the high-pressure salesman who paints a picture of return to the high-pressure salesman who paints a picture of return to prosperity by a rapid short cut to fortune. We are only too ready to recoup our losses, and the adroit stock swindler capitalizes that human weakness.

And in this city more than any other place in the United States the crooked stock promoter congregates and plies his trade. Thanks to the scrupulous care taken by the newspapers in accepting advertising, thanks to the past activities of the Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Watson Washburn, and the vigilance of Mr. Charles H. Tuttle when he was the United States attorney for the southern district of New York, these people have had a hard time of it. But this is no time to relax our vigilance or our efforts. If we are to drive out and keep out these people, if we are to protect the fair name of our business reputation, we must set an example to the rest of the country and let it be known that the business men of this city stand for honesty and fair dealing. fair dealing.

The bureau couldn't exist without the cooperation of such honored and honorable bodies as this. You have done the bureau a great honor in having me here with you to-day. In the name of the bureau, I thank you most sincerely.

A PROTECTIVE INSTITUTION AND ITS ORIGIN By E. H. H. Simmons

It is a very genuine pleasure for me to be present at this ninth annual meeting of the Better Business Bureau of New York City. Nine years is not a very long time, yet within that brief period the bureau has established a most impressive record of accomplishment in behalf of the American investing public. A common effort to suppress security swindling is no longer merely a pious wish or a temporary movement. Through the creation and growth of the better-business bureau, it has been crystallized into a permanent institution, without which the security business of to-day could not be conducted upon its present plane. It ness of to-day could not be conducted upon its present plane. It only remains for those of us who, like myself, have long watched the gratifying progress which the bureau has made, to congratulate its officers and administrators upon the courage and untiring energy which they have shown in the fight against fraud, and to lend such aid as we can in continuing, and if possible, intensifying this admirable work.

Since, as I have said, the bureau has become an established and indispensable institution in American business, it is interesting to recall the circumstances of its origin. The bureau was created in the troubled years which followed the conclusion of the great war. The vast Liberty loans had suddenly created millions of new security investors. But at the same time the shortages developed under war conditions led to a tremendous speculation in commodities and securities and a new crop of security promoters. American finance, as well as American business, had not moters. American finance, as well as American business, had not completed the necessary transformation from war-time conditions to those of peace. Bucketshops were not the furtive back-alley things they have since become, but in some cases were imposing concerns, which brazenly challenged the legitimate stockholder. The newly created class of small American security investors was, of course, directly menaced by these conditions. Thus, in addition to the unavoidable risks inherent in business, which at that time were naturally great, the inexperienced investor, with his small holdings of Liberty bonds, had also to avoid the often plausible and deceptive allurements of the fake security promoter and the bucketshop keeper. and the bucketshop keeper.

The potential dangers of this situation were clearly realized in the stock exchange as early as December, 1918—only a month after the armistice. (On January 3, 1919, the law committee of the New York Stock Exchange discussed the matter, and adopted a resolution calling for a publicity campaign by the exchange to warn the public against stock swindlers.) At the same time, Mr. H. G. S. Noble, then president of the New York Stock Exchange, addressed a letter to prominent representatives of various institutions in the financial district, directing their attention to the existing danger of security frauds, and calling a meeting at the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York to discuss the defensive and preventive measures against them. At this meeting, held February 17, 1919, a standing committee was appointed which developed into the Business Men's Anti-Stock Swindling League, under the chairmanship of the late Myron T. Herrick. The efforts of this committee were directed

In effectively fighting the security swindler, sole dependence can not be placed upon purely educational methods, essential though they always are and will be. It is not enough to warn the intended victims—action must also be taken against the swindlers themselves. So the Business Men's Anti-Stock Swindling League discovered. In addition, the bear market of 1919–1921 introduced into the situation the dangerous factor of the bucketshop operations—a species of fraud which can only be checked by an expert and militant organization. In the 14 months' period which began August 23, 1921, there occurred a vast bucketshop debacle attended by the collapse of 166 so-called brokerage firms. If swindling on this tremendous scale was to be prevented in the future, it seemed obvious that new and more direct measures must be taken. Meanwhile, the problem of preserving the benefits of their customer-ownership campaigns became a matter of serious concern to several large American business corporations, and especially to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. In consequence there followed an effort to organize more definitely against security swindling.

A series of conversations between Messrs, D. F. Houston, president of the Bell Telephone Securities Co., and R. T. H. Halsey and J. R. Westerfield, of the New York Stock Exchange staff, were followed by a number of dinner conferences given by Mr. Halsey to representatives of the institutions most deeply concerned with the virulent stage of the swindling evil which had developed. These dinner meetings, which eventually included the national vigilance committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, culminated on May 1, 1922, in a dinner given by Mr. Halsey at the University Club, attended by leading bankers, newspaper editors, and stock exchange members. At this meeting Mr. Seymour L. Cromwell, then president of the New York Stock Exchange, pledged the necessary fund

York City and its running expenses for the first year for a sum not to exceed $100,000. This pledge was later formally ratified by the exchange and the bureau was incorporated.

The first officers of the bureau were: David F. Houston, president: H. J. Kenner, managing secretary; Stanley J. Quinn, dent; H. J. Kenner, managing secretary; Stanley J. Quinn, treasurer.

The first advisory council members were: David F. Houston, chairman, president Bell Telephone Securities Co. (Inc.); R. T. H. Halsey, Tefft, Halsey & Co.; Lewis E. Pierson, chairman of board, Irving Bank-Columbia Trust Co.; John J. Pulleyn, president Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank; Gates W. McGarrah, chairman of board, The Mechanics & Metals National Bank; John H. Puelicher, president Marshall & Ilsley Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; George W. Hodges, Remick, Hodges & Co.; Herbert S. Houston, publisher Our World; James Gilbert White, president J. G. White & Co. (Inc.); William H. Barr, president National Founders Association; H. D. Robbins, president H. D. Robbins & Co.; Russell R. Whitman, publisher New York Commercial; Julius H. Barnes, Barnes-Ames Co.; A. C. Pearson, treasurer United Publishers Corporation; Henry R. Hayes, vice president, Stone & Webster (Inc.).

It was, then, only after several false starts and many time-consuming conferences that the better business bureau was finally established. Yet, looking back upon what we may call the prenatal period of its existence, it seems apparent that this early period of trial and error in discovering effective fraud-fighting methods, gave the bureau itself much valuable experience at its very start, and enlisted in its behalf a support from many quarters which has been essential to its steady and successful growth. It also creaked the better business bureau in its work of fraud fight.

very start, and enlisted in its behalf a support from many quarters which has been essential to its steady and successful growth. It also enabled the better business bureau, in its work of fraud fighting, to represent the whole financial community rather than any single institution. Much ado has sometimes been made over the fact that the New York Stock Exchange has been all along a strong moral and financial supporter of the bureau. There has never been any secret about this situation, and actually it reflects credit both upon the bureau and upon the exchange. But even the slightest knowledge concerning the organization and work of the bureau should at once indicate how truly representative of the whole financial and business community the bureau is and always has been, and how completely in the actual interests of the American public its activities have consistently been.

III

Once organized, the better business bureau lost no time in getting to work. By the end of even the first year of its existence, it had under the capable and expert guidance of Mr. Kenner attained an enviable record of useful work thoroughly and vigor-ously done. Through the cooperation of industrial organizations many thousands of educational pamphlets dealing with fraudulent stock promotions were placed in the hands of the public. Pubstock promotions were placed in the hands of the public. Publicity concerning proven swindles was spread in the news columns of the press. Metropolitan newspapers gladly cooperated with the bureau in refusing the use of their advertising columns to doubtful promotions or shady characters. In addition, many investigations of doubtful promotions were conducted, and frequently the results were laid before the appropriate governmental officials—especially, of course, before the Post Office Department of the Federal Government, the attorney general of the State of New York, or the district attorney of New York. Time and again the ability of the bureau to nip frauds in the bud, before they had time to do very serious damage, was demonstrated. The results of the early work by the bureau were attested by Deputy Attorney General Wilbur W. Chambers, in a telegram to the bureau dated December 27, 1923, which read as follows:

The subsequent history and achievements of the better-business bureau are too generally known to require recital by me. In the mercantile as well as in the financial field its work has gone steadily on, with results at once gratifying to its sponsors and very beneficial to the investing and consuming public. The bureau has surmounted the initial difficulties which inevitably face any such cooperative organization. It has made a real and permanent place cooperative organization. It has made a real and permanent place for itself in the mechanism of American business. It is no longer a mere project but an actuality with a definite record of accomplishment. It deserves the hearty support of the entire business community, not only for what it hopes to do but for what it has already done.

It is naturally in extensive speculative booms, when public optimism and also public credulity are at their height, that the greatest opportunities for swindling are afforded to the seller of fraudulent securities. Nevertheless, we all must recognize times of depression have their characteristic swindles, too. Strangely enough, it is often the investor who has already lost a large proportion of his money who is most reckless with his remaining funds, because he wishes by a lucky stroke to recoup his losses. But even if it is generally harder to sell either legitimate or illegitimate securities during a period of declining prices, at such times there is apt to reappear that other menace to sound finance—the bucket shop. It has, I think, been generally true in the past that bucket shops can flourish only when prices are constantly falling, since the bucket-shop keeper is, so to speak, regularly short of his customer's long stock. Certainly it was during 1920 and 1921 that the last extensive outbreak of bucketing occurred. It is also true that losses through security swindles are felt more severely in a depression than during a boom. Obviously the need for safeguarding the American security investor in all felt more severely in a depression than during a boom. Obviously the need for safeguarding the American security investor in all possible ways increases in proportion as his surplus funds diminish. In times of depression, no less than in times of prosperity, security frauds will be attempted and eternal vigilance must be the price of suppressing them. We need the bureau now as much or more than we needed it in 1928 and 1929.

The bureau is to be congratulated for pursuing its useful work so steadily and so intelligently during these recent trying months. It has countered the remarkable agility and completely realistic resourcefulness of security swindlers with methods equally flexible and equally without illusion. This is particularly gratifying, for it is during periods when public opinion is uncertain and bewildered concerning security values, that the security swindler is apt to reap his evil harvest.

Undoubtedly there has been entirely too much public hysteria recently, not only concerning stock prices but also concerning the outlook of business itself. Frequently the same persons who so loudly proclaimed a new era of unlimited prosperity two or three years ago are now equally convinced that the end of civilization is at hand, and that while time still remains we had better sell the whole country back to the Indians for what it will bring. The fight against security frauds as well as many other necessary corrective processes in American business itself would be considerably simplified if there were less of this sort of thing. For, after all, depressions are scarcely a new experience for this country. Even our own generation has managed to survive several of them. In fact, anyone who ever attended a Sunday school must have heard of Joseph's experience with the seven fat and seven lean years in ancient Egypt, and should realize that civilization has ever since that remote time been undergoing booms and depressions of one sort or another. None of us, of course, like depressions, and few, sort or another. None of us, of course, like depressions, and few, if any, of us, I think, were able to foresee the coming of this one. But now that it is here we should, after all, be able to recognize it as a quite unpleasant but by no means new or unfamiliar experience, from which we have survived in the past, and from which we will once again emerge in due course.

we will once again emerge in due course.

Unfortunately, however, credulity is not destroyed by depressions. With many people, disillusionment is only too apt to produce an intense and unreasonable craving for easy cures and magical remedies. The quest for wealth no less than for health has its medicine men, and in times of trouble occurs their greatest chance to attract attention. Few of these promoters of economic nostrums are actually frauds. Almost always they sincerely believe in their quite worthless remedies. And yet the energy wasted in pursuing, and sometimes in trying, such false cures, like the funds wasted through the activities of stock swindlers, is only too apt to deepen and intensify the depression.

the funds wasted through the activities of stock swindlers, is only too apt to deepen and intensify the depression.

The basic reasons for booms and depressions are only too inadequately understood, either by the public or the experts. Yet this fact need not unduly astonish us, for very few of the really important things in life are thoroughly understood by any of us. The truth about business cycles seems to be that they result from a very complicated series of stresses and strains which are more or less inevitable in civilized society. Just as what geologists call a "fault" will sometimes produce earthquakes and landslides, so in the economic world the equilibrium of business will occasionally be upset and disaster temporarily will ensue. Nevertheless, painful though panics and depressions may be, they are really curative processes, and herald the advent of firmer foundations upon which to create future periods of prosperity.

The reestablishment of equilibrium in the economic world, and the repair of damages wrought by unsettlement, however, are bound to take time if the work is to be lasting. But it is in these zero hours of industry and finance that future victory and triumph are being organized. Such periods of trial may injure faint hearts and shallow beliefs. But they also call forth from the great rank and file of our people those ancient and invaluable human qualities of courage, persistence, and faith which in the past have created everything of genuine value in the world.

OUR BUSINESS STANDARD

Brief and argument by Clark G. Hardeman

One hundred thousand dollars was raised 10 years ago (June, 1922) by the investment banker members of Wall Street, who in collaboration with members of the New York Stock Exchange, expected to use, and did use, the money for the purpose of putting over even a more gigantic control of our money and our industries and a more complete control and domination of our labor, and this banker-broker scheme of 1922 is slowly but surely seeping through to the public, through the facts that have been developed by this honorable committee of the United States Senate and the further facts that are ready to be laid before that committee under sworn facts that are ready to be laid before that committee under sworn evidence.

The billions of dollars of foreign bonds floated in the United States by these Wall Street bankers since 1922 and now estmated as being worth around 30 cents to nothing on the dollar—bonds that these bankers bought at 90 cents and unloaded on us for 100 cents on the dollar—is but the one side of the story and represents the bankers' big profiteering on their joint scheme of 1922 with the stock exchange members when these two big financial agencies raised the $100,000 jack pot of 1922 and bought the better-business-bureau system, which system otherwise would have been their (the bankers and brokers) nemesis through a nation-wide distribution of data that would have prevented the exploitation of the wealth of the people of the United States, rather than what the better-business-bureau system has been since that time, to wit, a mere puppet of these brokers and bankers. The billions of dollars of foreign bonds floated in the United bankers.

THE BETTER-BUSINESS BUREAUS

You, automatically, may want to know something about these better-business bureaus and the necessity of these agencies being purchased body and soul by these bankers and brokers before they started on their pilgrimage of plunder of the then your wealth and mine, which wealth has now, in 1932, vanished into thin air or is laying dormant in the vaults of our financial wizards, the money barons of Wall Street, thus preventing industry from opening up and thereby making beggars of the labor of this great country. this great country.

First, let me call your specific attention to the fact that these financial wizards always carry with them the dictum that we or-dinary citizens are not intelligent enough—plain dumb may be a better word—to see the real truth in any financial proposition, a better word—to see the real truth in any financial proposition, and, being plain dumb, we are the prize suckers of any continent, and hence any agency that otherwise would give fair warning to us must be placed where they could not talk; the almighty dollar seals many a tongue and that $100,000 Wall Street money sealed the tongue of the better-business bureaus in so far as the bond and stock racket of these bankers and brokers were concerned.

The better-business-bureau system is the child of the vigilance committees of the advertising clubs of the world. "Truth in advertising" was not only their slopen but was in fact the policy

The better-business-bureau system is the child of the vigilance committees of the advertising clubs of the world. "Truth in advertising" was not only their slogan but was, in fact, the policy of these original vigilance committees for some 10 or more years of their early life. At the beginning of their existence—about 1912—and for a number of years, these vigilance committees performed nobly and well, and the public soon learned to rely upon statements given out by them and any advertisement approved by them, and the public naturally began to believe in advertising copy and to rely upon these agencies for truth. The public confidence being won by these advertising men, and none but advertisers and advertising medias were eligible to membership in those early days, the better-business bureau fell heir to one of the richest inheritances—confidence of the public—when the name of these vigilance committees was changed to read better-business of these vigilance committees was changed to read better-business bureaus. For several years after the change to that high-sounding title, better-business bureau, these bureaus functioned along the lines originally outlined and justly earned the reputation of honesty and truthfulness these bureaus had in 1922.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE BECOMES THE PATRON SAINT OF THE BETTER-BUSINESS BUREAU

On January 3, 1919, only a month or so after the armistice, the law committee of the New York Stock Exchange discussed the fact that American finance, as well as American business, had not completed the necessary transformation from war-time conditions to those of peace, and H. G. S. Noble, then president of the stock exchange, addressed a letter to prominent representatives of various institutions in the financial district, calling a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of New York State, which was held February 17, 1919, and resulted in a standing committee being appointed whose efforts were directed mainly toward education in the interest of sound investments and the avoidance of fraudulent securities. (You know what that education costs you.)

You will better appreciate the significance of all that has followed if I quote from an address by E. H. H. Simmons, formerly president of the New York Stock Exchange, at an annual meeting of the better-business bureau on May 5, 1931, and in which address he reviewed what took place between January and June, address he reviewed what took place between January and June, 1922. Mr. Simmons said:

"A series of conversations between Messrs. D. F. Houston, president of the Bell Telephone Securities Co., and R. T. H. Halsey and J. R. Westerfield, of the New York Stock Exchange staff, were followed by a number of dinner conferences given by Mr. Halsey to representatives of the institutions most deeply concerned with the virulent stage of the swindling evil which had developed. These dinner meetings, which eventually included the national vigilance committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, culminated on May 1, 1922, in a dinner given by Mr. Halsey at the University Club, attended by leading bankers, newspaper editors, and stock exchange members. At this meeting Mr. Seymour L. Cromwell, then president of the New York Stock Exchange, pledged the necessary funds from the exchange to underwrite the formation of the Better Business Bureau of New York City and its running expenses for the first year, for a sum not to exceed $100,000. This pledge was later formally ratified by the exchange, and the bureau was incorporated."

To-day you will find that James C. Auchincloss, a governor of the New York Stock Exchange and an active worker in organizing and raising the money for the better-business bureau, is the present president of the Better Business Bureau of New York City and that H. J. Kenner, formerly the eastern representative of the virilance committee of the Advertising Clubs of the World, is the

and that H. J. Kenner, formerly the eastern representative of the vigilance committee of the Advertising Clubs of the World, is the secretary and general manager of the same bureau.

You recall, no doubt, the evidence before this committee concerning Halsey, Stuart & Co. and their recent indictment for fraud in the sale of the Wardman bonds.

The condition of the United States in 1921 can not be better portrayed than was done by Mr. Herbert Claiborne Pell in the December, 1932, issue of Plain Talk. Mr. Pell said:

"In 1921, the Harding administration, hat in hand turned the United States Government over to the business interests. At that time we were the richest country in the world. There was a higher standard of living for all of our citizens; our manufacturing power was greater than that of any other pation in the high ing power was greater than that of any other nation in the his-"Measured either absolutely or per capita, no State had ever approached the United States in economic wealth. Our position in the world, relative to other nations, had never been exceeded since the days of the Roman Empire.

"There was not a nation among our former allies or among our former enemies which did not look to us for inspiration, for guidance, and for assistance. We were the most courted, the most popular, and the most important country in the world.

Since 1921 what has happened? You know how many millions the Wall Street bankers extracted from us through foreign bond sales. You also have a vague idea of the millions the Wall Street sales. You also have a vague idea of the millions the wall street brokers extracted from us through their inflated stock sales.

Do you know that with the aid of the better-business bureaus—bought by them in 1922 for $100,000—these bankers and brokers obtained, either by the passage of or an amendment to the blue sky laws in some forty-odd States, exemptions that prevent their prosecution for obtaining money under false pretense or fraud? Well, here is the exemption taken from section 7726, Missouri securities act, word for word:

"Securities exempt from provisions of this chapter: Except as hereinafter provided, the provisions of this chapter shall not apply to any security which is within any of the following classes of securities:

ply to any security which is within any of the following classes of securities:

"* * * (b) Any security issued or guaranteed by any foreign government with which the United States is at the time of the sale or offer of sale thereof maintaining diplomatic relations, or by any State, Province, or political subdivision thereof having the power of taxation or assessment, which security is recognized at the time it is offered for sale in this State as a valid obligation by such foreign government or by such State, Province, or political subdivision thereof issuing the same.

"* * * (f) Securities which at the time of the sale thereof are issued and fully listed upon duly organized stock exchanges to be approved by the commissioner, and securities senior to any security so listed or represented by subscription rights which have been so listed upon any of such exchanges, and evidences of indebtedness guaranteed by any company the common capital stock of which is so listed upon any of such exchanges."

These exemptions permitted all of those foreign bonds (now mostly worthless) and all of those infiated stocks to be sold to you by these bankers and brokers without fear of prosecution.

The puppet of Wall Street—better-business bureau—exposed not a single one of these gigantic swindles which to-day, in 1932, causes 12,000,000 honest citizens to be walking our streets begging for a crust of bread, but on the other hand these better-business bureaus gave impetus to the fleecing of the public by changing their sloggen "Truth in advertising" to read "Before you invest—for a crust of bread, but on the other hand these better-business bureaus gave impetus to the fleecing of the public by changing their slogan "Truth in advertising" to read "Before you invest—Investigate"—"See your banker or broker or the better-business bureau"—"Buy only listed stocks."

The importance of this slogan change to the bankers and to these brokers who raised and paid the better-business bureau the $100,000 in 1922 and who have annually contributed large sums to these bureaus for their same selfish purposes will be more readily understood if you read a statement issued by the St. Louis bureau in July, 1928, which is as follows:

" HALF MILLION INQUIRIES RECEIVED BY BUREAUS IN YEAR

"The vast influence of the national and more than 45 local better-business bureaus can be realized from figures just compiled which show that during the past year more than half a million inquiries on financial and merchandise subjects have been million inquiries on financial and merchandise subjects have been received by the various component parts of the bureau movement. How many millions of dollars have been saved naturally can not be computed. The St. Louis bureau has been handling about 1,100 inquiries per month. The bureaus have all urged the public to follow the "Before you invest—investigate" slogan. Evidently the public is following the advice."

And from the same source the following instructions:

"The investor was urged to remember that only a small proportion of financial institutions were questionable; that the way to differentiate was to get facts from a reliable source, such as a bank, an investment dealer, etc.—mentioning as an alternate source of information the Better Business Bureau of St. Louis.

These half million prospective investors in 1928 were directed by

These half million prospective investors in 1928 were directed by these bureaus to go and see their banker or broker, and you readily appreciate the fact that Mr. Broker, protected by the blue-sky exemption, put these half million suckers on their own books with their inflated "listed" stocks. Millions and millions of our dollars were thus diverted from the development of our legitimate indus-were thus diverted from the development of our legitimate industries into a mere gambling den where only the sucker would lose. Small wonder it is that you see such men as Henry R. Hays, vice president of Stone-Webster & Blodgett (Inc.), and former president of the Investment Bankers Association, saying:

"The better-business bureau is a necessity to economic and social progress. * * * We have a common cause and I am proud to say that in a small way I am allied with you men who are the marine corns of the business world."

proud to say that in a small way I am allied with you men who are the marine corps of the business world."

Or that you hear Mr. E. H. H. Simmons, former president of the New York Stock Exchange, saying in 1931:

"A common effort to suppress security swindling is no longer merely a pious wish of a temporary movement. Through the creation and growth of the better-business bureau, it has been crystallized into a permanent institution, without which the security business of to-day could not be conducted upon its present plane."

Or as was said by a prominent State official, Deputy Attorney

Or as was said by a prominent State official, Deputy Attorney General Wilbur W. Chambers: "Have placed great dependence upon the better-business bureau

"Have placed great dependence upon the better-business bureau for assistance in obtaining evidence relative to fraudulent securities cases. I have found its work of great value, its representatives reliable and very efficient, and its information trustworthy."

Most certainly these bureaus can cite you to many minor fraudulent schemes that they have exposed and I pat them on their back for these limited good deeds just as I give Capone full credit for maintaining his "free soup" kitchen. Credit, however, for one or more good deeds does not justify either Capone or the bureaus in maintaining their rackets.

THE BUREAU RACKET

Having so thoroughly and completely secured control of the having so thoroughly and completely secured control of the investment dollars of our country, it was only the use of common intelligence for these financiers of Wall Street to divert their racket into every line of business activity. Bleeding the public through the sale of almost valueless foreign bonds and inflated stocks is directly tied by these bankers, brokers, and better-business bureaus to their attempt to dominate and control private industry, prevent the development of our natural resources and in a large measure act as a deterrent for speedy return of normal business

I will outline the evidence supporting the charges that the

I will outline the evidence supporting the charges that the better-business-bureau system—the puppet of the stock exchange and investment bankers—is the twentieth century star racket.

In a statement made by a former attorney general of New York on January 23, 1926, before the bar association of New York City, this gentleman, Mr. Ottinger, showed that the bureaus obtained two highly prized benefits as a result of their, the bureau's, preparing their own cases for the attorney general's office that the bureau wanted prosecuted, instead of the attorney general's office doing that work for which he and his own office force were paid. were paid.

It helped the bureaus to build up a record of performance, and obtain favorable newspaper publicity. And it helped the bureaus in their prosecution of some business industry who would refuse of those who did contribute to it.

On June 25, 1932, Mr. Frank J. Meehan, an assistant attorney general of New York, frankly admitted to me that his office had to permit the work of preparing cases to be left with the better-business bureau for the reason that his office did not have suf-ficient money to make the investigations, and it naturally follows that the preparation of a case was entirely discretionary with the bureau and if this is so, it is readily apparent how great a weapon a bureau has to carry on its racket and force donations to its money chest. It will make interesting evidence if Mr. Meehan will appear and show from the records of his office the number of

A typical example of better-business bureau prosecution of a company who had for years refused to pay cash tribute to the bureau racket was seen in St. Louis in October, 1932, when George S. Langland, merchandise manager of the St. Louis bureau, caused the arrest of H. S. Goldberg and W. A. Leopold of the Lincoln home furnishers home furnishers.

This concern being unable to get a favorable new lease from its landlord, and having been hard hit by the present depression, decided to close its doors. Large display advertisements were given the daily papers of St. Louis on September 8, 1932, stating among other things, the following:

"Sale starts Friday promptly at 9 a. m. 'Rain or shine.' Our entire stock of newest 1932 quality furniture, radios, stoves, rugs, lamps, electric refrigerators, etc., will be sold. We must vacate by midnight, September 30."

All goods that had not been disposed of on September 30 were

All goods that had not been disposed of on September 30 were being removed on October 1, and the removal continued without stopping until everything had been taken from their premises and were stored pending a sale in bulk.

The Better Business Bureau promptly grabbed at a straw and began prosecution for false advertising—the store had advertised it would vacate September 30. The store did not vacate until a week later, hence the bureau claimed the advertised statement was false, as shown by the following headline from the Better Business Bureau Bulletin of October 10, 1932, to wit:

"Going out of business" sale of Lincoln home furnishers widely advertised to terminate on September 30 continues into October. Newspapers and radio stations refuse advertising. State advertising law violated. Warrants charging fraudulent advertising issued at direction of Prosecuting Attorney Harry P. Rosecan."

What a glorious (?) chance for the Better Business Bureau to get revenge for the previous refusal of these men to contribute to their racket.

Messrs. Goldberg and Leopold appeared ready for trial on November 25, 1932, before Hon. Edward E. Butler, judge, Court of Criminal Correction of the city of St. Louis, and were promptly found not guilty immediately the Better Business Bureau closed its prosecuting evidence. Remarks of the court, as quoted in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of the same date, contain these pertinent statements:

statements:

"At the conclusion of testimony by witnesses for the Better Business Bureau, including its merchandising manager, George S. Langland, Judge Butler told Langland he thought the Better Business Bureau was 'going a little too far' in bringing these charges. Neither Goldberg nor Leopold was called to the stand.

"When Langland and other witnesses admitted the company of the stand of the company of the stand of the stand of the stand.

when Langland and other witnesses admitted the company had actually gone out of business October 11, Judge Butler said, 'I think these charges are an outrage. These people may not have been able to get out by September 30. If that is the kind of thing the Better Business Bureau is doing, it doesn't look good to me."

From such a condition as above stated, and the same condition applies in other cities policed by these bureaus, you can see how these bureaus have usurped the functions of our governmental agencies, how they force their way into our stores, factories, offices, and other industries and search and seize matter that is directly contrary to our Constitution, and search and seizure can not be done by our duly elected or appointed authorities without a done by our duly elected or appointed authorities without a warrant.

I quote from a statement by Mr. E. C. Reigel, of New York, which is a part of the evidence he has furnished the Banking and Currency Committee, as follows:

"In this brazen attempt of Wall Street to subvert government, the Government itself has offered no resistance. The defense of constitutional government has been made entirely by private citizens contributing to this effort. Formal charges and appeal to Government authorities has been of no avail. Not until the Senate investigating committee interested itself has there been one ear that would listen to the friends and upbuilders of civil government."

Mr. Reigel has supplied this committee with hundreds of pages of facts and I refer to them as fully supporting our position on this point. These facts are too voluminous to be quoted and a repetition is entirely unnecessary.

The exercise of regulatory or police power is an exclusive prerogative of government and when a better-business bureau attempts to take over these agencies of our Government it is an offense to society that transcends all evils which they profess to regulate. to regulate.

When these bureaus usurp these powers for their own predatory purposes it leaves them without any moral quality of justification.

Permitting private agencies to function as quasi-governmental agencies is contrary to the Constitution and is an opening wedge that may well lead to more serious breaches of and disrespect for our Bill of Rights.

for our Bill of Rights.

There is no justification for privateers, racketeers, or clans to enter the business of governmental regulations and the almighty dollar has not yet reached the place where it, or its controlled agency, is superior to the Constitution of these United States. In 1925 the battery manufacturers, aided and abetted by the National Better Business Bureau, to whom these battery manufacturers were paying regular tribute, opened its war guns on the battery solution manufacturers. The following quotation is from a circular issued by the National Battery Manufacturing Association headquarters, 17 West Forty-second Street, New York City: City:

" MARCH 8, 1926.

["Confidential Bulletin Vol. 1, No. 56]

"The following communication has been received from the National Better Business Bureau and will probably be of interest to you. Therefore, I am sending it out in bulletin form for your information and check.

"BATTERY SOLUTION ADVERTISERS

"Since February 11, 1925, we understand that the 26 concerns hereinafter named, who formerly advertised and sold battery solutions of one type or another, have gone out of business, or out of the battery-solution business. Should information as to renewed activities on the part of any of them come to your attention, you are requested to communicate promptly with us."

How much money was paid by these members of the National Battery Manufacturing Association to the national and local bet-ter-business bureaus to kill off this competition?

PAF MANUFACTURING CO., GREENVILLE, ILL.

PAF MANUFACTURING CO., GREENVILLE, ILL.

These self-proclaimed police powers are not always successful in killing competition for their contributors as was evident by the unsuccessful efforts of the better-business bureau to ruin the spark-plug business of the Paf Manufacturing Co. Attempt was made to prevent all national advertising of this spark-plug company by the National Better Business Bureau and when it failed in that effort it went before the Federal Trade Commission and had that august body issue one of its famous "show cause" orders why the commission should not enter a "Cease and desist order" and prevent the use of the mail to Paf Manufacturing Co. Mr. Greffoz, president of the Paf Manufacturing Co., licked these bureaus mercilessly before the Federal Trade Commission, who gave him a clean bill of health, and he is ready to produce his evidence before the Senate investigating committee. Incidentally, this company has been turning out some 70,000 spark plugs a week this year. week this year.

How much money was paid to these bureaus to try to kill that

FIRESTONE TIRE & RUBBER CO.

The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. and Sears, Roebuck & Co., who The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. and Sears, Roebuck & Co., who are known to all of us, were both members of and heavy contributors of cash to the national and local better-business bureaus and I am advised that Sears' donations exceeded Firestone by many thousands of dollars annually.

It is small wonder that when Sears attempted to have the advertising copy of Firestone refused by all advertising media, the better-business bureau did nothing about it, especially since Firestone had some specific charges to make about the false advertising of Sears, Roebuck.

quote from a Firestone bulletin issued in September, 1931:

"Not content with grossly misrepresenting facts in its retail tire advertising; not content with twisting and distorting the meaning of the code of ethics promulgated by the National Better Business Bureau for guidance of all tire manufacturers, distributors, and advertisers; not content with constant and persistent utors, and advertisers; not content with constant and persistent resort to sales and advertising tactics palpably disparaging to competition and misleading to the consuming public, Chicago's big catalogue and cut-price house, Sears, Roebuck & Co., now has gone farther and has actually been caught in the act of selling its tires fraudulently and under direct misrepresentation and false pretenses. * * We caught Sears, Roebuck with the goods on them. We bought a Sears, Roebuck tire under the false misrepresentation of that company's employees. We purchased a 29 by 5.50 Sears, Roebuck Super Allstate tire for $13.35 upon the direct and repeated representations of Sears, Roebuck employees that said tire contained 7-ply construction with seven full plies extending from bead to bead, when in reality Sears, Roebuck & Co., does not have a tire of 7-ply construction in its whole bag of tricks. * * And Edward L, Greene, manager of the National Better Business Bureau doesn't do a thing about it except condone the Sears, Roebuck offenses through lack of action, yet he turns right around to use Sears, Roebuck as a nice fat ambush from beright around to use Sears, Roebuck as a nice fat ambush from behind which to do his shooting at legitimate tire manufacturers. It looks to us as if Chicago's big catalogue and cut-price houses have finally gotten Greene bluffed, or coaxed, around to the point where he and the National Better Business Bureau, instead of serving all he and the National Better Business Bureau, instead of serving all business impartially, have now become the tool of special interests. * * * We have in our possession the tire we bought from Sears, Roebuck in Camden. We have photographs of the cross section Sears, Roebuck said was 7 ply and the same as the tire they sold us (which was a 6-ply casing). We have the receipt for that tire. All this evidence is at Mr. Greene's disposal. We'll make sworn statements for him. We'll help him run the matter down. Here's a chance for him to push a real prosecution. How about it, Mr. Greene—are you game?"

Mr. Greene—general manager of the National Better Business

Mr. Greene—are you game?

Mr. Greene, general manager of the National Better Business Bureau, was not game. He failed and refused to do anything about it for he had too much money coming to his bureau from Sears, Roebuck & Co.

Mr. Reigel in his brief Predatory Practices of the Better Business Bureau, already on file with the Senate committee, cites the following cases which I believe warrant a repetition.

AMERICAN CIGAR CO.

"This corporation was a member of the National Better Business Bureau but withdrew when criticized by the bureau. It was attacked on two advertising campaigns, that of Lucky Strike cigarette and Cremo cigar.

"The Lucky Strike campaign roused the ire of candy and other sweets vendors and even Senator Smoor took an active interest in the Senate and before the Federal Trade Commission in denouncing the campaign 'Reach for a Lucky Instead of a Sweet.' The interests offended by the campaign were so many and powerful that the bureau was induced to act even against a mem-powerful that the bureau was induced to act even against a member and after the withdrawal of the tobacco company, it was, of course, no loss to put out late bulletins on the Cremo Cigar spit campaign, at the behest of its tobacco subscribers alone. "Both campaigns were reported to the Federal Trade Commission by the National Better Business Bureau and the commission in its dutiful way cited the tobacco company but neither case came to a hearing until the company had run the campaigns their allotted period and were ready to drop them, and attorneys

"The interesting phase of these bureau attacks was the demonstration that it is absolutely impotent against a larger advertiser. It could only bellow and plead but no harm was done because the advertising appropriation of this advertiser is so large that no medium would strike it out no matter what the bureau said. A member of the bureau expressing the hopelessness of the attack said, 'We are like a yellow dog yelping at their heels.'

"Edward L. Greene, general manager of the National Better Business Bureau, confessed that mercenary motives rather than professed ethics are the secret of the bureau movement and that the bureaus are able only to stop the advertising of smaller advertisers when he said: 'The advertising appropriations of the American Tobacco Co. have perverted the judgment and character of the advertising industry. Advertising executives should ask themselves the question:

themselves the question;
"Could an advertiser with a nominal appropriation have pub lished the objectionable advertising incorporated in the 'Reach for a Lucky Instead of a Sweet' and the present 'spit-tip' Cremo cigar advertising, as carried on by the American Tobacco Co. and its subsidiaries, and placed by Lord, Thomas & Logan?

"Following the specific bulletins the bureau put out a general denunciation entitled 'Advertising Practices' of the American Tobacco Co. cataloguing its various sins which undoubtedly would have been left unmentioned if the tobacco company had not behave been left unmentioned if the tobacco company had not become too successful and too offensive to other bureau members.

"After remarking the biased and distorted nature of the bureau's bulletin, an evil quite common to these alleged investigators, the American Tobacco Co. states in its answer to the Federal Trade Commission as follows:

"'The National Better Business Bureau is a self-constituted body and its name is self-chosen. The evidence which the bureau published in its bulletin, when examined, shows that its conclusions were based upon an obviously inadequate investigation which, though inadequate, was at least sufficient to prove that the bureau's criticism of the American Cigar Co.'s advertising was unwarranted and that the risk described in Cremo advertising did exist. Having made an inadequate investigation, the bureau failed to take proper cognizance of the evidence which it had collected, and based its unwarranted inferences upon a misinterpretation of such evidence.

"'The American Cigar Co. is neither a member of nor a contributor to the National Better Business Bureau, although certain of its competitors are members and contributors. The American of its competitors are members and contributors. The American Cigar Co. holds definite views with regard to the part which the National Better Business Bureau has played in this controversy within the cigar-making industry, and as to the manner in which it has been used—or perhaps abused—the quasi-authoritative standing which it possesses because of its self-selected name and the good work which it does along certain lines. We will not assert those views here, as we realize that this is not the forum for their assertion. for their assertion.

BULOVA WATCH CO.

"This watchmaker was attacked by the National Better Business Bureau on the ground of 'questionable claims.' We do not know to what extent advertising was refused by advertising media as a result, but the concern must have felt itself hurt, for in a conference at the bureau's offices an earwitness reports

Mr. A. Bulova as saying:

"'We will spend a million dollars and I'll add an additional million from my personal fortune to wreck the bureau.'

"None of the offenses charged to the company are serious, but the widespread mailing of the bulletins which we have been informed was arranged for by the competitors no doubt hurt it considerably in the trade siderably in the trade.

"In one of our bulletins, widely circulated and remaining unchallenged, we stated:

"'Knowing that the National Better Business Bureau is too pinched financially to pay out of its budget for sending out 25,000 bulletins to jewelers attacking on the flimsiest pretext a nonmember watchmaker, we consult the secret membership roll to see who in the line is in the racket, and we find Elgin, Gruen, Hamilton, Wadsworth, and Illinois, and we have no doubt that one or several of these paid for the dirty work.'

OLIVE STREET TERRACE REALTY CO.

"This case is interesting in that the subject was attacked for doing the identical thing that two competitors who were bureau members also did.

"When the General Electric Co. announced plans to build a large plant to employ a large number of persons on the fringe of the corporate limits of the city of St. Louis this subdivider and two others bought land in the vicinity of the proposed plant and offered parcels for sale on the prospect of the natural increment that would follow the execution of the General Electric Co.'s plans. The above company was fortunate in securing property closer to the proposed plant than that of the two competitors, and this fact, together with a possibly more successful sale, may have excited the jealousy of the competitors, who invoked the services of their bureau, which by bulletins and private communication raised doubts as to the value of the subject's offering and in general did what it could to spoil prospects.

"While no actual misstatements or false representations were

While no actual misstatements or false representations were alleged, the innuendo might have been employed with equal force to the two bureau member competitors and, therefore, we regard this as an ideal case to fllustrate the fact that bureau processes are nothing but covert competitive warfare whereby the competitor hires the bureau as a publicity gunman because he himself fears to do the shooting.

R. H. MACY & CO.

This large department store, doing more than double the "This large department store, doing more than double the amount of business of that of any other New York store has been the object of jealousy on the part of its competitors for many years. According to gossip, the New York Bureau for the first two years of its existence was purely an agent of the financial interests sought to align the department and specialty stores with it, as 'window dressing' to obscure its primary purpose of serving Wall Street. Col. Michael Friedsam, president of B. Altman & Co., was appealed to as leader of the movement and according to this gossip, the argument was used that if all the stores came in including Macys, they would, by some device of 'ethical standgossip, the argument was used that if all the stores came in, including Macys, they would, by some device of 'ethical standards' induce Macys to abandon their very effective slogan '6 per cent less than elsewhere.' Whether or not the movement was based upon such a conspiracy we do not know, but that it resulted in a conspiracy the facts prove. Macy's joined the bureaus with all the rest of the stores."

In due course, the bureau manager began writing to Macy's urging the abandonment of the slogan without success. We quote from his letter of December 19, 1925:

"We believe we should now make formal request of R. H. Macy & Co. that the statements 'Lowest in the city prices' and '6 per cent less than elsewhere' be eliminated in your future advertising on the grounds that such statements are by no means universally true and, therefore, are misleading to the public and unfair to your competitors."

Under the direction of Altman's merchandise manager, the bureau then began a secret survey to prove that Macy's did not undersell everybody, on everything. Two hundred and forty-four articles were shopped and the bureau's "survey" showed that on none of the articles were Macy's lower and on some they were higher. This was presented to Macy's, who by this time were convinced that the bureau was getting ready to either stigmatize them by dismissal or continue the controversy to work up sentiment against them. They resigned April 21, 1926. Whether or not their advertising claim is true, of course, no one knows but that a large part of the public believes it there is no doubt and that is what hurts. As usual, ethics has nothing whatever to do with the matter but, of course, it is the invariable justification that is what hurts. As usual, ethics has nothing whatever to do with the matter but, of course, it is the invariable justification for the attack. The following from our publication, the Nation's Consumer, widely circulated, we believe, states the case correctly: "Macy's are the most successful liars in the retail advertising field. This peeves the other stores. Not that they object to Macy's lying, because they all take a try at it themselves in a more or less blundering way. It's the abuse of the privilege they object to, especially if it's done with a certain masterful éclat that the amateur can not command. Macy's hit upon one of the cutest and trickiest lies ever synthesized in bonehead logic. This is the formula: Since money costs 6 per cent per annum, a charge store must get 6 per cent more than a cash store and hence Macy's can sell 6 per cent under their competitors. Of course, the antidote for a lie is the truth, but since Macy's competitors have none of this antidote, it's a walk-away for the store of the shifty."

Upon the occasion of Macy's resignation, its president, Percy Straus, stated:

Straus, stated:

"By the very nature of its employment, this bureau will always be incompetently managed; the small salaries that it can afford be incompetently managed; the small salaries that it can afford will attract only men who can have no conception of large business organizations. Surely, sometimes such management, in its ignorance, will level captious criticism against some well-meaning business that will result in a series of well-founded suits that might endanger the personal fortunes of all of its officers and all of its directors and all of its contributors."

This case in the local field, as the American Cigar Co.'s in the national field, demonstrates that the bureau is absolutely unable to discipline a big concern. The newspapers did not report the to discipline a big concern. The newspapers did not report the bureau's survey and did not make any effort to get Macy's to change their copy, and the bureau, we found, did not even dare to ask the newspapers to do so. Macy's are the largest advertisers in the local field, and American Tobacco Co. are the largest in the national field.

The merchants in the conspiracy found that in a big job like

The merchants in the conspiracy found that in a big job like this they could not remain obscured and expect the bureau of itself to influence the papers, so after several years of stewing they came out in the open last year and brought direct pressure to bear upon the newspapers with threats of discontinuing their advertising. This forced the newspapers to take notice of "truth in advertising," and Macy's have been compelled to alter their underselling claims but have not yet satisfied their competitors, and the newspapers are still working on Macy's to further satisfy the conspiracy and secure complete "public protection."

RALADAM AGAINST FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

This, so far as we know, is the only case wherein the extralegal processes of the better-business bureau in its relation with publishers and the Federal Trade Commission has been brought to judicial determination. After reciting the peculiar relationship between the bureau and the commission, the petition states:

"Par. 22. Respondent and said National Better Business Bureau incited and brought about the inclusion, in the respective bulletins aforesaid, of the respective statements just above quoted from the said bulletins, respectively, with the intent and purpose of thereby further threatening and intimidating publishers of newspapers throughout the United States, and so inducing them to yield more compliantly and completely to the exercise of the censorship powers conferred upon said National Better Business Bureau by the resolution aforesaid, and frightening said publishers into declining to publish advertisements relating to petitioner's said Marmola prescription tablets. * * *

"Par. 35. The boycott of petitioner as an advertiser by publishers throughout the United States has become substantially comers throughout the United States has become substantially complete, due to the efforts of respondent and said National Better Business Bureau, the said local better-business bureaus, acting under and in furtherance of the aforesaid unlawful agreement, combination, and conspiracy in restraint of trade, and the aforesaid resolution. On September 30, 1929, Messrs. Woodward & Kelly, representing the respective publishers of the following newspapers, in soliciting and seeking to obtain advertisements for publication in said newspapers, respectively, to wit: The Chicago Dally News, the Cleveland Plain Dealer, the New York Herald Tribune, the Philadelphia Inquirer, and the Richmond Times-Dispatch, wrote to petitioner's said advertising agent, Kling-Gibson Co., aforesaid, a letter, as follows:

a letter, as follows: "'Re Raladam Co. "'Re Raladam Co. For some time I have been trying to get my papers to give these people the benefit of any doubt. However, I have not been successful, as all of the local better-business bureaus have done their work in scaring the papers from accepting this business. Therefore, much as I hate to do it, I will have to return your very kind contract. The Cleveland Plain Dealer returned this contract to you on September 24, saying they would not accept it. I have had correspondence with them since then, but have been unable to get them to accept it. P. S.—Just received a letter from Mr. E. I. Bacon, of the Philadelphia Inquirer,

ceived a letter from Mr. E. I. Bacon, of the Philadelphia Inquirer, as follows:

"Will you be good enough to advise Kling-Gibson that there is nothing further we can add to what we have already told them in reference to the Marmola account? We do not believe it advisable to insert this advertisement until the matter has been finally disposed of by the Federal Trade Commission."

The court, in deciding favorably for the petitioner, aptly states the conspiracy in rendering his opinion which we quote, in part:

"The record here shows, without dispute or by implication which would hardly be denied, that the American Medical Association is engaged in a campaign against those proprietary remedies, which it believes ought to be used by the public either not at all or only under supervision. It has a bureau for that and other purposes, and the bureau employs a director. When it is thought that a particular advertisement should be stopped this director takes the matter up with the commission and with the association of better-business bureaus, which are scattered over the country. Thereupon, the commission, if it approves, files a complaint and eventually, if it is convinced of the truth of its complaint, makes the order to desist and refrain. The betterbusiness bureaus explain to their local newspapers and to the general periodicals that it would be wise to refuse this advertising. The chairman of the commission, in public addresses and in correspondence, advises the newspapers that they will be subject to prosecution by the commission as defendants, to be joined with the advertisers, if they do not desist from such publications; and the newspapers may suspect that if they do not comply with the advice of the better-business bureaus, their general advertising patronage from the membership of these bureaus will fall off. It appears that these methods of influence, carried on in this case before this cross suit for enforcement was commenced and while it has been pending, have destroyed a large part of petitioner's busine it has been pending, have destroyed a large part of petitioner's business through refusals to accept this advertisement, and only the injunction of this court is needed to make the elimination

The commission appealed the decision of the circuit court to the United States Supreme Court, which affirmed the lower court (51 Sup. Ct. Rept. 587), thus ending the commission's cease-and-desist order. The petitioner cited many instances of refusal to accept advertising due to intimidation of the publishers by the better-business-bureau commission threat.

"The Raladam Co.'s losses may well have exceeded $1,000,000 as they advise us that their legal expenses alone exceeded $150,000. This illustrates how the Better Business Bureau system may punish without trial or conviction and how impossible it is for a small concern to combat it."

HOWELL AND GRAVES

This company has exploited Muscle Shoals real estate on the prospect of increased values when the Government nitrate and power plant is either put into operation or leased by the Government. It was selling lots successfully in 1922 when the New York Better Business Bureau came into being. We have information that at that time the National Better Business Bureau had begun to cover this enterprise but that the manager of the new-born New York bureau asked that he be permitted to take the case as a means of putting his bureau on the map. The follow-ing are the moves in the attack by the bureau:

1. Got the attorney general after them. He found nothing

2. Got the district attorney after them. He also failed.
3. Got the police department to put in two detectives as salesmen. They found nothing.
4. Made a complaint to the Post Office Department which the company heard of and met immediately by taking a full statement direct to Washington as they feared the New York office, known to be closely connected by the New York bureau.
5. Brought action for false advertising. Case dismissed for lack of evidence.

6. Sent an "investigator" to Muscle Shoals to await a rain and photograph some undrained water to prove that property was not dry. Published a bulletin showing such photographs and also pointed out that "brick road" shown on the maps of the company was not even paved, not explaining, however, that "Brick Road" was not named by the company but was an old road so-called because it led to the town of Brick and that no one had represented it as paved.

The attack gained wide newspaper publicity and the bulletins were furnished to all savings banks where they were and still are used effectively to dissuade depositors from withdrawing money for investment in this property.

UNION DEPOSIT CO.

We quote in part a letter written to five directors of the Denver Better Business Bureau. It will be noted that this company was a charter member of the bureau, but later entered into an activity that is proscribed by the New York Stock Exchange, namely, dealing in investment trusts:

that is proscribed by the New York Stock Exchange, namely, dealing in investment trusts:

"For the past two years we have devoted our entire time to the development and sale of an investment trust sponsored by the Union Deposit Co. The Union Investment Trust, as our security is known, was developed along the most approved conservative lines. Its portfolio consists of the stocks and bonds of 30 of the most prominent corporations comprising the leadership in industry, commerce, and finance.

"Before the Harriman National Bank & Trust Co. of the City of New York, and the Metropolitan Trust Co., of Los Angeles, accepted our trusteeship, they made a rigid investigation of our organization, and of the investment trust which we proposed sponsoring. The trust indentures in both cases were drawn by the attorneys of those banks.

"We have been advised by many of the various State commissions, including those in Massachusetts, Kansas, California, and Texas, that in the two and one-half to five years in which we have been operating in those States, there is not a single record of complaint filed against this company or any of its sales representatives. This in contrast to many hundreds of complaints that have been filed against scores of other companies in a more or less competitive line of business.

"Duns, Bradstreets, and Moody Investors Service, and our banking connection in Denver, the American National Bank, always report most favorably upon our company.

"We believe that this mass of facts fully justifies us in asserting that we are worthy of the full and hearty support and cooperation of the better-business bureau, which, I am sorry to say, we have never secured. Almost from the very first we began to receive information of unfavorable reports issued by the Denver Better Business Bureau and through the local bureau, by other better-business bureaus in the communities in which we were operating. Where misstatements of facts were made, we endeavored to furnish the better-business bureau with correct inforbetter-business bureaus in the communities in which we were operating. Where misstatements of facts were made, we endeavored to furnish the better-business bureau with correct information, going so far as to send, first, an officer of our company to the offices of the better-business bureau, to thoroughly acquaint them with the operations of our business, and later, our auditor, Allen Redeker, certified public accountant, called upon the better-business bureau and went over the trust indenture with the Harriman National Bank & Trust Co. and other information in detail, in order that they might be fully acquainted with the security which we were selling.

"'From the very first there has existed a very evident antagonism on the part of the officers of the better-business bureau.

"From the very first there has existed a very evident antagonism on the part of the officers of the better-business bureau toward this organization. During the time that Mr. Berlin Boyd was the manager of the bureau, he lost no opportunity in furthering the interests of the building and loan association with which we came in direct competition during the years that we were selling our first-mortgage bond securities. I believe it is a very significant fact that Mr. Boyd is now associated with the Silver State Building & Loan Association.

"'No effort has ever been made on the part of the better business bureau to learn the facts. They have deliberately and consistently refused to recognize the facts when presented to them. Frankly, I very much doubt whether the clerks of the betterbusiness bureau have sufficient intelligence to digest the information contained in our trust indenture. The fact that the business bureau have sufficient intelligence to digest the information contained in our trust indenture. The fact that the indenture was drawn by one of the best-known firms of attorneys in the city of New York, accepted by a financial institution as trustee, larger than any financial institution in Denver, and approved by the experts employed by various State commissions under which we operate, should certainly carry more weight than the opinion of a clerk earning a salary of a few hundred dollars per month from a better-business bureau.

"'The thing that hurts, perhaps more than any other, is the fact that on the letterhead of the Better Business Bureau the name of yourself and 10 or 11 others of our most prominent business men appear. This is equivalent, in the mind of the public generally, to a letter over your own signature, and creates far greater harm than such a letter would were it written merely over the signature of an employee of the better-business bureau.'

THE ARTLOOM CORPORATION

"This case is of special interest as showing the failure of legal remedies against a threatened action by the better-business bureaus.

"The Artloom Corporation found itself the victim of the 'trade-practice process,' and the Federal Trade Commission, at the instigation of the better-business bureau, examined its publicity and issued a cease-and-desist order against the use of the word

Wilton,' which did not conform to the use prescribed in the trade practice conference definition.

"Knowing the force of such a decision in the hands of the better business bureau in prejudicing the trade and in causing publishers to refuse advertising, the Artloom Corporation sought to enjoin the National Better Business Bureau in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, for bulletings this cases and decisions.

ing this cease and desist order.
"The court denied the injunction on the ground that it would restrain freedom of speech, a very logical decision, since counsel for the petitioners did not bring out the peculiar significance of a better business bureau bulletin, and that it, in fact, implies denial of freedom of speech, because the subject is denied the freedom of the press thereby.

"Prior to the issuance of the Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order the Artloom Corporation had a taste of what the better business bureau system could do in restraining its the better business bureau system could do in restraining its business in the merchandising and advertising field merely on the claim of violation of the 'rules' of the trade practice conference, of which it was not a part, and, of course, it tried to foil the threatened thrust with the weapon of a cease and desist order, but failed because the courts do not understand the bureau system and its 'self-policing' methods.

RECEIVER'S REPORT

"A letter addressed by us to a Kansas City corporation reached the receiver of the corporation, which was then in bankruptcy. Under pledge of secrecy the receiver wrote us:

"Investigation of the records of the company hint at an arrangement whereby unjustifiably favorable reports were put out on behalf of the company from the Kansas City Better Business Bureau. I have noticed several checks of unusually large amounts which seem to have been paid to representatives of the Kansas City Better Business Bureau. Mr. — was president of the company and manager at the time of these transactions, and while he, no doubt, profited thereby, it is very likely that he looked upon these payments as blackmail and would be interested in helping in the program you are putting on. I suggest that you write him a letter and determine what his attitude might be."

BOSSHARDT STEEL CORPORATION

"This corporation established a plant for the production of steel castings by an improved German process and were undertaking to interest capital. For no special reason the local better-business bureau began a whisper campaign which the company did not pay much attention to until a prospective investor from another city, contemplating an investment of $50,000, did not keep his appointment to call. Upon calling him next day on long-distance phone, he stated that he had gone to Canton but had first got in touch with the better business bureau and was frightened off.

"The president and general manger stated to us that he at one time and another officer at another time were approached in the lobby of a local hotel and told that for $500 the bureau would

INSTITUTE FOR PUBLIC SERVICE

"The above institution and its director, William H. Allen, were the real objectives in a sham attack upon a mining enterprise in which Mr. Allen is interested. We quote his statement, in part: "'I write on this letterhead because it was the character built up in this work that the better-business bureau lent itself to besmirching. It was this work which made the attack on me 'good advertising' for the attackers. At the same time the business interest I represent was injured to the limit of false charges and insinuations to injure.

"Until August, 1930, I knew of the better-business bureau only as a name which implied disinterested public service and honest, careful investigation. Then out of a clear sky, with no warning, I found myself blazoned on every front page of New York newspapers and in telegraphic dispatches throughout the country, as well as cabled dispatches to Europe, as a 'civic worker' then before the grand jury for a mine swindle.

"The story's plausibility was drawn from an alleged investigation by the better-business bureau because of alleged complaints tion by the better-business bureau because of alleged complaints of first one woman and later by a second woman and a man."

Then follows a lengthy recitation of the facts, showing that the whole story and prosecution were pure fiction and that there was not even a spontaneous complaint. By the appearance of the story in the papers, Mr Allen was enabled to nip the synthetic prosecution in the bud by having it dismissed by the grand jury. The following paragraph shows how absolutely unfair are so-called "investigations" by the better-business bureau.

"Although our mine office and books are in the same building and on the same floor, less than 50 steps from the better-business bureau, it paid no visit to us, did not telephone us, did not write us, sent no reporter and no agent of the district attorney to us, apparently advised the complainant without suggesting that she come to us, write, or telephone us.

"After the case was dismissed here, the better-business bureau wrote inquiries out in the neighborhood of the mine, with what other motive except to excite suspicion and do injury it is hard other motive except to excite suspicion and do injury it is hard to comprehend, for, so far as the answers to the questions could have possible validity, the result could have been accomplished by consulting our files."

"Mr. Allen concludes: I am writing this fully with less feeling than the facts justify, because we weathered the storm and look forward to a productive season. As a citizen, however, I feel that such methods are just as safe as keeping rattlesnakes for pets." such methods are just as safe as keeping rattlesnakes for pets."

UNITED PLUMBING CO.

We have repeatedly observed the failure of lawyers to press litigation against the better-business bureaus and have remarked that it is the intimidation of counsel rather than favorable judicial determination that has made the bureau almost universally victorious in legal issues. The following statement of Attorney Horace B. Neff shows what an attorney is obliged to go through with the pundstokes to first.

with if he undertakes to fight:

"On Feb. 7, 1927, the better-business bureau printed an article in which they declared that the United Plumbing Co. was insolvent and that the company was in the hands of a Cleveland credit association for liquidation. This was absolutely false; it was another company not connected with the United Plumbing Co. which was being liquidated. Within a few days following the publication of this libel, the president of the plumbing company was called into the Union Trust Bank and told by Vice President Harold that he would have to withdraw his account as he had

Harold that he would have to withdraw his account as he had been attacked by the better-business bureau. Klein, on behalf of his company, sued the better-business bureau for $300,000 for libel. That action was filed in February, 1927.

"The other banks refused to accept his account on the ground that he had been attacked by the better-business bureau, saying that they would be criticized by the bureau if they accepted his company's account; and his business was destroyed. The runners of the bureau went to his customers and threatened them that they would get the same dose if they continued to do business.

company's account; and his business was destroyed. The runners of the bureau went to his customers and threatened them that they would get the same dose if they continued to do business with the United Plumbing Co.

"The three newspapers of Cleveland, to wit, The Cleveland Press, the Cleveland News, and The Cleveland Plain Dealer, have agreed not to publish any libel suits against the better-business bureau. And, in addition, the combination of the banks, the better-business bureau, and the newspapers hold the judges of our local courts in the hollow of their hands, and the judges realize that to refuse to carry out the command of these organizations will deprive them of their bread and butter.

"Although I made every possible effort to bring the cases to trial, I found it impossible; the judges ran away from it. They violated every one of their rules of procedure regarding continuances. I believe that on one pretext or another that the cases have been passed, postponed, and continued over a hundred times.

"I cited in the two fellows who are doing their legal work, James C. Lind and Charles Arter, for contempt of court. They were both flagrantly guilty. The trial was before a judge named Frank Phillips. He whitewashed these two fellows and gave me a scathing lecture for having brought them in on charges. He had to protect his bread and butter.

"I then looked up the criminal statutes and found that the better-business bursely were all guilty of criminal libel and "I then looked up the criminal statutes and found that the better-business bureaus were all guilty of criminal libel, and had Asa Shiverick, Dale Brown, and several others arrested. The penalty for this crime is two years in the penitentiary, with a fine

"On the day following their arrest, I was called up by the Hon. James C. Lind and threatened that unless I dismissed the warrants that he would have me disbarred by the Cleveland Bar Association. I was also advised by several other attorneys that they would get me by fair means or foul if I went ahead with the trial, but I disregarded their warnings. Lind also threatened the justice before whom the criminal cases were pending that he would have the county prosecutor kick him out of town if he did not dismiss the actions.

"I went to the prosecutor's office and demanded the right to

"I went to the prosecutor's office and demanded the right to go before the grand jury for an indictment and was refused. He is also at the mercy of this combination of banks, newspapers, and big business men. The justice was absolutely terrified, and I abandoned the prosecutions after he had made a decision in their favor in the trial of the first case.

"In order to prevent the civil case from coming to trial they got hold of a judge by the name of Eastman, a judge of the children's courts, and a judge of the court of insolvency. The United Plumbing Co. had been obliged to make an assignment for the benefit of creditors and one Gerald E. Doyle was named assignee. Eastman was the judge. The judge framed Doyle to deny his signature; at least the petition which I understood he signed disappeared and least the petition which I understood he signed disappeared, and he later swore that he had never signed it. He said he would rather resign as assignee than to sue the better-business bureau, and Lind and Arter then filed a defense setting up that my case should fail because it should have been brought in the name of Doyle,

"The better-business bureau then broke into feverish activity to get rid of me. They got the Cleveland Bar Association to prefer charges against me. The three leading newspapers have completely boycotted me and will not publish anything for me. The Cleveland Bar Association is run like the Government by the Cleveland Bar Association is run like the Government by the lawyers who represent big business. The bar association procured a judge named Carl V. Weygandt to railroad me out of my law practice. He was so energetic about it and his services were so satisfactory to them that they advanced him from a judge of the court of common pleas to a judge of the court of appeals. He cited me in for contempt; he refused to hear any of my witnesses; he refused to sign the record of my case so as to prevent me from getting an appeal. He took the witness stand and committed perjury against me."

JAMES P. SULLIVAN

This correspondent has been subjected to attack under the anti 'twister' campaign inspired by the insurance contributors of the bureaus. Recently, Calvin Coolidge, as an insurance-company official took the liberty to attack the 'twister' over the radio and as a result was sued by a man from St. Louis and promptly settled for $2,500. Mr. Sullivan states the case so intelligently that we for $2,500. Mr. Sullivan states the case so intelligently that we quote:

"'Replying to your letter of August 26, I really have nothing definite against the better-business bureau. I believe that the aims and purposes of its founders were good and for the general benefit of the community; but, like many other good things, the bureau has, I believe, allowed itself and its activities to be prostituted to the purposes of self-seekers whose business often is a worse bane than those which the bureau was originated to combat.

"'There is an idea which has been built up in the mind of the public over the past 25 or 30 years by the selfish life-insurance interests of this country to the general effect that a man who takes out new insurance at his present age and then surrenders an old policy and recovers his cash equity is by that entire transaction a financial loser. The mathematical and actuarial realities regarding that transaction are that in the hands of a qualified expert who operates honestly the whole process can be gone through by who operates honestly the whole process can be gone through by any man with a financial profit to himself. The parties who lose by the transaction are the companies and the agents who are by the transaction are the companies and the agents who are drawing renewal commissions on the old policy.

"'About 3 years ago I got into a controversy with the general agents of about 20 companies and with 3 home companies, all located in St. Louis, where I was operating as general agent of the Lincoln National Life Insurance Co. My opponents maintained that I was what is known as a "twister" in life insurance. I was merely telling the public the truth as I have stated it in the above second paragraph. In so telling the truth and proving it, I, of course, was writing a large line of new insurance in St. Louis on a more up-to-date and advantageous form of policy than any of my opponents were selling. They first tried to put me out of business by inducing the insurance commissioner of Missouri to cancel my license to sell insurance on the ground that I was "twisting" their policies. The insurance commissioner told them that he could do nothing unless they could prove that I was misrepresenting. They then tried to get evidence along that line and failed.

Then one of those general agents conceived the brilliant idea of having the whole crowd join the better-business bureau. Of course, the idea was that, with 20 of them going in, there would be considerable money added to the income of the St. Louis Better be considerable money added to the income of the St. Louis Better Business Bureau and it could, therefore, take some of its time to attend to my business. As soon as I found out, which was very shortly, that the bureau was looking into my affairs I served notice on them that my practices were an open book and that they had better be careful as I expected to hold them to a strict accounting for anything they might do or say or print. They then suggested a conference. I and two of my men went over to see them. The manager, I think his name was Reiff and I think he was Jewish, was plainly prejudiced against me. He had to admit them. The manager, I think his name was Relif and I think he was Jewish, was plainly prejudiced against me. He had to admit that my practices were entirely honest, but gave it as his opinion that I should not be allowed to operate, as, if I continued, so he said, I would pull down all the life insurance companies in the country. My answer was, of course, that if the truth alone were so very injurious to the life-insurance companies, then they must exist on a foundation of falsehood. I repeated my warning that I would sue the bureau, its officers, directors, and members on the least sign that they were interfering with my business.

I would sue the bureau, its officers, directors, and members on the least sign that they were interfering with my business.

"'So far as I was ever able to ascertain they heeded the warning, I know that verbally and surreptitiously they did what they could against me and to earn the fees which the self-seeking agent was paying them, but though I tried hard I was never able to get enough on them to base a suit. The $25,000 damages which I was awarded for libel was against one of those general agents, the very one who conceived the idea of their all joining the better-business bureau.

From the above you can see that there is probably not anything I can do to help you in your present campaign. You have my sympathy; and if there is or should later be anything I can give you or do for you to help the cause along, I will gladly do it. I say this because, while I believe that the aims and purposes as stated by the founders of the bureau are good and desirable, they will not work out in actual practice because of the frailties of human nature when given an opportunity to exercise secret power and authority. As they operate in practice I feel that the bureaus are absolutely against the American idea and in opposition to the bill of rights as contained in the Constitution of this country."

this country.'"

I would like to now quote an Associated Press article which appeared in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat:

"SWINDLING STOCK SALESMAN ASSAILED

"R. P. Clayberger, president of the National Better Business Bureau, to-day issued a warning against the modern high-pressure stock salesman who is making alarming inroads on the credulity of investors holding high-grade but inactive or nondividend-paying stock.

"Mr. Clayberger said that during the past week the bureau had discovered that legitimate stock taken from investors by the 'switch method' has been cleared through 'certain out-of-town 'switch method' has been cleared through 'certain out-of-town brokerage houses by accomplices of the swindlers who pass themselves off as the original investors.'"

This is a sample of the booster copy given out to the press to aid the better-business bureaus and on the face of the article you immediately say "Fine—splendid work, etc.," but what is behind this boost for the bureaus?

Let me call your attention to the fact that if a stock was "switched" that in every case the assignment of the stock certificate had to be indorsed over by the original owner and that there is absolutely no need for the assignees to pass themselves off "as the original investors." That if there was no transfer of the stock certificate then there must have been a forgery. It is palpable on the face of the article to be nothing but betterbusiness bureau propaganda. Even if such statement was based on facts it probably involves a few dollars while some big swindle, such as the Insull affair, is getting ready, with the aid of the better-business bureau, to drag the public into their net on some other big swindle.

Incidentally, how much money did Insull and his companies pay over to these bureaus? The records will show these facts in due course.

UNIVERSAL RESEARCH CO.

"This corporation publishes books and educational courses which are sold by the direct agent method. Their local representative was arrested in Lima, Ohio, on some trumped-up charge by the local better-business bureau, and when the president visited the city he was arrested on the charge of insulting a woman investigator of the bureau whom he had never met. He states that the bureau representative who appeared in the prosecution wore badges. Both cases were dismissed, but the publicity had the desired effect.

NATIONAL AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION OF NEBRASKA

"To understand the difficulties of independent automobile associations, it is essential to know that the American Automobile Association is a member of the National Better Business Bureau and it has a chain of local automobile associations affiliated with it, which in turn belong to local bureaus. This makes a national set-up to monopolize the automobile service of the country by most vicious methods. Another influence of bias is the fact that Theodore W. Noyes, of the Washington Star, is president of both the American Automobile Association and the Associated Press. We quote the following statement by Paul I. Manhart, acting secretary and attorney of the above association Manhart, acting secretary and attorney of the distribution of the National Automobile Association of Nebraska, incorporated on or about April 21, 1929, opened up main offices in Omaha, Nebr., and from the very start have been harassed and persecuted in the courts and press, mainly sponsored by the American Automobile Association, with its various irresponsible local agencies working through the better-business bureau and chamber of commerce in some localities. Inclosed find newspaner climpings, letters, and pamphlets published by the American chamber of commerce in some localities. Inclosed find newspaper clippings, letters, and pamphlets published by the American Automobile Association, who have time and again and still do work through local officials. When we could get in court or find anyone responsible enough, we have invariably been exonerated. Mr. R. E. Brenner was forced to discontinue business, as well as Mr. Bart Milatzo, president and secretary, respectively, and our assets have been severely strained and we have been almost annihilated because of the unfair use of the mails and press to malign and libel us. The American Automobile Association seems. annihilated because of the unfair use of the mails and press to malign and libel us. The American Automobile Association seems to be of no financial responsibility locally, and we can find no one upon whom to fix liability. We hope to continue our business on what we can salvage on our membership, but we live in constant fear of adverse publicity promoted by the better-business bureau and the American Automobile Association. We have had our business and contract approved and passed on by the courts and competent attorneys, but we can not withstand such a vicious persecution such as above referred to, as our membership is built upon public confidence as a service association. Please preserve original evidence inclosed. We will appear to testify on any prosecutions or give further information on request."

The method used by these better-business bureaus in extracting money from those whom you see support them and who are the

Louis bureau, when more than $2,500 was pledged them.

Or you will find that, as was done in the case of the Olive Street Terrace Realty Co., that after the bureau had utterly failed in its effort to blackjack that concern, suggestions coming to the person attacked by "supposed" friends that he join and donate to these bureaus and everything would be O. K.

Only in rare instances will you find where a bureau agent went to and directly demanded a contribution, with a threat of reprisal upon failure to donate, as was done by Daniel J. Sparr of the Denver Better Business Bureau to Samuel J. Albert, whom Sparr and his bureau later caused to be arrested for false representations in the sale of a 15-cent pair of men's garters. Albert was arrested after he refused to contribute $200 to the Denver Better Business

But suffice it for me to say that whether you donate or do not donate is the true measure upon which attacks are daily being made against legitimate business industries, and all done under the cloak of powers illegally assumed and which are contrary to all written law.

There are so many other cases of like import as those already cited that I hardly feel it necessary to give a detailed statement of each. Only the names and methods used against the victim would be different, the facts in the main pointing direct to one purpose and that purpose being either to kill off competition for one who is paying the bureaus, or to force that business interest to come into the folds of these bureaus and pay a regular tribute in money to their money chest. I will, however, before I finish, set forth a list of names that are either victims, would-be victims, or who have evidence that would substantiate the evidence of those about whom I have talked.

I could, for instance, cite the conspiracy case evolved between the Rocky Mountain Motorist, the American Automobile Association agency in Colorado, and the Better Business Bureau of Denver against the National Automobile Association of Denver which resulted in the raiding of the National Auto office and the arrest of the officers of that corporation; the steps that followed which gave that business to the bureau and its agencies and the facts that developed when the Denver Better Business Bureau demanded a 50-50 split of the spoils.

I could cite the facts about the attempt of a bureau to organize the dyeing and cleaning industry for the purpose of eliminating competition and raising prices and for which the bureau was to receive $1,500, and the threat they used on prospective members to "make it so disagreeable for other cleaners that they would be glad to join."

I could cite the facts about Henry C. Thayer, president of the Better Business Bureau of Philadelphia, and his Standard Supply & Equipment Co., involving the promotion of some $3,000,000; of Thayer's company, West & Co., which originated the stock issue of Bornot & Co., in a $2,000,000 swindle. Certainly he was exempted from prosecution under the blue-sky laws for the stocks were "listed."

I could take you on to Pittsburgh and let you hear first hand from the publishers of the National Labor Journal, the oldest labor paper published in the United States, established in 1872, where you would learn of the exposures that Journal has unearthed regarding Hampton Beeson and his Pittsburg Better Business Bureau.

Business Bureau.

We would then go to Cincinnati and learn from the Procter & Gamble Co. the facts concerning the attack by the National Better Business Bureau of that company's advertisement "Be Fair to Your Stomach—Use Crisco."

I could then carry you to Chicago, where you would learn of the facts concerning Elmer F. Wieboldt, president of the Chicago Better Business Bureau, and of his being found guilty in the Federal court for a $40,000 tax, commissioner bribe, and the inaction of his fellow bureau members who did not even ask for inaction of his fellow bureau members, who did not even ask for his resignation.

We would then drop down to St. Louis, and you could see We would then drop down to St. Louis, and you could see the evidence pertaining to the money raised by the Missouri Industrial Lenders Association under a resolution of May 10, 1928, to be given to the St. Louis Better Business Bureau in order that the St. Louis Bureau start a campaign against the Salary Account Buyers of St. Louis, which money the bureau received and started out to earn by carrying out the mandate of these industrial lenders, and which incidentally resulted in those conspirators having to pay $20,000 in order to settle a case out of court.

And then I would ask your attention to the article of Hon. F. H. LAGUARDIA, Congressman from New York, which was read into the Congressional Record (p. 289. December 10, 1932) and into the Congressional Record (p. 289, December 10, 1932) and you would then appreciate who these industrial lenders really are, and why it is essential for their continuance in business to financially support these better-business bureaus and have these bureaus, in turn, support their 42 per cent racket.

And then as Congressman LaGuardia says (p. 291):

"How the small-loan racket, extracting 42 per cent interest from the sweat and worry of a poverty-stricken people, obtained a listing on the New York Stock Exchange is an interesting bit of public information which Richard Whitney, president of the institution, owes the country.

And it may be well right here to further quote Congressman LaGuardia, whose statements have been made from evidence before a House committee, of which he was chairman:

"When the time comes to purge the stock exchange I hope those who have the job in hand will drive this loan-mongering those who have the job in hand will drive this loan-mongering crew not back to the curb but to the gutter, where they belong. • • • It is a public outrage that men and institutions who claim respectable standing in the business community should lend themselves to fostering a racket which stands unchallenged as the most notorious example of human greed."

Yes, those angels of the mercy (?), those public protectors (?), those usurpers of our governmental powers, self-styled and proclaimed better-business bureaus, not only lend themselves to fostering the racket of 42 per cent interest, but they take that blood money from this racket to foster and promote their own better-business bureau racket, and the better-business bureau racket started in 1922 when James C. Auchincloss, R. T. H. Halsey, and other stock-exchange members underwrote the first $100,000 and other stock-exchange members underwrote the first $100,000 for the first year expenses.

You are now fairly familiar with how these bureaus function You are now fairly familiar with how these bureaus function in attacking our various industries that do not pay cash tribute to them, and I have grazed the surface about those frauds and industries that pay them tribute for self-protection, such as the New York Stock Exchange, Investment Bankers Association, and the 42 per cent loan companies, but I have not yet reached bottom in the evidence against the better-business bureau racket. Those cases I have mentioned merely skim the surface, and you will find from the evidence in the cases I will merely give by name that the ire of the better-business bureau was raised against these people from similar conditions which I have already discussed. Let us now enter another field and review some of the crooked business that these bureaus protect.

FRAUDS PROTECTED BY BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU

Let me quote from the Milwaukee Journal, issue of October 5, 1930, covering the Wieboldt case previously mentioned:

"BRIBER-BUT NO CHASTE IS LOST-WIEBOLDT IS HEAD OF CHICAGO BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU

"With public attention centered on the spectacular doings of "With public attention centered on the spectacular doings of the Capones and Morans with their shootings and bombings, the really remarkable aspect of the Chicago menace to good govern-ment is largely lost sight of. It is the attitude of the big business men, the men with 'honest money' toward dishonesty when it appears within their own circle.

"In Chicago the 'secret six' is now practically forgotten and another military gentleman, Col. A. A. Sprague, heads another committee of some sort that is going to do all that the other promised

"But one thing no committee from the big business association attempts is to clean its own house. This is demonstrated in the case of Elmer F. Wieboldt, who with his brother, Harry Wieboldt, are millionaire owners of Wieboldt (Inc.), operators of four large are millionaire owners of Wieboldt (Inc.), operators of four large department stores.

"Elmer F. Wieboldt is president of the Chicago Better Business Bureau, whose business it is to hunt down crooks in business; but both he and his brother on the witness stand in Federal court admitted paying bribes amounting to some $40,000 to an agent of Eugene Oliver, a tax commissioner, for the purpose of having their taxes reduced. Elmer admitted signing one check, and also that he had discussed the whole affair with his brother and knew of the arrangements.

"This admission in court occurred in the early summer—and

This bureau was organized through the Chicago Association of Commerce and, although now operated separately, is still 'under its wing,' and the supporters largely belong to both organizations.

"This reporter sought Saturday to ascertain the attitude of officials of the great business organization in respect to Mr. Wieboldt's bribery and his continued head of an organization to run down crooks. Colonel Randolph was not at his office and could not be reached at his home, but Joseph R. Noel, millionaire president of the Noel State Bank, former president of the Chicago Association of Commerce, treasurer, director, and member of the executive committee of the Better Business Bureau, was interviewed. viewed.

"ONE OF OUR FINEST

"'Why do you attack Mr. Wieboldt?' Mr. Noel demanded. 'He is one of our finest young business men. Why don't you look up the records of the Better Business Bureau?'

"'I have looked up the court records and found where he admitted bribing an official to reduce his taxes,' replied the reporter. 'What I would like to know is whether your organization has taken any action in the matter. I am told he is still your president.'

"'Yes; he is still president,' said Noel. 'About that court matter, I really don't know anything. You hear so much, you know. No; I know of no action to demand Mr. Wieboldt's resignation. I don't know whether it would be right. He is a fine man.'

"'But he admitted participating in the bribery of an official.'

"Well, you mustn't always blame a man for things you don't know all about. We don't know all of the circumstances. Sometimes a man is placed in a position where he can't help himself. But what interest is this of yours? Are you part of that New York organization that is attacking the better-business bureaus?' "WHAT TO DO ABOUT IT

"'I have never heard of any such attack,' Mr. Noel was told.
"'My interest is simply that of any Wisconsin citizen who, told that he is a part of "Chicagoland," likes to get better acquainted with his rulers. One can't help but believe that the top of Chicago is a bit rotten, too.'
"'It is,' admitted Mr. Noel, 'but there are some things that can't be believed. And what can you are cutsider, do about 12.'

be helped. And what can you, an outsider, do about it?'
"'Let's admit,' Mr. Noel was answered, 'that my efforts resemble those of a gnat gnawing at the hide of an elephant and that they'll never be felt. But with the gangdom and big business of Chicago beginning to claim us as their own, one feels that Wisconsin citizens ought to know as much about you as possible.'

"'Well, I guess you are right,' said Mr. Noel, who really is a pleasant gentleman on all subjects but that of Mr. Wieboldt and his bribery and the failure of 'big business' to do anything

" MAYBE CAPONE IS PIKER

"So Mr. Wieboldt goes on—and so does the man he and his brother bribed, Mr. Oliver, the tax commissioner. The State of Illinois has never preferred charges of any sort against the Wieboldts for bribing the tax commissioner. The Government was interested only in false tax returns and so had no interest."

when the president of the Tulsa Better Business Bureau demanded that the manager of the bureau go further than merely wink his eye at his frauds and take an active part in promoting them, an issue arose with the result that the manager had to get out and the president continued. To investigate the frauds of officers of better business bureaus alone, without touching the activities of the members, would be a slumming expedition in itself. Senator Blanks, a member of this investigating committee, will readily recall his report for the Committee on the District of Columbia, dated February 17, 1931, wherein he condemned the practices of certain financial houses. I quote from Senator Blanks's report, as follows:

"Detailed investigation by the subcommittee has developed the fact that within the past six or seven years there have been issued in or sold from the District of Columbia so-called securities, largely consisting of mortgage bonds or notes, in an amount approximately $100,000,000, a very considerable proportion of which are of very dubious value, and in some cases utterly worthless.

"One of the issues was that involving the sale of bonds, debentures, etc., on so-called Wardman hotel and apartment properties in Washington, D. C. Four members of the Investment Bankers Association of America, namely, Halsey, Stuart & Co. (Inc.); Hambleton & Co.; A. B. Leach & Co. (Inc.); and Rogers Caldwell & Co. (Inc.); together with William R. Compton & Co., sponsored and participated in the public offering throughout the country of what they designated in their circular to be '$11,000,000 first and refunding mortgage 6½ per cent serial gold bonds,' of the Wardman Real Estate Properties (Inc.). Even the printed description of this issue of bonds was $16,000,000 and the security back of the bond issue was not a first mortgage on all of the property of the issuing corporation, but a second and possibly third mortgage as to some of the properties involved.

"Nevertheless, the investment bankers named, sponsored and sold widely, securities greatly in excess of the full value of the properties, as shown by assessment records; and in their circular described the bond issue as representing only 55 per cent of the properties, as shown by assessment records; and in their circular described the bond issue as representing only 55 per cent of the valuation of the properties.

"The result of this issue to investors has been disastrous for the Wardman bonds that were sold by the sponsors of the issue in 1928 for $100 are admitted by the Halsey, Stuart & Co. to have practically no market value at this time. They are being offered for sale by investors and brokers at as low as $38 and $45 for for sale by investors and brokers at as low as $38 and $45 for $100 bonds.

"Incidentally, it is to be noted that one of the sponsors of the issue, Halsey Stuart & Co., broadcasts over the radio investment advice by an employee designated as 'Old Counselor.' The same firm advertises widely in women's magazines, and states that:

"'Twenty per cent of the customers of Halsey, Stuart & Co. are women—some administering their husband's estates—others making their own way in the world—still others, careful housewives, managing the family finances.'

managing the family finances.'

"It should be noted that this company was advised of the hearings held by the subcommittee, in advance thereof, and given an opportunity to appear and be heard, which was not availed of.

"The second security issue of large amount to which the subcommittee gave particular attention was that sponsored and sold in 1928 by Halsey, Stuart & Co. (Inc.) and the American Bond & Mortgage Co. (Inc.), both members of the Investment Bankers Association of America, consisting of bonds of the Mayflower Hotel Co., Washington, D. C.

"It was proved at the hearing held by the subcommittee the

"It was proved at the hearing held by the subcommittee that the actual amounts paid for building the hotel (exclusive of land and furnishing) were $3,861,742.17. The assessment at full value, including land, building, equipment, and furnishings, based in part on sworn tax return, was a total for the hotel property complete of $5,232,120, less than half the lowest 'valuation' given in the Investment Bankers' circular. Against this valuation of $5,232,120 bonds amounting to $9,900,000 were issued. The first mortgage $100 bonds less than three years after their issue are publicly quoted at $65, while the second mortgage $100 bonds are quoted at $25."

May I ask if you recognize the name "Halsey"? Do you recall that R. T. H. Halsey was the gentleman who held those many dinner conferences in New York which eventually let to the formation of the Better Business Bureau of New York City and the $100,000 donation from the bankers and brokers to defray the first year expenses of the bureau?

Do you recall the failure and the cause of failure of William R. Compton?

Do you recall the failure and high-financing methods of Rogers Caldwell Co. and the number of banks that went down with him?

Each of these were paying their cash tribute to the better-business bureau, and you can not find from any better business bureau before or since the huge failures a line of criticism or one word of warning to the public about the crookedness they were carrying on—money had sealed the tongues of these bureaus.

"BANK OF UNITED STATES"

The "Bank of United States," a name to conjure with, just as the name "better-business bureau" tricks us, defaulted to 400,000 depositors, and even after the conviction of the officers of that bank and every other fact connected with their high financing and crookedness was blazoned forth by the press, not one word did you see about the bank being a large cash contributor to the money box of the better-business bureau and not one word of warning of impending disaster emanated from a better business bureau.

The fallures of Prince & Whitely, Pinchon & Co., Pogue, Pond

business bureau.

The failures of Prince & Whitely, Pinchon & Co., Pogue, Pond & Vivian, Riley & Brook, Meyer Keysely Bank, West & Co., Lorenzo E. Anderson, F. H. Smith & Co., Harry Wardman, Swartzell, Rheem & Hensey Co., Miller & Co., C. V. Bobb, Guibord White & Co., F. E. Kingston & Co., Partos Realty Corporation, Woody & Co., Curtis & Sanger, Schuyler, Chadwick & Burnham, Palmer & Co., J. A. W. Inglehart & Co., Throckmorton & Co., J. M. Byrne & Co., Kuntze Bros., Mandesville, Brools & Chaffee, Forshay & Co., and Mark C. Steinberg & Co., involved the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars to investors; money that was taken from the development of our legitimate business industries, and put in the pockets of these high financing better-business bureau contributors and not one word of warning was issued against any of them by these bureaus.

You recall the slogan of S. W. Straus Co., reading "45 years without a loss to an investor" and if you go a bit deeper you will see that this company indorsed the better-business bureau in the following words:

"We believe the bureau movement is entitled to the support

Paraphrased, this indorsement means "You boost me and I'll boost you," and following such thought it is small wonder that S. W. Straus & Co. was able to take many millions from our investors without a word of warning to the public from the better-business bureau; facts that they must have had if we believe the attorney general of New York, who admits having received "thousands of complaints against S. W. Straus & Co."

Geo. L. Miller & Co., with losses of millions of dollars to investors in their real estate bond sales, prevented the Better Business Bureau of New York City from circularizing an adverse report on Miller & Co. by giving a large cash subscription to the National Better Business Bureau.

BOSTON BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU

May I now quote from page 11 of the brief of Mr. E. C. Reigel on Frauds protected by the better-business bureau? Mr. Reigel says: "By permission we present part of a letter written to us under date of September 14, 1931, by William H. McMasters, Cambridge,

"Thank you for your letter of September 2, regarding the Boston Better Business Bureau, so-called.

"Thank you for your letter of September 2, regarding the Boston Better Business Bureau, so-called.

"My attacks upon the methods of this group of high-hat racketeers came as a result of their persistent defense of the United Founders Corporation and American Founders which two groups of investment trusts have milked the American public out of something like $250,000,000 in the last few years. Although still listed on the New York curb, they are practically bankrupt. I have written to Attorney General Bennett of New York and advised him to investigate them but he probably has other cases ahead that interfere. (Author's note: The other cases ahead that interfere are probably B. B. B. cases against nonmembers.)

"John Richardson, of Ropes, Gray, Boyden & Perkins, our biggest law firm, is president and counsel of the Boston Better Business Bureau, and alst acts as counsel for the United Founders. They offered me $5,000 to quit my attacks, but I went right ahead with them—filing a bill in the Massachusetts Legislature to investigate them. The bill was killed in committee, as it meant a public hearing at which I would have gone the limit. It was at another hearing that I assalled the bureau and showed its connection with the United Founders outfit. At that hearing the manager came up with the intention of doing a job on me, but quit cold after my address to the committee. You see, I have done so much newspaper work on a big scale that I can not be thrown off like some of the others who go after them. I wrote the Ponzi expose for the Boston Post, the biggest story that ever appeared in a Boston paper. Then I did a job on the Albany baseball pool for the Herald a few years ago, putting that crew of bandits into Atlanta, via the Federal courts.

"The bureau threatened to send out a story on me, personally, but I went over to their office and demanded a look at it. This was granted. I then told them that they could send it out at their peril. That I would see every director in their list and present the matter to the district attorney and if he did not act I would take it into the grand jury room personally.

"I have no personal grudge against them; but when I am engaged in slamming a band of highwaymen like the United Founders gang of investment thieves, I think it is just too bad to have a bureau that is supposed to represent only honest banking threaten me with all sorts of reprisals if I persist in exposing With unlimited money they engaged John Richardson, among other lawyers, to represent them. Being tied up with Harris, Forbes Co., now merged with Chase National, Richardson, as president of the better-business bureau, naturally played to help out his clients. As I was the only one who was attacking the Founders and explaining their methods and letting the light in on their personnel, the bureau tried to stop me. But in my case they quit. What will happen to the Founders is a question; their money is running out, their stocks are all dropping, their foreign holdings are a total loss. Their expenses are eating their heart out, and they are not getting hold of any new money. The racket is hot."

The following statement is from J. Edward Donahue, of Boston, under date of May 18, 1931, as related by Mr. Reigel:

under date of May 18, 1931, as related by Mr. Reigel:

The National City Co. employed Ropes, Gray, Boyden & Perkins as counsel here in Boston and Shearman & Sterling, of 79 Wall Street, the attorneys for the National City Co. of New York. B. Loring Young, a member of the firm of Ropes, Gray, Boyden & Perkins, was former speaker of the house here in Massachusetts and is very closely connected with those that administer the working of the blue sky law in this State. In fact, the National City crowd state that there was nothing that could be done; it was all fixed at the statebouse.

"The attorney, Joseph B. Jacobs, as well as myself, did go to the statehouse here in Boston to the department of public utilities that has charge of the operation of the blue sky laws. They were hostile to us; did not want to receive the complaint; advised us to go to the attorney general's office—anywhere to get rid Knowing something of the connection in politics between the attorney general's office and B. Loring Young, it was decided it would be better to go into criminal session of the municipal court would be better to go into criminal session of the municipal court here in Boston and apply for a warrant for the National City Co." "Two weeks ago to-day the National City Co.'s counsel were notified that an application would be made for a warrant on Wednesday morning before Judge Donovan, and they could be resent.

"This matter was brought before Judge Donovan, and it went to trial immediately on the facts—this was on Wednesday. B. Loring Young requested that the court give him until Friday to present his evidence, as he had to bring witnesses from New York. Wells, vice president of the National City Co. of New York, who was former vice president of the National City Co. of Boston, came over as well as Mr. Shepard of the law firm of Shearman & Sterling. Sterling.

"When Young came into court Friday he stated he had no defense—it was merely an oversight and wanted to be allowed to plead nolo, informing the court that if he found them guilty they plead nolo, informing the court that if he found them guilty they would probably lose their license, the place would be closed up, and 40 people would be thrown out of work. The court stated that if he wanted to plead nolo he would have to hear the evidence. After hearing the evidence he refused to allow them to plead nolo, found them guilty, and announced he would make disposition the following Monday morning, which he did—found them guilty on all 12 counts presented and fined them $5,000.

"In the statehouse here in Boston, the National City Co. filed papers by Wells, vice president, under oath dated March 6, 1929, that no convertible participating stock or common stock was to be sold to the public; yet, on the witness stand, he stated he knew two days previous to the signing of this document that the issues were to be sold to the public. What a lacing this fellow Wells got from Judge Donovan; one I don't think he will forget in a minute. He is guilty of perjury.

"As for the Better Business Bureau of Boston, it is a joke. It is a little detective agency operated by boys who do not know the difference between black and white, their policy being to harass the little fellow all they can, stir up publicity to divert attention away from those that contribute and operate the bureau's policy. The president of the Boston Better Business Bureau is a Mr. Richardson, a member of the law firm of Ropes, Gray, Boyden, & Perkins: still, his associate in the same law firm will defend and uphold such tactics by the National City, their principles being buried under the dollar sign.

"The Better Business Bureau's activities in so far as the big fellow is concerned, wink their eye, and some of the shady trans-actions their members have been in is a shame to the community. actions their members have been in is a sname to the community. Alaska Gold and Carson Hill Mining, both listed on the stock exchange, caused losses of millions to security buyers. As best I can figure out, the National City Co. in some of their issues here have trimmed the public to the tune of $30,000,000.

"The common stock of the Oliver Farm Equipment Co. cost the National City Co. $10 or less per share. It was sold here at 44%

One of this brigand's telegraphic "flashes" to salesmen in the early part of 1929 when in spite of the then, as now, existing farm depression, it was inflating the Oliver stock, reads as follows:

"We are adding the convertible participating stock to our list immediately at $67 per share until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, New York time. To the extent of the number of shares we will New York time. To the extent of the number of shares we will allot your office in wire to follow shortly. Premiums 15 cents per

The stock is now quoted (September 21, 1932) at $2. I quote from Mr. Reigel still further—

"The Henry L. Doherty Co. controls Cities Service Co., which in turn controls a number of gas and oil companies, pipe-line companies, and utilities. It is one of the largest stock-selling concerns in the country, its list of stockholders being over 400,000, second only to the American Telegraph & Telephone. Doherty is one of the pillars of the better-business bureau. He, in fact, financed the first attack by the bureau gaziert independent oil financed the first attack by the bureau against independent oil operators. He operates a crafty stock-selling scheme, whereby he defers delivery of the stock certificates a long time after payment, thus making it easier for him to maintain a fictitious market on thus making it easier for him to maintain a fictitious market on the New York Curb. By high-pressure selling he manages to keep sales far above the backwash of sales on the curb, which he is obliged to absorb. Everybody 'in the know' understands the game and it is, of course, a matter of full knowledge to the better-business bureau. We quote a letter sent to the National Better Business Bureau as early as December, 1930, by C. D. Neff, of Shreveport, La., and by him reproduced and circularized:

"'In regard to Cities Service, Standard Statistics' reports reveal that the earnings of Cities Service, after providing for dividends and interest on the underlying securities, if a reasonable deduction is made for depreciation, taxes, and insurance, does not provide the cash necessary to pay cash dividends on the common stock reported to be outstanding. This was based on the old rate of dividends, and the new rate would naturally create a greater differential."

"The I. T. I. O., a subsidiary of Cities Service, in its operation

"The I. T. I. O., a subsidiary of Cities Service, in its operation at Oklahoma City has pursued operating policies not founded upon sound economics or good oil-field practice, evidently the desire being to create the spectacular and get large newspaper notices over the country so that they could boost the sale of Cities Service common stock

"It is damn foolishness in a field where it costs $60,000 to $70,000 per well to drill wells, and their proration will not permit but about 200 barrels of oil to be moved for a company owning a solid block of leases throughout the entire field to drill anything but offset wells. Yet the I. T. I. O., a Cities Service subsidiary, has drilled hundreds of unnecessary wells and has spent millions of dollars unnecessarily in the Oklahoma City field to provide spectacular wells that Cities Service might boost the sale of its common stock.

"This is not a new move for Henry L. Doherty. At Eldorado, Kans., during that boom, while oil was selling for $2.50 per barrel, when the Empire controlled thousands of acres solid, it was equally when the Empire controlled thousands of acres solid, it was equally mismanaged, and, I am informed, millions of dollars were wasted in creating spectacular newspaper reports.

"The payment of monthly dividends by a giant concern supposed to be possessed of $1,000,000,000 in assets, is rank foolishness, and creates a financial drain that in the course of a year's time amounts to practically as much cash as is paid out in dividends. If Cities Service's assets were as great as they claim them to be, it would not be necessary for Henry L. Doherty to carry on continuously a stock-selling campaign, paying large sales commissions and spending millions of dollars in printed matter. If his common stock is earning 6 per cent, and his assets are as he claims them to be, he could borrow all of the money he wants at 3 or 4 per cent.

at 3 or 4 per cent.

"The contract under which Henry L. Doherty Co. sold Cities Service stock during 1929 provided that regardless of whether a man paid for his stock in full or not he was not to get delivery a man paid for his stock in full or not he was not to get delivery for a period of 10 months. The stock salesmen selling Cities Service made sales upon the representations that Cities Service stock was to go to $100 per share, so I am informed. They appealed to the avaricious instincts inherent in all men, and made their sales on a basis where the purchaser thought he could at any time sell his stock on the market and take a profit; but that little 'joker' of no delivery for 10 months was written in the contract. Hence, Henry L. Doherty Co. was able to wash and manipulate the market of Cities Service up to $68 per share, or more, when a fair book value on the common stock, as given to me by several statistical bureaus and the stock and bond department of several banks, was less than $10 per share.

"If such a system of stock-selling does not constitute a conspiracy to defraud, if it is not a misuse of the mails, then in the name of the Lord you better get busy and ask the President to pardon several hundred Texas oil promoters who were convicted and sent to the penitentiary on much less evidence.

"I know of one instance where one party inherited a few thousand dollars and collected a little life-insurance money and almost simultaneously with the receipt of the life-insurance check, a Cities Service salesman arrived and the old 'gag,' as explained above, was put across, and this party bought a large block of stock and was swindled out of every dollar of her patrimony.

"Tear up your questionnaire forms, take down the signs on your doors and admit that you are a failure and that you do not conscientiously perform the functions that you represent you do, if you are unwilling to do battle for right and expose the crookedness and piracy that exists among the issues listed on the big board.

"You and your associates are the 'sacred cows' that give the financial milk that keeps your damnable bureau in operation, when you have destroyed the independent merchant, when you have destroyed the independent oil producers and refiners, and have ravished the farmers, what other fields will you find then to conquer by false propaganda and sanctimonious hypocrisy? to conquer by false propaganda and sanctimonious hypocrisy?
"A more recent public statement is the following taken from the Oklahoma City Oil Journal, November 14, 1931:

"FACES BANKRUPTCY

"I. T. I. O. and the Cities Service, which is a corporation within a corporation, all being controlled by the firm of Doherty & Co., New York City, is the biggest stock-selling swindle ever foisted upon the American investing public.

"At the time oil was discovered in the Oklahoma City field both the Cities Service and the I. T. I. O., with a total capitalization of about a billion dollars, were on the eve of having a bankruptcy proceedings filed against them. Discovery of the city gusher field is all that saved the entire firm from going onto the financial rocks.

"Being backed by the cleverest stock-selling swindlers, the Cities Service et al., immediately launched a 'paper' boom on the New York stock market, sending Cities Service stock up to as high as $69 per share. Cities Service has been offered at $6 recently, but has gone begging at $3 per share in weeks past.

"SWINDLING WORKING GIRLS

"In nearly every big city of the country the Doherty firm renewed its stock-selling activities, working especially to secure stenographers, bookkeepers, and other working girls and young men to invest their small savings on the installment plan. Large forces of high-powered salesmen have been used in different States, carrying out the organized plan to get money.

"In Oklahoma City the entire floor of a big office building has been used by the Cities Service and I. T. I. O. security sales department.

"Of all the get-rich-quick promotions conducted through publicity stunts, the Cities Service and I. T. I. O. organizations put over the biggest money-raising campaign of any in history during

"WILD MARY SUDIK STUNT

"Estimates have been made by financiers that more than $5,000,000 was collected on the stock market through a fake publicity boom when the 'Wild Mary' Sudik gusher was 'broken' loose by the I. T. I. O. The gusher ran 'wild' for several days and nights, sending oil for miles over the surrounding territory. When the State officials, however, threatened to name a receiver to take charge of the 'Wild Mary' for the purpose of shutting down the oil and gas waste it took the I. T. I. O. field workers only a few hours to harness the well only a few hours to harness the well.

"No well in the Oklahoma City field secured as much free newspaper publicity as the 'Wild Mary' Sudik. No stock selling firm in history of oil secured as much 'sucker' money as the Cities Service-I. T. I. O. combination of swindlers.

"BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU INVOLVED

"Oklahoma City's better-business bureau, which has waged war on smaller operators in the city field, gave full and complete indorsement of the stock-selling methods of the Cities Service and I. T. I. O. This organization, which has preyed upon many legitimate firms that refused to donate blood money, even carried the advertisements of the Doherty firms, recommending the investments to all persons who had money to invest in Oklahoma City oil operations.

"Doherty has paid the hyreaus well for his involve metastic."

Doherty has paid the bureaus well for his 'public protection.' Our information is that his first subscription to the campaign against independent oil concerns was $60,000; that he later helped against independent oil concerns was $60,000; that he later helped the national bureau out of a hole by paying $50,000 borrowed from the banks; that he pays an annual subscription to the national bureau of $7,500, besides his subscription to various locals. He never deals in small figures, either in buying or selling."

It would require days to enumerate each and every one of the frauds perpetrated by better-business bureau members and to alwaying the facts concerning each case and I have made no elucidate the facts concerning each case, and I have made no attempt to do more than summarize the facts in the cases cited attempt to do more than summarize the facts in the cases cited—in fact, I have merely skimmed the surface in showing the subversion of business by these bureaus and how, through its usurpation of governmental authority, the small independent industrialist has been either blackmailed or made to feel the fangs of this country's greatest racket.

For every fraud dollar obtained from the public by a nonmember of the better-business bureau and exposed by a better-business bureau the public has been defrauded by more than a thousand dollars by bureau members, and the bureau chirped not a word.

To illustrate, let me cite the St. Louis Better Business Bureau and its activity in the sale of stock and bonds by brokers. Young Bros., a nonmember of the St. Louis bureau but a member of the Kansas City bureau, was given a merry ride by the St. Louis bureau, while Kansas City did nothing to thwart the Youngs. We credit the St. Louis bureau for bringing the Young Bros. manipulation to a head and preventing them from fleecing the public of more thousands; but what about the failure of the St.

public of more thousands; but what about the failure of the St. Louis bureau to take action in the Steinberg case, in the Rogers Caldwell's manipulations, in Lorenzo E. Anderson & Co., in W. R. Compton's, in Augustine & Co., and other companies who were contributing so handsomely to the St. Louis bureau?

Thousands were saved the public in the exposure of Young Bros., a nonmember of the St. Louis bureau, while millions were lost by the public through Steinberg's, Caldwell's, Anderson's, Compton's, and Augustine's stock and bond manipulations, protected by their St. Louis bureau with not a word of warning, and the St. Louis bureau had many complaints lodged against each.

POSTAL SERVICE SUBVERSION BY BETTER-BUSINESS BUREAUS

Ex-post-office inspectors, no matter why they are no longer in the service of the Government, find a ready haven for jobs with a better-business bureau.

Former United States Senator Jim Reed, of Missouri, so I am advised, was mainly instrumental in developing facts that caused W. C. Rosenbaum, ex-post-office inspector, to "voluntarily" resign at St. Louis, and we hear of him next as an important official of the Better Business Bureau of St. Louis in 1928, attempting to appear as counsel in cases where he claimed to be acting for a client who had never laid eyes on him before; and it is only a short time later that we learn that Rosenbaum is impersonating a Government officer by posing as "Post Office Inspector W. C. Rosenbaum."

Postmaster General Brown was given a photostatic copy of a letter from the man before whom he had posed as a post-office inspector, and was asked to investigate; * * * the charges pigeonholed.

There is a bureau unit in St. Louis and also in Detroit each a separate and distinct legal entity unto itself. Each unit publishes a monthly propaganda sheet. The name of the Detroit bureau paper being called the Factfinder, which is mailed at Detroit at regular postage rates. The name of the St. Louis paper is called Bulletin and is mailed, under a permit from the Post Office Department as second-class mail matter, which we all know is much cheaper than third class, or regular postage rates.

In July, 1932, in order to save postage and in direct violation of the act of Congress, March 3, 1879, embodied in section 394, Postal Laws and Regulations; and the provisions of section 422 Postal Laws and Regulations, the St. Louis Better Business Bureau, mailed as second-class matter under its second-class permit, reau, mailed as second-class matter under its second-class permit, copies of the June, 1932, Factfinder issued by the Detroit Better Business Bureau to several thousand subscribers and nonsubscribers of the St. Louis Better Business Bureau.

Complaint was duly lodged with the United States district attorney and the post-office inspector and subsequently found its way to the desk of Hon. F. A. Tilton, Third Assistant Postmaster General, whose letters to me shows a studied fear of even mentioning the name better-business bureau, much less of importance than the action such a violation demanded from our duly constituted law-enforcement officers. I quote the last letters that passed between me and Mr. Tilton:

MR. TILTON'S LETTER OF SEPTEMBER 14, 1932

"Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 2d instant, in further regard to the publication mentioned therein.

"As stated in the letter from this office to you of the 20th ultimo, the irregularities mentioned in your letter of August 10, concerning the publication are being given proper attention. The instructions to the postmaster in regard to the matter are for his official use. It is contrary to the practice of the department to go into matters pertaining to a publisher's business with other than the publishers themselves."

MY ANSWER TO MR. TILTON DATED SEPTEMBER 19, 1932

"Your letter of September 14, your file C. D. No. 22558, with reference to the complaint filed by the writer with you and the United States attorney at St. Louis against the Better Business Bureau of St. Louis for violation of the second-class mail privilege in mailing as a supplement to the Bulletin of the St. Louis bureau the Factfinder, published by the Better Business Bureau of Detroit of Detroit.

"Your letter is entirely unsatisfactory and shows a studied effort of your department to protect this violator of our postal laws; your letter going so far as being actually afraid to put their name down in black and white and only refer to this better-business bureau as 'the publication,' which, in itself, conveys the thought that there is some tie-up between the bureaus and your department as has been openly charged and filed with the Investigating Committee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

"You state that 'it is contrary to the practice' of your department to go into matter pertaining to a publisher's business, and I direct your attention to the specific fact that a violation of the law, whether statute law or postal regulations, is not the business of the publication, but the business of those of us citizens who constitute the Government of this country. Such a theory on your part may be a dogma of your department, but it is not in conformity with the Constitution of this country.

"Having personally filed the complaint, with supporting evidence, in this case against the Better Business Bureau of St. Louis, and as a citizen of this country entitled to know what action the department has taken in complaints filed with it, I now respectfully insist that you advise me what action, if any, has been taken in the matter."

MR. TILTON'S REPLY DATED SEPTEMBER 26, 1932

"Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 19th instant in further regard to the publication mentioned therein.

"There is nothing before the department to sustain your allegation that the circulation of the publication does not conform to the requirements of the law.

"Matters pertaining to the postage on mailings of a publisher or other person are taken up with the mailer and, as you have been advised, it is contrary to the practice of the department to go into matters pertaining to a mailer's business with others than the mailers themselves."

Only one conclusion can be logically drawn from the abovecited letters, and that conclusion is that violations by a better-business bureau of our postal regulations is not a matter of prosecution or publicity due to the subversion of the Post Office Department by these better-business bureaus, who make it a practice to hire ex-post-office inspectors.

A citation directed to the Postmaster General's office and practice to hire ex-post-office inspectors.

A citation directed to the Postmaster General's office and ordering the production of the hundreds of complaints that have been lodged against these various better business bureaus and which have been pigeon-holed by these postal officials, will unearth a sordid story unequaled in the pages of history.

And these officials, you will recall, have to be supplied at Government's expense, with new and especially built Lincolns, so their silk hats will have ample space, which is to them, more important than the enforcement of the postal regulations.

LEGALITY OF BETTER-BUSINESS-BUREAU ACTS AND THE LIABILITY OF THEIR OFFICERS AND MEMBERS

All better-business bureaus obtain charters as educational institutions for the purpose of camouflaging the real reason for exist-ence; and none of them have any capital stock, for the reason that there would be something tangible for any injured person to recoup damages resulting from illegal acts of these various better business-bureau units.

Not being chartered under the ordinary commercial business statutes, which require capital stock and tangible assets, an officer and a member of these better-business bureaus can not claim the same legal protection that a stockholder in a domestic corporation could claim for the illegal acts of officers and directors of such domestic corporation.

It is well settled that where corporate form is used by individthe well settled that where corporate form is used by individuals for the purpose of evading the law—and, I may add, for the purpose of libeling, blackmailing, eliminating competition, and defeating justice, as is done daily by these better-business bureaus—that our courts will not permit these frauds and wrongs to go unpunished. One of our leading cases is aptly stated in the case of First National Bank of Chicago v. Trevein (50 Ohio St. 316), as follows:

Where the corporate form is used by individuals for the purpose of evading the law or for the perpetration of fraud, the courts will not permit the legal entity to be interposed so as to defeat

Or as was clearly stated in the Donovan v. Furtell case (216 III.

Or as was clearly stated in the Donovan v. Furten case (216 III, 629, 75 N. E. Rep. 334):

"A corporation is often organized to act as a cloak for frauds. Such cases as these are becoming common and the courts are becoming more inclined to ignore the corporate existence when necessary in order to circumvent the fraud."

And our Supreme Court supports this contention fully in the case of McCaskill & Co. v. United States (216 U. S. 504), in these words:

"A growing tendency is therefore exhibited in the courts to look beyond the corporate form to the purpose of it and to the officers who are identified with that purpose."

It is my pleasure now to discuss these better-business bureau corporations from a legal standpoint, and I expect to show that they are strictly limited in their power and that the only power they have is that power specifically granted to them under their charter, i. e., the power to adopt by-laws and regulations governing their own members and to enforce those powers against their own members alone, and that they are without one single vestice of their own members and to enforce those powers against their own members alone, and that they are without one single vestige of power to control or regulate the conduct of any person not a member of a bureau unit; I expect to show that the very nature of their legal existence is but a cloak to cover up its frauds and wrongdoings and that each officer, agent, and member is individually liable for the torts committed by the corporate entity through the neglect of the members and officers to properly supervise the activities of their corporate agents.

POWERS OF CORPORATION

corporation, read in connection with the general laws applicable to it, is the measure of the powers of the corporation, and the general doctrine in this country is that the powers of a corporation organized under legislative statutes are such, and such only, as those statutes confer. It remains that a charter containing specific powers implies the exclusion of all others. Authority for these statements can be found in Thomas v. Railway Co. (101 U. S. 71); State v. Lincoln Trust Co. (144 Mo. 582) Mo. 562).

The rule is thus stated in another case as follows:

The rule is thus stated in another case as follows:

"A corporation is a mere operation of law, and has only such powers as are expressly granted by the State or are necessary to carry into effect the powers expressly granted." (Weyeth Hdw. Co. v. James Spencer Bateman, in 15 Utah 110; 47 Pacific 604.)

See also Booker v. Mayvill R. R. (119 Ky. 137); Baltimore, etc., R. R. v. United Elec. Co. (92 Md. 138); First Natl. Bank v. American Natl. Bank (173 Mo. 193); Sturdevant v. Farmers & Merchants Bank (69 Nebr. 220); Louisville Termis. v. Lellyet (114 Tenn. 368).

An enumeration of powers as granted by implication excludes all others not necessary or proper to carry those enumerations into effect. (Case v. Kelly, 133 U. S. 21.)

Elliott on Private Corporation, fifth edition, page 88, section 93, says:

"The exercise by a private corporation of franchises or privileges not conferred by law may lead to forfeiture of charter."
(New Orleans, etc., v. Louisiana, 185 U. S. 336; State v. Delmar

And the same authority, on page 134, section 131, says:

"Power in a legal sense signifies legal competence, capacity, or right. A corporation created by the sovereign power for particular purposes has such powers only as the State grants it. Unlike a natural person, it does not possess those general powers which are common to all."

In order that a corporation may enjoy and derive power by In order that a corporation may enjoy and derive power by implication, it must appear that such power is necessary to the enjoyment of the specially granted power, without which the latter would to a substantial degree fail. People v. Chicago Trust Co. (130 Ill. 268); Franklin County v. Lewiston (68 Me. 43); Herrick v. Humphrey Hdwe. Co. (73 Nebr. 809).

"A corporation is an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law. Being a mere creature of law it possesses only those properties which the charter of its creation confers upon it, either expressly or as incidental in its

New York Central Railroad v. United States (1909) (212 U. S. 481-493).

It follows from the above citations that since better-business bureaus usually provide in their charters the power only to promote and maintain fair and truthful advertising, that the usurpation by it of any power or pretended authority to regulate the conduct of any business, to cause the arrest of any violator of the law, or to otherwise assume the function of our civil and criminal courts, however justified that may be from a supposed "public-welfare" interest, is entirely without their charter rights and is proper ground for quo warranto proceedings to oust it from the State. from the State.

That any ultra vires (beyond charter) acts of the corporation impose liabilities upon the directors for losses ensuing from such acts the following cases attest: Red Bud Realty Co. v. Directors are liable for the torts of the corporation, permitted by the directors' negligence, to be committed. Frontier Mill v. Roy White (1914) (25 Idaho 478, 490, 491); Cameron v. K. C. Com. Co. (1899) (22 Mont. 312, 318, 319).

POWERS AND LIABILITIES OF DIRECTORS

The powers of a board of directors are, in an important sense. original and undelegated. They are derivative only in the sense of being received from the State in the act of incorporation. (1883), 3 Utah 265-271.)

The affairs of a corporation are in the hands of its board of directors; the board consists of individuals, each of whom is "part of an elected body of officers constituting the executive agents of the corporation." (Manson v. Curtis (1918), 223 N. Y. 313-322, supra.)

The difference in nomenclature, i. e., trustees of charitable and educational institutions and directors of business enterprises, is not supported by either factual or legal differentiation. (Matter of Mount Sinai Hospital (1929), 250 N. Y. 103-107.)

Where the board of directors commits acts in violation of its duties, participating members are jointly and severally liable for their misdeeds. (Fisher v. Parr (1901), 92 Md. 245–273; Corey v. And this is so without regard to the degree of dereliction of which each director may be guilty. (Asphalt Const. Co. v. Bouker (N. Y. 1914), 150 App. Div. 691-694; Cooper v. Hill (1899), 94 Fed. 582-587, 588.)

It has been said that wrongdoing directors are joint tort feasors. (Braswell v. Morrow (1928), 195 N. S. 127, 130.)

feasors. (Braswell v. Morrow (1928), 195 N. S. 127, 130.)

Directors must use the same degree of care that is properly employed by an ordinary prudent business man under the same or similar circumstances in his own business. (Stone v. Rottman (1904), 183 Mo. 552-572; Besseliew v. Brown (1918), 177 N. C. 65, 67.)

Upon accepting a directorship the director gives an implied promise that he will attend to his duties with that degree of care which the situation demands and that he has a competent knowledge of the nature of their functions. (Dunn Admr. v. Kyle Executor etc. (1878), 77 Ky. 134, 140; Hun v. Carey (1880), 82 N. Y. 65-73; Warren v. Robinson (1899), 19 Utah 289, 303.)

A director's inattention to his duties is not excused by the fact that he receives no compensation for his work. (Bank v. Hill (1896), 148 Mo. 380-392; Williams v. McKay (1885), 40 N. J. Eq. 189-195; Michelson v. Pierce (1900), 107 Wis. 85-87; Virginia Carolina Chem. Co. v. Ehrich (1916), 230 Fed. 1005-1006.)

A director is not obliged to assume office in the first place, and he has an unqualified right to resign at any time, and his continuance as a director is evidence of the fact that he is willing to serve without compensation and clearly it would be unfair to permit him to avoid liability created by his own neglect of self-imposed duties where that neglect has caused damage to others. A director is chargeable not only with knowledge actually acquired by him in the course of his work, but a director is pre-

He may not urge ignorance of facts that he should have known as a defense to an action against him. (Marksberry v. First Natl. Bank (1922), 194 Ky. 401-411; Allen v. A director is bound and presumed to know any event of unusual importance, either at the time or soon thereafter. (Savings Bank v. Wulfekikler (1877), 19 Kans. 60, 64.)

A director can not blindly shut his eyes to what is transpiring

A director can not blindly shut his eyes to what is transpiring about him and shelter himself behind the claim of ignorance. As a director he was chargeable with such knowledge as he gained or as he might have learned by the exercise of reasonable care. (McClure v. Wilson (1902), 70 App. (N. Y.) 149–153.) The common-law liability for negligence is not excluded by statutory liabilities. (Great Western M. & M. Co. v. Harris Estate (1901), 11 Fed. 38, 42.)

It is no defense for a director to such an action that he acted in good faith. (Anthony v. Jeffries (1916), 172 N. C. 378, 380.)

The duty of a director is to direct. He can not sit idly by and leave the affairs of the corporation to others and later seek to avoid liability upon the ground of lack of knowledge. (McClure v. Wilson (N. Y. 1902), 70 App. Div. 149; Besseliew v. Brown (1919), 177 N. C. 65, 68, 69; Bowerman v. Hamerr (1919), 250 U. S. 503-513.)

The position of director is not to be regarded as a nominal honor, permitting the choosing of a director for the mere use of his name. (Virginia-Carolina Chem. Co. v. Ehrich (1916), 230

Gross inattention to the affairs of the corporation is in and of itself actual negligence. (Cameron v. K. C. Com. Mo. (1899), 22 Mont. 312; McCormick v. King (1917), 241 Fed. 737-745; Bowerman v. Hammer (1919), 250 U. S. 504.)

Delegation of authority to others by the board does not relieve the board of the duty of proper supervision, and the possibility of inconvenience is something that the individual director should considered before accepting office. (Densimore v. Jackson (1928), 242 Mich. 192.)

Failure on the part of a director to attend meetings and give attention to the matters there considered is to be regarded as actionable negligence. (Becker v. Billings (1920), 220 Ill. App.

Directors are not excused from liability because they committed their duties to an executive committee, for if they saw fit to rely on the executive committee it was their own reliance and at their own risk, they may delegate the work but not the responsibility. LIARILITY OF MEMBERS

That the better-business bureaus individually and collectively acting as the Affiliated Better Business Bureaus (Inc.) are conspiracies in restraint of trade and in violation of the Sherman and Clayton Acts and the antitrust acts of many States is now fully supported by evidence and all that is now necessary is that the administration stimulate their interest to effect conviction of all members. The most forceful analogy of this is the "Danbury hatters' case" because it was carried to the United States Supreme Court and hence is affirmed by our highest authority. Supreme Court and hence is affirmed by our highest authority.

I am going to suggest that you get the full record of the Danbury Hatters' case, from its beginning in 1903 to its ending in 1915, when the $240,000 judgment in favor of D. E. Loewe & Co. against Martin Lawlor and 250 others, as individual members of the Hatters' Union was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States (235 U. S. 522).

The necessary facts to be stated for your benefit about that case are these: The suit was instituted, not against the Hatters' Union as an organization, but against Martin Lawlor and 250 other individual members who paid dues to the organization. On demurrer to the complaint, a writ of error was taken to the Federal circuit court of appeals, which in turn certified to the United States Supreme Court the question, "Whether such a case, if proven, would come under the clause of the Sherman Antitrust Act?" The unanimous decision of the court, delivered by Chief Justice Fuller, February 3, 1908, held that such cases came under Justice Fuller, February 3, 1908, held that such cases came under the statute as conspiracies in restraint of trade (208 U. S. 274). The suit was then tried in the United States circuit court and The suit was then tried in the United States circuit court and lasted from August 26 to October 11, the verdict awarding plaintiff Loewe $80,000, which, when trebled, as provided under the Sherman Antitrust Act, amounted to $240,000. An appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Second District, was taken and the judgment of the lower court affirmed (209 Fed. 721). It was then taken to the United States Supreme Court, which also affirmed the judgment (235 U. S. 522).

The Hon. Walter G. Merritt, of counsel for Loewe, made these points:

bound by its constitution * * * they are responsible * * * even though under the constitution (of the organization) their officers were forbidden to do anything but lawful acts * * * they were paying their dues and they could be and were informed as to what was going on, for their officers published journals monthly * * telling what they had done, although they say they were campaign documents."

Stop and study those words

Stop and study those words. They fit these better-business bureaus like a glove, even to the publication of their bulletins, which informs all members of what is being done by the corporate entity.

"You may not like me; you need not speak to me. You may not like my store; you need not trade in it. You may not like my factory; you need not work in it. But you shall not organize men against me to ruin my business. I have a right to conduct that business and you have no right to destroy it.

"Men have certain rights of life, liberty, reputation, property, and business. You can take my life; that is murder. You may say evil things about me; that is slander. You can put me in a room and chain me there; that deprives me of my liberty. And when you organize men against my business, that is boycott. To do these things is not only to turn against the laws of this country, but to turn against the eternal laws and the laws of Moses."

OUR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

When our forefathers fled from England to escape from political and religious tyranny, from Charles and James; to escape the per-secution and the restrictions which were imposed upon individual secution and the restrictions which were imposed upon individual liberty by combinations, and by threats of one kind and another, they came to this country and subsequently adopted the Constitution of these United States for a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people; and there has been no interruption of that governmental authority. It does not make any difference whether a man is rich or poor, whether he is classed as a capitalist or as an employee, we are all equal before the law, and you can not put any construction upon our Constitution that will grant it in one case and withhold it in another; no such construction on it that will give the so-called better-business bureau the right to obtain money from so-called "membership dues" the right to obtain money from so-called "membership dues" and use that money to exterminate, control, or regulate a business that may be in competition with its contributing members, for that is a heritage no corporation can have; it is the police for that is a heritage no corporation can have; it is the police power of our Government, and can not be conveyed to private enterprises.

I say that these unlawful acts of the bureaus come directly under the Sherman antitrust law and that it flagrantly violates these laws and our Constitution in its daily activities and that the decision of the United States Supreme Court means what it says in the Danbury Hatters' case. Every contributor to the bureau is liable to the same extent as were the contributors of the Hatters' Union to Loewe, and it is a matter of history that this $240,000 judgment was collected by attachments on property and on the bank accounts of those defendants who contributed, and that these attachments extended from the New England States to California.

CONCLUSION

May I now call the attention of you gentlemen of the Banking and Currency Committee to the history of the United States, and why we have grown from a Nation of about 4,000,000 to a Nation on July 4, 1776, the Declaration of Independence was signed by John Hancock and the 55 representatives of the then 13 States, and you gentlemen will recall the words of wisdom so strongly stated in the major portion of the second paragraph, reading as

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That whenever any form of government becomes destructive to these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes, and accordingly all experience hath shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government and to provide new guards for their future security."

Our Constitution was subsequently drafted, ratified by the ments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from

Our Constitution was subsequently drafted, ratified by the States, and went into effective operation on the first Wednesday (4th day) of March, 1789, and section 9, article 1, contains the entence

"No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce." The fourth amendment of the Constitution says:
"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized." be seized.

The fifth amendment reads, in part, as follows:
"No person shall be * * * deprived of life.

"No person shall be * * * deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."
Section 1, Article XIV, says:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enand of the State wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of Resting upon the foundation of these constitutional guaranties our Nation began to grow in wealth and power surpassing that of any other country of the world. No other nation has ever been blessed by kind Providence as we have been prior to the present era. Our natural resources were developed and our industries hummed, our output of worldly goods increased to such volume that the very magnitude of it surpassed that of England, who had ruled the oceans for years. We successfully hurdled every war and we came out of each with honor and glory. We emerged finally as the largest creditor nation of the world, and no doubt that this condition is the direct cause of the licentious, lustful, and hitherto unrestrained scheme and racket that has been conducted by the bankers and brokers of Wall Street, aided and abetted by their paid servant and puppet—the better-business bureau system.

Prior to the unholy alliance made by these bankers, brokers, and better-business bureaus in 1922 our prosperity increased by leaps and bounds hardly to be depicted by mere words only. We were a Nation living, as a whole, on a plane never before enjoyed by any nation under the sun.

The subversion of our Government began in June, 1922, the bankers and brokers of Wall Street raised for, and paid to, the better-business bureau their first $100,000 jack pot.

Since that historic period the bankers have fleeced us un-mercifully in the sale to us of foreign bonds of varied and dubious value, the brokers of Wall Street with their New York Stock Exchange have drained from us the remaining wealth of our country, and the two together now have that wealth locked in vaults while our industries remain idle for lack of capital, and labor is prevented from earning a living by the sweat of their brow.

The whelp of these bankers and brokers, self-styled under a conjured name—better-business bureau—have ursurped the police powers of our Nation, while they themselves are criminal violators of each and every one of our constitutional guarantics. lators of each and every one of our constitutional guaranties which I have just quoted

These better-business bureaus are and have been attempting to dictate a preference in the regulation of commerce, in direct violation of section 9, Article I, through the illegal act of forcing industry to contribute to their racket or else suffer the humiliation of being publicly branded as crooks and the commerce of these nonmember industries to be directed into the lap of bureau contributors.

These better-business bureaus violate the "search and seizure" immunities guaranteed us under the fourth article of our Constitution each and every time they invade any industry or business and forcibly take possession of or demand possession of any letter, contract, book, or other property of that industry or business of any citizen without a warrant such as prescribed in this section of our Constitution. It is but a step from such procedure when these bureau snoopers will be bodily kicked out, and a citizen has that right to resist by any force necessary, until we reach a stage of civil insurrection.

The guaranties of the equal protection of our laws as enumerated by the Declaration of Independence and by the fourteenth amendment of our Constitution are but a scrap of paper to these parasites of business; and life, liberty, and property are words of parasites of business; and life, liberty, and property are words of no importance, since a better-business bureau, as presently con-ducted, is the law and Constitution unto itself; and with a strangle hold on our duly appointed and elected officials we will be helpless without proper protection which this honorable committee will safeguard to our citizens by proper recommendations to the Congress and our law-enforcement officials.

I would like to quote the words of wisdom that fell from the lips of the late and lamented Theodore Roosevelt in June of 1912:

"It is the eternal struggle between two principles—right and wrong. They are the two principles that have stood face to face wrong. They are the two principles that have stood face to face from the beginning of time. The one is the common right of humanity, the other the divine right of kings. It is the same principle in whatever shape it envelops itself. It is the same spirit that says 'You toil and work and earn bread, and I will eat it.' No matter in what shape it comes, whether from the mouth of a king who bestrides the people of his own nation and who lives from the fruit of their labor, or from one race of men as an apology for enslaving another race, it is the same tyrannical principle

"Were Lincoln alive to-day, he would add that it is also the same principle which is now at stake when we fight on behalf of the many against the oppressor in modern industry, whether the abuse of special privilege be by a man whose wealth is great or little, whether by the multimillionaire owner of railways and mines and factories who forgets his duties to those who earn his bread while earning their own, or by the owner of a foul sweat-shop who coins dollars from the excessive and underpaid labor of haggard women.

"We who stand for the cause of progress are fighting to make this country a better place to live in for those who have been harshly treated by fate; and if we succeed, it will also be a better place for those who are well off.

"None of us can really prosper permanently if masses of our fellows are debased and degraded, if they are ground down and forced to live starved and sordid lives, so that their souls are crippled like their bodies and the fine edge of their every feeling is blunted. We stand for the cause of the uplift of humanity and the "We stand for the cause of the uplift of humanity and the betterment of mankind. We are pledged to eternal war against wrong, whether by the few or the many, by a plutocracy or by a mob. We believe that this country will not be a permanently good place for any of us to live in, unless we make it a reasonably good place for all of us to live in."

Gentlemen, you can not sit idly by and permit the desecration of our constitutional rights by these usurpers of our governmental agencies if you heed the words of that great man, Theodore Roosevelt; and it must be born in the Roosevelt blood for that family to fight so earnestly and seriously for the rights of life, liberty, and property as we will see by the following pertinent comment of our next President, the Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in his following statement:

"One hoax was the unnecessary organization of many unnec "One hoax was the unnecessary organization of many unnecessary promotions in every part of the country. Some so-called 'private banking houses' and even some public banks brought about consolidations for the sole purpose of selling watered stock.

* * Many billions of dollars were spent by the public for handsomely engraved certificates representing but little else but a pathetic hope of wealth * * * another looting scheme of these 'private banking houses' was in foreign loans * * * these bankers sent their agents to scour two continents for borrowers. The bankers demanded and got exorbitant commissions and interest rates * * * the foreign 'investment' business became so general that even the best financial minds lost perspective: even general that even the best financial minds lost perspective; even supposedly reputable investment bankers cooperated with foreign interests to make suckers of American investors.

interests to make suckers of American investors.

"The National Government did not take the trouble to analyze the state and facts at its disposal. Our own Treasury Department and even our own Federal Reserve Board itself took not one single step to discourage the mounting orgy of speculation—until it was too late. Our present administration can not plead ignorance.

"The Government must protect its citizens against financial buccaneering. No Federal administration can prevent individuals from being suckers, but our Government has the right as well as the positive duty to dissect, for the benefit of the public, every new form of financial action."

I earnestly beseech that you gentlemen of the Banking and Cur-new form of financial action."

I earnestly beseech that you gentlemen of the Banking and Currency Committee listen to the call of these two great Roosevelts; that you dissect, for the benefit of your constituents, for the benefit of all of our Nation, for the benefit of your own selves, this new form of financial racketeering which is being fostered on this great country by these agencies draped in sheep's clothing and parading as public benefactors for the sole purpose of crucifying business while furthering their own racket.

I respectfully submit the case of the people against these financial buccaneers to the best dictates of your own conscience.

POSTPONEMENT OF MORTGAGE FORECLOSURES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5639) providing for loans or advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of securing the postponement of the foreclosure of certain mortgages for a period of two years, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah].

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, in connection with the pending bill I should like to have printed in the RECORD a letter from E. H. Thomson, president of the Federal Land Bank of Springfield, Mass., giving very useful information as to the situation of farm-mortgage loans in Massachusetts.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> FEDERAL LAND BANK OF SPRINGFIELD, MASS., February 13, 1933.

Mr. L. B. BOSTON

Mr. L. B. BOSTON,
Director Division of Reclamation, Soil Survey, and Fairs, Department of Agriculture, State House, Boston, Mass.
DEAR Mr. Boston: Your favor of February 10 with reference to the farm-mortgage situation in Massachusetts is at hand.

Dark Mr. Boston: Your layor of rebruary 10 with reference to the farm-mortgage situation in Massachusetts is at hand.

I am pleased to furnish such information as would appear to have a bearing on the subject. From the last census we find there are 25,598 farms in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Of those operated by owners, 52.4 per cent report mortgage debt. The average amount of the mortgage debt per farm is $3,089, and represents approximately 36 per cent of the value of the real estate. The average rate of interest paid by farmers on these mortgages is 6.14 per cent. The percentage representing mortgage debt is a little higher than in some of the other New England States, I do not know the reason for this.

The Federal Land Bank of Springfield, which was organized in 1917, and which operates through the medium of national farmioan associations, has made 2,341 loans in Massachusetts, in the amount of $7,037,505, from organization to January 31, 1933. The average size of these loans is $3,000 and the average rate which the farmers pay is 5.46 per cent.

These loans are all made on a long-term payment plan whereby a small sum is paid on the principal twice a year, together with interest on the unpaid balance. In other words, effort is made to fit the mortgage to the farm business in such a way that payments can be easily made. As long as a farmer keeps up his installments and his tayes and operators the form in a researchly good manner.

can be easily made. As long as a farmer keeps up his installments and his taxes and operates the farm in a reasonably good manner, his loan can not be called. This has been a very great factor this past year, when so many local savings banks and trust companies have felt the shrinkage in deposits and have been compelled to call for payment of mortgages.

For the year 1932 the Federal Land Bank of Springfield made new mortgage loans in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in the sum of $445,500 to 125 farmers. All applications have been accepted and approved where the farmer offered reasonable security and could demonstrate good management and integrity of purpose.

I think I can safely say that the farm-mortgage proble relatively not acute in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. problem is experience of the Federal Land Bank of Springfield with its mort-gage loans in Massachusetts has been favorable. The total losses of every description suffered on $7,037,505 for the entire 15-year period is $6,170.19, or slightly less than nine-hundredths of 1 per cent of the amount loaned. This very favorable showing is due to the stability of Massachusetts agriculture and to the financial integrity of its farm owners.

At the present time with the ruinously low prices for certain At the present time with the ruinously low prices for certain farm products, obviously some farmers must be given extension of time in which to meet their payments. It is the policy of this bank to consider each case individually and to work with the farmer in a constructive and sympathetic manner. I can say with confidence that no loan has been foreclosed where the farmer had the slightest chance of working out of his difficulties and where he was making an honest effort to succeed.

In a few instances the farms have been abandoned, the buildings have become badly dilapidated, or the farmer so hopelessly involved with other debts that foreclosure was necessary. These have been the exceptions. In such cases it has been the policy of the bank to endeavor to place the farms in the hands of deserving and competent owners who appreciate a farm home and who

I would also add that the good will and splendid cooperation from the department of agriculture of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and other agencies interested in furthering the welfare of farmers have been of great help in carrying out a sound loaning program.

If there are any further data you may wish, or other questions, I shall be very glad to hear from you.
Yours very truly,

E. H. THOMSON, President.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, when we recessed on Saturday we had up for consideration the bill (S. 5639) providing for loans or advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of securing the postponement of the foreclosure of certain mortgages for a period of two years, and for other purposes. There was some demand at the time for an explanation of the bill. As chairman of the subcommittee which had to do with the measure, I was unable to get the floor to throw what light I could on the subject. Two or three or four Senators were on the floor at one time and all talking at once, so the matter went over until to-day. I take it the Senate would like a brief explanation of the developments and hearings with reference to the measure.

There were five or six more bills referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I was chairman of the subcommittee having to do with farm relief and agricultural finance, to which the bills were referred. We had a good many hearings, extending over many days. A number of bills were being considered and discussed. It became apparent that we would be unable to complete the hearings during the few days left in the session; and even if we did complete the hearings, that we were going to be unable to prepare a bill that would meet the views of most of those concerned and of the committee, get it before the full committee, and then reported by the full committee to the floor of the Senate, and then get it passed through the Senate.

The subcommittee then decided that we had better postpone further hearings on the broad general proposition looking to permanent legislation covering the whole field and take that matter up during the recess. We expect to continue the hearings on bills that are before us or on the subjects covered by those bills during the recess, with the hope that we shall be able to report a bill at the extra session which will provide for permanent legislation reorganizing or perhaps consolidating the agencies now in effect looking to farm relief and agricultural finance. It would take several days to complete those hearings, and then it would take some time to harmonize the differences and to get the legislation in shape to report to the full committee.

Five members were added to the subcommittee, making a subcommittee of 10 members, and we decided that for the present we had better devote ourselves to emergency legislation. Our only hope was that we might be able to get through the Senate some emergency measure which would give relief to the borrowers throughout the country, particularly with reference to farm loans. The bill introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Hull] laid the foundation for this emergency legislation. We took that measure up and considered it for some days, held hearings on it, and, finally, at the suggestion of various members of the committee and as a result of the hearings, there were some changes made in the bill, some modifications of it, and as changed and modified it was introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Hull] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott]. That is the bill now before us, except that when the subcommittee reported the bill to the full committee there were certain amendments offered to it in the full committee, and to those amendments I will now refer.

The primary purpose of the legislation, as will be seen, is confined to the emergencies of the present day. We want, if we can, to stop foreclosures on farms throughout the country.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. Let me ask the Senator if the amendments proposed by the subcommittee and ratified by the full committee are contained in the reintroduced bill so that it does not show what the amendments were?

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill in its present form does not show the amendments.

Mr. BROOKHART. They are all included in the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there was a reprint of the bill as agreed to by the full committee.

Mr. BROOKHART. That is the way I find it.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the way we have it now. But the bill contains certain provisions which were proposed in the full committee, not by the subcommittee, and which were not in the original bill. The bill does not know exactly what amendments were made by the full committee, but it embodies all those amendments, and the bill was reintroduced, I take it, and reprinted as the full committee finally agreed on it.

As I was saying, the primary purpose of the legislation is to provide practically for a moratorium on all these loans for two years, and then to provide for a reduction in interest rates on all taxes past due, all interest past due, and all installments past due, which now make these mortgages subject to foreclosure. It removes all danger of foreclosure for two years, and as to all these mortgages it reduces the rate of interest to 4 per cent on all taxes, interest, and installments which are past due.

The Senator from Idaho, as I understand, has offered an amendment to reduce that 4 per cent to 3½ per cent. Is not that correct?

Mr. BORAH. I offered an amendment on Saturday night reducing the rate to 3 per cent, but I am going to change that to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well. I will state that it developed in the hearings that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was now paying the Treasury $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, and we thought they ought to have at least a margin of one-half of 1 per cent to cover the cost of administration. There will be considerable expense in connection with the administration of this bill, and this one-half of 1 per cent will not more than cover that cost of administration, it seems to me, and it will leave nothing to take care of any losses that may occur.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are paying the Treasury 3 per cent, and are allowing themselves one-half of 1 per cent for the purpose of paying expenses?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Therefore I thought that they were not entitled to make anything out of the transaction, and that the rate should be reduced to 3½ per cent. That would take care of the interest they would have to pay and would provide also an amount with which to pay expenses of administration.

Mr. FLETCHER. I quite agree with the Senator that they ought not to make any profit, and we did not intend that they should, and they will not be able to; but the Senator is quite in error in supposing that they are only paying 3 per cent. The testimony before the committee by those in charge of such affairs was that they were now paying 3½ per cent to the Treasury for the money obtained.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that the Government will be compelled to borrow large sums of money in the immediate future, on account of obligations amounting to several billion dollars maturing within 60 days, and $8,000,000,000 maturing within perhaps six or eight months, I suggest to the Senator that it is quite possible, indeed, probable, that the Government will not be able to borrow money perhaps at 4 per cent in the course of a few months.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I disagree with the Senator upon that proposition, for the experience of the last few months shows that the people are anxious to put their money in Government bonds at a very low rate of interest rather than to put it elsewhere, and instead of the interest rate likely going to 4 per cent or $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent it is more likely to go down to $2\frac{1}{2}$ or 3 per cent. We have plenty of money it seems, but it is unwilling to invest except in Government bonds.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Flore ida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. May I call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that in the last few days out of the 11 issues of United States bonds, 5 of them are selling below par, and only 1 on those now selling below par had heretofore been selling below par?

Mr. BORAH. And I think I know a good reason for that, too.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator from Idaho is right, but I am rather inclined to think—in fact, I am rather certain—that in the future, with maturing obligations of billions of dollars, the Government will not be able to borrow money at the low rate suggested by the Senator from Idaho. It seems to me it might be safer, although I do not care to interfere with the structure of the bill in any way, to provide, as we have done with respect to loans to the shipping interests, that the rate shall not exceed one-half of 1 per cent or 1 per cent in excess of the rate at which the Government is able at the time to obtain the money.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think, Mr. President, it is thoroughly understood by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and by the parties concerned that they are not expected to make any profit out of these transactions. The bill, therefore, provides that the rate of interest shall be not to exceed 4 per cent. If it develops that they can get the money at less than they are now paying, they are expected to make the interest charged the borrower conform to that arrangement, but the language is "not to exceed 4 per cent."

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. I think the Senator from Florida is now putting his hand upon the real situation we ought to consider with respect to the interest rate. The bill does not pretend to fix the interest rate to be charged; it merely prescribes the maximum rate which may be charged.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. STEIWER. The question before us therefore is not what the interest rate ought to be; the question is, as the Senator has just stated, What ought the maximum rate to be?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. In view of many considerations, some of which have already been suggested here this morning, when this matter was before the committee we thought the maximum rate might well be 4 per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would it not be better, instead of putting in a rate, to put in a specification that no rate shall be charged in excess of the actual amount which they pay the Government and the cost of administration?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that; but, if it is intended to cover that, I am afraid such an amendment would make it too indefinite.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think it would make it indefinite, because they would know what it was. If it is correct to assume that in the near future the price of Government money is going up, 4 per cent might be as objectionable as 3 per cent. What I desire, Mr. President, and nothing more, is that they get this money at exactly the rate which the Government must pay for furnishing it, together with what is actually necessary for administering it; that is all.

Mr. FLETCHER. That we intended to accomplish, and we intended to make it definite and certain. So that there would be no discrimination and so that everybody would know exactly what rate of interest was to be charged by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and so as to make it certain that a rate should not be fixed that would mean a profit to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or an unnecessarily high rate, we made the figure not to exceed 4 per cent. Now, what does that mean?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will yield in a moment. What does that mean? It means, for instance, that whereas, under the farm loan act, a borrower is required to pay 8 per cent on all taxes past due, and that have to be taken care of by the mortgagee, on all interest past due, and all installments past due, this will save him 4 per cent. It means a saving to the borrower, under the Federal land-bank system, of a per cent on all these items of taxes, interest, and installments.

Mr. BORAH. I am certainly in favor of the principle for which the Senator is contending and which the bill covers; so far as that is concerned, I think it is all right. I was simply desirous of protecting that particular situation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely; we are all in accord in desiring to make the interest rate as low as possible.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

Mr. FLETCHER. I now yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in the case of the Wagner bill we provided that the interest rate should not exceed 1 per cent over the amount the Government had to pay for the money. We had it one-half of 1 per cent, and we made it 1 per cent. It seems to me that that would be a pretty fair thing to do in this case. It will cost the Government something to get the money and handle it and lend it out and get it back, and if we made it just the same as in the Wagner bill, which seemed to be pretty fair, 1 per cent above the amount the Government had to pay for the last sale of its bonds, I think it would cover the situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why would not the end desired be accomplished by inserting after the word "rate," in line 14, on page 2, the words "not exceeding the actual cost of the money to the Government and in no event exceeding 4 per cent"?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That would not take care of the administration, and the rate should cover within reason the cost to the Government of administrative expenses.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would be included, as it seems to me, but it could be easily put in.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am willing-

Mr. BORAH. Why not insert, as suggested by the Senator from Louisiana, the provision which was inserted in the Wagner bill, so called, that the rate shall not exceed a certain amount according to the rate provided in last sale of Government bonds, and so forth?

Mr. FLETCHER. That might be workable. We discussed that to some extent, but the committee thought we ought to make the rate definite so that it would be thoroughly understood exactly what it would be, and that we ought to make it so low that it would not cover more than the cost to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This money for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation comes out of the Treasury, of course; whether or not the Treasury charges the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a little more than they pay on the bonds, I do not know; but I think likely the Treasury may make a small charge to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I think we would hamper the administration of the bill, if enacted, and would make it less clear and definite by an amendment of that kind. However, let the Senate be thinking about that while I go on to explain the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he proceeds to do that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to ask the Senator a question. The Senator has been referring to a moratorium for two years. He does not intend by that expression to mean that a moratorium is granted to the mortgagor except indirectly through the mortgagee?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. In other words, this bill introduces a new class of debtors; that is, people who to-day are not debtors but who as mortgagees will become a debtor class under the provisions of this proposed act. The Government will have back of that new debtor class the assignment of the mortgage to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and back of the mortgage, of course, is the farm, but, as a matter of fact, we are creating, prospectively at least, a new debtor class. Is not that correct?

Mr. FLETCHER. The situation is this: Suppose the Senator had a mortgage on a farm. That mortgage undoubtedly provides for the payment of all taxes by the mortgagor, the payment of all interest, and perhaps amortization. In individual cases perhaps no amortization is provided for; but as to Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks, 1 per cent per annum amortization is included.

The mortgage provides that in case of default the mortgagee may pay up the taxes, he may forego his interest, forego his installments, and charge interest on those to the mortgagor, or he has a right to foreclose his mortgage. What we are trying to accomplish here is to stop these foreclosures and make them impossible, because we propose to take care of those that are in default.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. Is the mortgagee who has the mortgage going to make himself a debtor, even though he obtains the money at a low rate of interest, instead of liquidating his mortgage? Is it in the nature of things for a mortgagee to do it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course it remains to be seen how it will work out, but we are giving him the opportunity of avoiding foreclosure. We are taking care of items which he must take care of in the first instance, and then, in his foreclosure suit, embrace them in the amount of his claim against the mortgagor. He is being benefited. I see no reason why he should not pledge his mortgage to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to protect it in making these advances. In case eventually these items are not paid by the mortgagor, and foreclosure is necessary, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will foreclose the mortgage with the right to pay itself the taxes, the interest, and the installments which it has advanced, and the remainder goes to the original mortgagee. So that the mortgagee does not lose anything by this transaction. He is benefited by the fact that somebody steps in and pays up these installments which he would have to pay as mortgagee eventually, in case the mortgagor could not pay; and then the mortgagor gets the benefit of the reduction of interest. He gets the benefit of postponement of any foreclosure proceedings. He has no dread of foreclosure, and there can be no foreclosure during these two years. That is the benefit to the mortgagor.

The mortgagee is benefited in respect to having these items on which the mortgagor is in default, as to taxes, interest, and installments, taken care of by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and, therefore, it is to his interest to protect the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the advances which it makes.

I think it will work out all right. I think the mortgagees generally will be willing to assign their mortgages to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to protect them in making these advances, which advances the mortgagee himself has eventually to make if he protects his security. In this instance the bill gives the mortgagor an opportunity to recoup and to go on with his payments after this extension of time is granted, and the mortgagor gets a reduction of practically 4 per cent on the interest that he would have to pay eventually to the mortgagee. So that it is an advantage all around, and I think there is no doubt about its working satisfactorily.

Another point: I do not remember whether the subcommittee reported this item or whether it was put in by the full committee. At any rate, it was decided, and it is provided in the bill, that these benefits ought not to be confined to the farmers alone; that the bill should be extended so as to protect people in the cities and towns owning small homes. By its terms, the application of the bill is limited to homes of a value not exceeding $8,000. That is purely an arbitrary figure; but we thought we would take care of the small-home owner who is suffering, for the same reason that the farmers are suffering, danger of foreclosure taking his home away from him. So we have put in the bill a provision for taking care of loans to these small-home owners for a period of two years to take care of their taxes, their interest in default, and any other obligations that are necessarily involved; and the home owner gets that money at 4 per cent. So that we are trying to protect the small-home owner, and stop foreclosures of these small homes in the towns and cities, as well as taking care of the farmer's

That is an item in the bill that we finally concluded ought to be placed there, so as to create this moratorium in effect for two years to the small-home owner, and take care of these items of taxes, interest, and so forth, which might subject him to foreclosure.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Does the Senator from Florida really imagine that we are proposing a moratorium for two years only?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what the bill provides.

Mr. GLASS. I know that is what the bill provides; but, Mr. President, it seems to me that we are literally destroying—in fact, we have already destroyed—the mortgage-bond market. As I have already said, there is not a man outside of the lunatic asylum who has any money to loan who is going to loan it upon mortgages when governors and legislators and the Congress of the United States assume to declare moratoriums on indebtedness.

We are proceeding here upon the assumption that nobody will want to borrow money hereafter; that even thrifty and altogether worthy farmers who are entitled to credit are going to be estopped hereafter from ever borrowing any money; and that is just what is going to be the result of this.

While I am up, may I ask why the discrimination, why the limitation up to $8,000? A man who owns a farm that is worth $18,000, and operates it, employs more persons, has more tenants than a man who has a farm that is worth only $8,000; why not assist him? Why confine the bill to this particular class of persons?

I could better illustrate the intent of my inquiry by citing his fact:

I have in mind now an industrial concern which employs 526 men-men of modest means, with their little homes across the river, unable to own high-priced property in the town proper. That concern owes, I will say as an illustration, $230,000 to a national bank. When the notes mature they have to be renewed, because they can not be paid. Why not help that corporation to keep these 526 heads of families employed? Why help joint-stock land banks, organized purely for profit, in which the Government has not one scintilla of pecuniary interest? Would these banks have paid the Government any part of their profits had they made profits? Why help them any more than help the debtors of national banks that are organized for profit? Why take a half billion dollars of the taxpayers' money out of the Treasury, where it is not at present, and use it for privileged socialism, if there be such a thing as privileged socialism? It is not even ordinary socialism; it is not even a common pot that may be dipped from by anybody; it is privileged socialism.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, of course the Senator makes quite an argument against the whole bill.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I am against the whole bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know that I can follow his questions in detail; but the Senator starts out with a wrong impression. Perhaps I have been unhappy in stating the case; but the Senator seems to think that we are limiting these loans to farms of a value of $8,000. Farm values have nothing to do with this limitation. This limitation of $8,000 applies only to mortgages on homes occupied by their owners. The bill applies only to mortgages on such homes not exceeding $8,000 in value. That is the $8,000 limitation. The idea was that we would take care of the moderate-circumstanced people who are about to lose their homes through foreclosure. If we undertook to broaden the field beyond this valuation we would get into a considerable demand, for instance, on hotels and apartment houses, and all that sort of thing. We could not handle that; but we were intending to try to save the small-home owner of meager means to keep from having his home taken away from him under foreclosure.

That has nothing to do with the value of farms. That is not connected with farm loans at all. There is no limitation as to farms.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida further yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. GLASS. I infer that the Senator does not consider a half billion dollars a very considerable sum.

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, yes; it is a considerable sum.

Mr. GLASS. Why not save a man's home that is worth $9,000?

Mr. FLETCHER. This is purely an arbitrary limit.

Mr. GLASS. Why not save a man's home that is worth $10,000?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator can make it $10,000 if he likes. I should not object to that; but the idea is that we must fix a limitation here, because otherwise we would reach out into hotels and apartment houses and business structures and all that sort of thing.

Mr. GLASS. Why not? Why are not they as much entitled to the taxpayers' money as anybody else?

Mr. FLETCHER. They are generally able to take care of themselves better than the small-home owner.

Mr. GLASS. Take care of themselves! Why, there is scarcely a hotel in Washington which is not under mortgage now and in the hands of a receiver.

Mr. FLETCHER. That may be true; and it is impossible for us to conceive of the Government going into that sort of business.

Mr. GLASS. It is impossible for me to conceive of the Government going into this sort of business.

Mr. FLETCHER. That may be the Senator's view. The committee thought we would be charged with discrimination if we confined these benefits entirely to farmers. They thought that in these industrial regions small-home owners were losing their homes and that they should be included in the bill

The Senator says, "Why go into this business at all?" He says a man can not borrow any money on his farm or his home now because we are destroying the loan market and the chances of getting accommodations elsewhere. Mr. President, it is already destroyed. No farmer can borrow any money on his farm. No home owner can borrow any money on his home. There is not a bank that will make any loans. None of these loan agencies are making any such loans. That is out of the question. We are trying to cure an existing situation as far as we can. It is purely an emergency proposition, as I have said. It lasts only for two years; but we are trying to prevent these foreclosures on farms and on small homes throughout the country so that the farmer will be able to go on and occupy his farm and make a living and support himself, and so that the small-home owner will be assured that his home is not going to be foreclosed against and taken away from him. That is the idea. It is purely an emergency measure.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, in my conception of the case, the Senator is vastly mistaken if he thinks it is going to continue but two years. He is going to make it impossible, for a long period of time, for anybody worthy of credit or otherwise to borrow any money from a bank or from anybody else if Congress reserves the right to declare moratoriums on such indebtedness.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is a great deal in what the Senator says. We are in perilous times, living under distressing conditions, but we have to realize that. It is not what we would like to have. It is what we are actually experiencing now. I have letters from all parts of the country—and I have no doubt other Senators have—complaining that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and that the homeloan bank, which we set up to save homes—which has proven a perfect farce—are not willing to make loans to people.

Let us say that I have a property worth $25,000, and that I owe $2,500 on it. I can not get the money from a bank or a loan agency in the community, or anywhere else—from any financial institution. Am I to lose that home because I can not raise that $2,500? I apply to the home-loan bank, and they say, "Your town defaulted on some of its bonds, or something, and we are not going to lend at this time." As a matter of fact, they are making loans only to building and loan associations. We provided for loans to building and loan associations in the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, and they have been making loans to them. But this home loan bank crowd are making loans only to building and loan associations. They have not up to date made a single individual loan. They have not saved a single home in this country from foreclosure.

Mr. BORAH. And never will.

Mr. FLETCHER. No, they never will, and I do not believe they intend to. They are controlled by people who are connected with building and loan associations. A majority of them are building and loan people, I am told. At any rate, they are confining their operations to taking over the assets of building and loan concerns, and they have not saved a single home from foreclosure, after opening up in September with a great blare of trumpets saying they were ready to do business, and to save homes.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Perhaps I should assume that the committee has carefully considered the constitutional power of Congress to enact measures such as that before us. Would the bill make it mandatory on a mortgagee to submit to a reduction of interest and other claims he might have upon the mortgagor?

Mr. FLETCHER. I replied to that in answering one of the objections raised by the Senator from Virginia, as to whether we would deter people from making loans hereafter because of the danger of Congress intervening and declaring a moratorium. This bill is based upon the consent of the mortgagee. We do not attempt to compel him to do anything.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I wanted that clear in my mind.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, the Senator is right.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. We would not have a right to modify an existing valid contract.

Mr. FLETCHER. Absolutely not. The mortgagee must join; he must agree and assign his mortgage, consent to the arrangement, the reduction of interest, and all that. It was so provided in the case of the joint-stock land banks. They can agree to a reduction of interest.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. KING. It is obvious that this bill is merely a makeshift, and whether it will accomplish any good is very questionable.

I understood the Senator to state at the outset of his observations that in the special session a comprehensive measure will be enacted dealing with this entire question. If we are to take over the obligations of the farmers and other real-estate owners, whose obligations to-day aggregate about $35,000,000,000—speaking now of real estate generally, as well as farms—if we are to afford relief to all of the owners of property upon whose property there are mortgages and trust deeds and other obligations and liens, is it not unwise to make two or three or four bites at the cherry and to attempt in this sporadic plan to deal with the situation?

Moreover, while I am on the floor may I say, Mr. President, that I understood that this bill sought only to relieve persons on whose farms and homes the taxes were in default? If the mortgagees would agree not to foreclose for two years, the Government was to lend to the agencies set up here enough to pay the back taxes and the interest to date.

I find that the bill goes further than that. Five hundred million dollars are to be taken out of the Treasury, which is empty. We will have to go out and issue bonds and borrow the $500,000,000. In addition to that, we are to lend $100,000,000 to these joint-stock land banks, many of which have been improvidently managed, inefficiently conducted, and are in debt, are involved, which have issued bonds and are buying them in at 30 cents on the dollar and cancelling some of their outstanding obligations. I did not know we were to lend this organization $100,000,000 so that it could go out and buy its bonds at par-that is probably a redeeming feature-or borrow money for the purpose of making other loans. I thought it was to be placed in the same category with other mortgagees, and that it would have advanced to it out of this $500,000,000 such sums as were due to it on account of the taxes paid by it as a mortgagee and deferred interest, providing it would not foreclose its mortgage for a period of two years. But the proposal is to lift the joint-stock land bank into the same category with farm-loan banks, which, many say, are Government institu-

Does the Senator think that is wise? It seems to me that in a year or two, according to the views which prevail here, nearly every man in the United States will be a debtor to the Government. The United States will have a thousand or ten thousand or a hundred thousand suits in the courts foreclosing, suing to recover on debts due it, and we will have the unfortunate situation of landlord and tenant, the Government the landlord and the people of the United States the tenants. We will have the people of the United States who are indebted to the Government arrayed against it. This sort of legislation, and many other bills which have been suggested, in my opinion, would create a schism, would drive a hot plowshare into our social system, and would arouse resentment on the part of millions of people against the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Dickinson in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I say to the Senator from Utah, in the time of the Senator from Florida, that I think his suggestion has come too late. We may be in a position where we are going to take over the farms, but we are already in a position where we are practically taking over the railroads, and will undoubtedly do so if we continue our present program. We will not only take over the railroads, but we will take over the insurance companies and we will take over the banks, and we will continue until we make the soviet government seem modest in its communistic program.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I can not agree with these violent predictions. I do not see any such prospect ahead of us. I think we are moving along in rather dangerous waters, perhaps, going perhaps a little too far in paternalistic efforts, but I do not see any such prospect as has been mentioned here.

The Government is not going to own the farms of this country. We want the farmers to stay on the farms, and they want to stay on them, and they will be able to stay on them. They are not able now to meet the presently due installments of interest and tax payments, and to keep up their payments, because they are getting nothing for their products. But that condition is not going to last. The people of this country and other countries have to have food. The farmers are the ones who produce the Nation's food, and the consumers will be willing to pay reasonable prices, and can pay reasonable prices.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. FLETCHER. Let me finish this statement, and then I will answer all questions, but I can not get along logically if I yield to every interruption, and take sidetracks here and there.

The condition of this country is not so terrible as some people seem to think. Suppose there are 11,000,000 people unemployed now, or 12,000,000. That is only 10 per cent of the population. All the rest of the people are busy and only 10 per cent of the population are idle. Is that such a terrible condition as calls for revolution and revolutionary steps?

Mr. President, this country is rich, the people are industrious, the people are intelligent, the people are patriotic. They are not going to see the Government fall, they are not going to lose their property. They do not need to do it and they will not do it. They have some courage and some selfreliance, thank heaven, and they are going to exercise those characteristics in the handling of their property.

Those who entertain the idea that the people of this country are all flabbergasted, all wild eyed, all going crazy and insane are entirely mistaken. Just brace up a little and help them. They are existing now. A certain emergency is upon them, caused by the fall in commodity prices, partly that, perhaps mainly that. As to the farmers, that is the cause. But what good does it do a farmer to own a fine farm and produce any amount of crops if he can not get anything for them? But that is not a lasting condition. The farmers are going to be able to get higher prices, because people have to have things to wear and things to eat, and the farmers are going to supply them. The farms of this country are the very foundation of all the strength and power and wealth of the country.

Mr. President, all this talk about the stock exchange and capital, speculation, and all that sort of thing, is merely on paper. The very sources of wealth are the soil, the mines, and the waters. Those are here; they are going to stay here; they can not be taken away. All we need to do is to take care of a situation which arises in an emergency like this, when the producers are unable to meet certain obligations because of the low prices of their products, not because they are not working, not because they are not producing, but because they are not getting anything for their products. Prices will come back, and what we need to do is to tide the farmers over this emergency.

What we are trying to do by this legislation is to stop the foreclosures of mortgages, which are in default, very largely, though probably not over 50 per cent of them are in default, at that. Perhaps not that many of the farm mortgagors are in default in the payment of taxes and interest. Twentyseven per cent probably would be nearer correct. But that is a big percentage, I admit.

We do not want to see these people deprived of their homes, their life savings, because some fellow who holds a mortgage takes advantage of the right of a mortgagee to forclose and sell the mortgagor out. If suit is instituted, a sale takes place, and the mortgagee is the only purchaser at the sale. No other purchaser appears. The mortgagee, in many instances, does not want the property, is willing to come in and cooperate to reduce the interest and give the mortgagor two years' breathing time in which to make good.

That is what we are trying to accomplish by this legislation; not to provide a permanent arrangement at all. We are not going into the loaning business as a permanent thing, but we are trying to help in an emergency like the present one. The Government has the credit which will enable it to do it, and we can do it without any great burden on the people of the country. We can help all home owners, on the farms as well as in the towns, to tide over this emergency. That is the object of the bill.

I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a statement by the general counsel of the Farm Loan Board regarding the payment of land-bank loans in farm-loan bonds.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

QUESTIONS REGARDING THE PAYMENT OF LAND-BANK LOANS IN FARM-LOAN BONDS

FEBRUARY 14, 1933.

Frequent inquiries have been directed to the Federal Farm Loan Bureau as to (1) whether under the provisions of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, a borrower from a Federal or joint-stock land bank has the right to require the land bank making the loan to accept its own unmatured bonds at par in full payment of his debt, and (2) whether it is within the power of Congress to require the banks of the farm-loan system to accept their unmatured bonds at par in payment of the mortgages taken from their respective borrowers. The same questions have been asked with respect to the tender of bonds in payment of loans made by joint-stock land banks which have been placed in the hands of a receiver by the Federal Farm Loan Board. Before taking up these questions in detail it will be helpful to consider the history of some of the pertinent provisions of the Federal form history of some of the pertinent provisions of the Federal farm loan act.

At the close of the Sixty-third Congress a joint committee of the Senate and House was appointed to investigate the subject of rural credits and report back a bill for the consideration of the Sixty-fourth Congress. The committee carried out the instructions and the Federal farm loan act, as we know it is, in the main, tions and the Federal farm loan act, as we know it is, in the main, the bill which it reported. (Document 494, 64th Cong., 1st sess.) This report was referred to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee on February 16, 1916. The original bill with amendments was reported back to the Senate by Senator Hollis (S. 2986; Rept. No. 144). Section 12 of this bill read in part as follows:

"No Federal land bank organized under this act shall make loans except upon the following terms and conditions:

"First. Said loans shall be secured by duly recorded first mortgages on farm land within the land-bank district in which the bank shall be situated.

bank shall be situated.

"Second. Every such mortgage shall contain an agreement for the payment of a fixed number of semiannual installments sufficient to provide for an agreed rate of interest during the term and for the payment of the principal during and at the end of the term on what is known as the amortization plan.

"Third. Every such mortgage shall run for a period of at least 5 years and not exceeding 36 years.

"Fourth. Every mortgage loan made under this act, for whatever period, shall provide for its extinguishment, at the option of the borrower, in whole or in part at any date set for the payment of interest after five years from the date upon which said loan was made as follows: was made, as follows:

"(a) By the tender at their face value of farm-loan bonds issued by the land bank holding such mortgages, all unmatured coupons being attached to said bonds.

(b) By advance payments in cash in sums of $100 or any multiple thereof. In such case the Federal land bank receiving such payments shall purchase for its own account, and credit at par upon the mortgage, farm-loan bonds in suitable amounts; said land bank may call, as may be necessary, farm-loan bonds in suitable amounts, and when such calls shall have become effective land bank may call, as may be necessary, farm-loan bonds in suitable amounts, and when such calls shall have become effective shall credit such payments on such mortgage.

"Provided, That farm-loan bonds of any Federal land bank, tendered or purchased under the foregoing two paragraphs to extinguish the whole or any part of a mortgage loan, shall bear the rate of interest current on farm-loan bonds issued by such bank at the time such mortgage loan was made."

The foregoing provisions with respect to the payment of loans "by the tender at their face value of farm-loan bonds issued by the land bank holding such mortgages" were also made applicable to loans made by joint-stock land banks under the provisions of section 16 of the bill. These provisions of sections 12 and 16 were contained in bill S. 2986 as passed by the Senate. Later the bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House. When the bill was finally reported by the House committee the provisions with respect to the payment of loans by the tender of bonds at par had been eliminated. During the subsequent consideration of the bill by the House and by the conference committee appointed to consider the House amendments, these provisions were not reinstated. The farm loan act as finally approved did not contain any provision which would permit a house for the bond by the content of the bust takes to be the barrow which had been the bond by the loans and by the conference committee appointed to consider the House amendments, these provisions were not reinstated. The farm loan act as finally approved did not contain any provision which would permit a bond bear the bond by the loans are the loans are the loans are the loans the loans are the loans approved did not contain any provision which would permit a borrower from a Federal or joint-stock land bank to pay his loan by the tender of an equal face amount of bonds.

It is apparent from the legislative history of section 12 that the elimination of the provisions in question was due to design and not to oversight, and that at the time of the enactment of the present law the Congress decided that it was not advisable to permit borrowers to pay their loans in bonds. In this connection the Supreme Court of the United States has held that in construing an act of Congress amendments proposed and defeated may throw light on the construction of the act as finally passed, and may properly be taken into consideration. But passed, and may properly be taken into consideration.—Butt-field v. Stranahan (192 U. S. 470.)

field v. Stranahan (192 U. S. 470.)

Section 2 of the act, as finally passed, read in part as follows:

"Wherever the term 'first mortgage' is used in this act it shall be held to include such classes of first liens on farm lands as shall be approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board, and the credit instruments secured thereby." Furthermore, section 12 prescribes certain conditions and restrictions with respect to loans made by Federal land banks "based on first mortgages." These conditions and restrictions, with some exceptions, are applicable to loans of joint-stock land banks. One condition which is applicable to mortgages taken by both classes of institutions is as follows: "Every such mortgage shall contain an agreement providing for the repayment of the loan on an amortization plan by viding for the repayment of the loan on an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual or semiannual installments.

Section 30 of the act provides in part that it shall be the duty of the Farm Loan Commissioner to examine the laws of every State of the Union and to inform the Farm Loan Board "as rapidly state of the Union and to inform the Farm Loan Board "as rapidly as may be whether in his judgment the laws of each State relating to the conveying and recording of land titles and the fore-closure of mortgages or other instruments securing loans, as well as providing homestead and other exemptions in granting the power to waive such exemption as respects first mortgages, are such as to insure the holder thereof adequate safeguards against loss in the event of default on loans secured by any approximation. loss in the event of default on loans secured by any such mort-

The mortgages taken by the Federal and joint-stock land banks from their borrowers under the foregoing provisions of the law constitute contracts between the borrowers and the banks. In view of the provisions of section 30, just above referred to, it is clear that the Congress intended that the status of these contracts as liens, the vested rights of the parties involved, the procedure to be followed in case of foreclosure, and the subsequent rights of the parties to such foreclosure proceedings, as well as the rights of the parties to such foreclosure proceedings, as well as the rights of other creditors, are fixed by the laws of the State in which the mortgaged property is situated. The mortgages taken by all of the banks of the system provide that the debts secured thereby shall be paid in lawful money. It is, of course, recognized universally that the party bound to make payment has no right to do so in any other medium than that expressed in his contract. That is, he must make payment in money if his contract so provides. Likewise the farm-loan bonds, which are secured in the main by these mortgages, provide that the holders thereof shall be paid in lawful money. "The party bound to make payment has no right to do so in any other medium than that expressed in the face of the instrument—that is, he must make payment in money." (Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, vol. 2, p. 1405. See also Julliard v. Greenman, 110 U. S. 421, 4 S. Ct. 122.)

Since under the terms of the mortgages accepted by them the

Since under the terms of the mortgages accepted by them the land banks have not agreed to accept farm-loan bonds in the payment of a loan and under the terms of their outstanding bonds the option as to payment and retirement prior to final maturity rests with the land bank which issues them, it is apparent that the banks of the farm-loan system are under no obligation nor can they be required to receive their own unmatured bonds or the bonds of other banks in payment, in whole or in part, of loans which they have made.

The answer to the second question, namely, whether the Congress by amending the farm loan act may require the banks to accept their own bonds at par in payment of mortgages held by them, would seem to be equally clear. It is true that section 35 of the farm loan act provides in part that "the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved." also that the Congress of the United States is not included within the constitutional prohibition which prevents States from passing laws impairing the obligations of contracts. On the other hand, Congress is prohibited from depriving persons or corporations of property without due process of law. In this connection it has been pointed out that under the express authority conferred upon the banks of the farm-loan system they have entered into con-tracts with their borrowers. These contracts or mortgages have tracts with their borrowers. These contracts or mortgages have been made, subject to certain limitations and restrictions imposed by the act itself, pursuant to and in accordance with the laws of the States in which the mortgaged properties are situated. We have seen also that these mortgages provide that the debts secured thereby must be paid in lawful money. Therefore, since the rights of the bank, and in turn the rights of their respective bondholders, have vested in these obligations, it would not seem to be within the constitutional powers of Congress to deprive the individual banks or their security holders of their vested property insterests therein. This conclusion is based upon the principles laid down in the famous case of the Union Pacific Railway Co. laid down in the famous case of the Union Pacific Railway Co. v. United States (99 U. S. 700). Mr. Chief Justice Waite, who delivered the opinion of the majority of the court, said:

delivered the opinion of the majority of the court, said:

"The United States can not, any more than a State, interfere with private rights, except for legitimate governmental purposes. They are not included within the constitutional prohibition which prevents States from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts; but, equally with the States, they are prohibited from depriving persons or corporations of property without due process of law. They can not legislate back to themselves, without making compensation, the lands they have given this corporation to aid in the construction of its railroad. Neither can they by legislation compel the corporation to discharge its obligations in respect to the subsidy bonds otherwise than according to the terms of the contract already made in that connection." (Italics ours.)

ours.)

In discussing the question regarding the power of Congress to alter or amend the charter, the Chief Justice made the following comments:

"That this power has a limit, no one can doubt. All agree that it can not be used to take away property already acquired under the operation of the charter, or to deprive the corporation of the fruits actually reduced to possession of contracts lawfully made;

"Giving full effect to the principles which have thus been authoritatively stated, we think it safe to say that whatever rules Congress might have prescribed in the original charter for the Congress might have prescribed in the original charter for the government of the corporation in the administration of its affairs, it retained the power to establish by amendment. In so doing it can not undo what has already been done, and it can not unmake contracts that have already been made, but it may provide for what shall be done in the future, and may direct what preparation shall be made for the due performance of contracts already entered into. It might originally have prohibited the borrowing of money on mortgage, or it might have said that no bonded debt should be created without ample provision by sinking fund to meet should be created without ample provision by sinking fund to meet it at maturity. Not having done so at first, it can not now by direct legislation vacate mortgages already made under the powers originally granted, nor release debts already contracted * * *." (Italics ours.)

The principles laid down by the court in the foregoing opinion have never been reversed. In fact, these principles have been re-peatedly affirmed in subsequent decisions. When the provisions of the farm loan act are considered in the light of these decisions, it seems clear that Congress can not by legislation "remake contracts that have already been made" and thereby compel the banks of the farm-loan system to permit their borrowers to discharge their obligations otherwise than according to the terms of those contracts, i. e., by the payment of the amounts due in lawful money

A contract to pay a certain sum in money without any stipulation as to the kind of money in which it shall be paid may always be satisfied by payment of that sum in any currency which is lawful money at the place and time in which payment is to be made. (Julliard v. Greenman, supra.) It will, of course, not be argued seriously that the Congress has the right to make the bonds of either Federal or joint-stock land banks "lawful money." In the circumstances it seems obvious that Congress may not by legislative enactment permit borrowers to discharge their obligations by payment of their loans in bonds.

In this connection my attention has been called to a requirement contained in bill S. 5591, which would provide, among other things, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be authorized and directed to make loans to joint-stock land banks organized and doing business under the Federal farm loan act, subject to certain limitations and conditions, which would require that any joint-stock land bank obtaining a loan under the pro-visions of the proposed bill "(3) shall agree that the farm-loan bonds issued by the bank will be accepted at their face value in payment of any indebtedness due the bank under the terms of the first mortgage held by the bank."

It is apparent from reading this requirement that the drafts-men of the amendment have undertaken to avoid the constitutional questions which have just been discussed. It is doubtful, however, whether the purpose has been accomplished. The farmloan bonds to which the amendment refers have been issued and sold in accordance with the express requirements of the Federal farm loan act. Under the procedure prescribed with respect to the issuance of these securities the bank must deposit first mortgages or Government bonds with the farm-loan registrar at least equal in amount to the bonds issued. These bonds are required to recite on their face that they are secured by obligations of the United States Government, or by "first mortgages on farm lands" made in accordance with the provisions of the act. As previously made in accordance with the provisions of the act. As previously stated, the rights of the present bondholders have vested with respect to these mortgages, which provide that the amounts due thereunder shall be paid in lawful money. If it is agreed that it is beyond the power of the Congress to change or alter the provisions of these contracts by legislation, how can the banks be authorized to change them? The banks are not permitted at this time to substitute obligations payable in some other medium for the "money obligations" which they have deposited with the registrar. In other words, the bill would propose a condition that would be beyond the power of the banks to perform.

The answer will, of course, be made to this contention that the banks need not apply to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan unless they desire to comply with the provisions of the bill. It is undoubtedly true that the banks need not apply unless they care to do so. On the other hand, why provide for the making of loans that none of these institutions would be able to accept?

able to accept?

able to accept?

Under the general and incidental powers vested in the directors of Federal and joint-stock land banks by the provisions of the Federal farm loan act, the directors have the power at present to agree with an individual borrower to accept bonds at par in payment of his obligation; provided, of course, the bank believes, in the exercise of sound business judgment, that such action is necessary in order to protect the interests of the borrower, the bank, and its security holders. Such an arrangement in an individual case might be of real benefit to all parties concerned. On the other hand, under existing conditions it would not be possible for the banks to agree, in the absence of expressed approval on the part of all of their bondholders, to permit any and all of their borrowers to pay their loans in bonds. The effect of such an arrangement would result eventually in receivership for all of the joint-stock land banks. It would immediately convert their long-time obligations into demand obligations. It for all of the joint-stock land banks. It would immediately convert their long-time obligations into demand obligations. It would deprive them of the necessary funds with which to pay interest, and would benefit only a favored few of their borrowers. To those who are not familiar with the present situation, this statement requires further explanation.

Obviously the proponents of the amendment in question are Obviously the proponents of the amendment in question are not seeking to precipitate further receiverships in these troublous times, but are earnestly endeavoring to provide some means of alleviating the load of indebtedness under which many farmers are now staggering. On the other hand, will the proposal afford even a small measure of relief for this unfortunate class of borrowers whose numbers are far too numerous?

At present most borrowers who are unable to meet the payments due under their mortgages would not be able to obtain sufficient funds with which to purchase the bonds required to pay off their loans. Many of these borrowers have junior liens on their farms and are otherwise indebted in amounts which they are unable to pay. Being unable to finance the purchase of the necessary bonds, they would be made the prey of money lenders and speculators, who would take advantage of the situation for the advancement of their own personal interests. With the bonds of some of the joint-stock land banks selling below 30, it is quite possible that speculation in these securities would follow the enactment of the proposed amendment. Bonds would be bought at low prices and traded to the farmer for an assignment of his mortgage or for a new lien on his farm at a substantial profit to the speculator. The loans would pass from the control of the banks and beyond the protection which some of the other provisions of the same bill might afford.

The more fortunate borrowers with good security would be able to obtain the necessary credit in the purchase of bonds, their loans would be retired, and the banks would be left with many defaulted mortgages in connection with which they would not be willing or able to enforce collection. The net result would be that the unfortunate borrower, the bank, and the security holders would suffer.

In addition, the effect of such an arrangement would be to

In addition, the effect of such an arrangement would be to disorganize almost completely the banks' financial programs. For example, to the extent that bonds are used in payment of loans, it would make the bonds equivalent to demand liabilities with the result that the banks would have to be prepared to handle their bonds both as time and as demand obligations. The bonds their bonds both as time and as demand obligations. The bonds carry definite maturity dates and the banks have to be prepared to pay them as they become due. There is little probability, however, that the bonds would be presented in the order of their maturities. As a matter of fact the late maturities would in all probability be presented before early maturities, since the discount, if any, would be greater on the longer-term obligations. Consequently, if payments were made largely in bonds and if the bonds presented included only a portion of the immediate maturities, the bank would be forced to rely entirely upon the sale of refunding issues in order to take up outstanding issues as they mature. In view of the fact that market conditions under which the borrowers would profit by payments on their loans through the surrender of bonds would be such as to make it difficult, if not impossible, to float new issues, any refunding would be a disastrously costly process. disastrously costly process

If borrowers are given the option of making payments on their loans with bonds, the banks would be unable to forecast with any degree of certainty the amount of cash to be received.

Moreover, as a practical matter, a bank would be practically prohibited from borrowing from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as is proposed in other sections of the same bill, since it could not depend upon cash collections with which to meet its obligations to the corporation.

From the standpoint of the bulk of the banks' bondholders, From the standpoint of the bulk of the banks' bondholders, which include banks, savings institutions, insurance companies, trust companies handling the estates of widows, orphans, and persons under disability, small investors, and others, the most serious consequence of the proposal would be the elimination of the best loans deposited by the banks as collateral. As previously indicated, the borrowers in the best financial condition would be the first to take advantage of the opportunity to pay off their loans. Even the speculators would discriminate in their operations between the owners of good and poor farms. The mortgages on the good farms would undubtedly be taken up first. Finally the banks would find themselves with only the loans of those whose plight would be such that even the speculators would those whose plight would be such that even the speculators would pass them by.

In such circumstances receivership and forced liquidation for the banks would be the only alternative. In the event of receivership, however, although a somewhat different situation would be presented, the borrowers would not be permitted to pay their loans in bonds. The receiverships that have occurred in the farm-loan system up to the present time have been concerned merely with joint-stock land banks, and, due to the cooperative features of the Federal land-bank system and the collective liability of these institutions for the bonds of each other, the possibility of receivership in the case of any one of the Federal land banks seems remote. When a joint-stock land bank is placed in the hands of a receiver its bondholders are entitled to share pro rata in the distribution of the proceeds derived from the liquidation of all of the hand's exects. There derived from the liquidation of all of the bank's assets. Therefore, to permit a bondholder, who is also a borrower, to offset the amount of his bonds against his indebtedness due under a mort-fore, to permit a bondholder, who is also a borrower, to offset the amount of his bonds against his indebtedness due under a mortgage deposited with the registrar would to that extent violate the principle of pro rata distribution of pledged collateral. Accordingly receivers of joint-stock land banks have not accepted bonds or coupons of those banks in payment of indebtedness due the banks by their borrowers.

In light of the foregoing, it is apparent that the banks of the farm-loan system should not be required to accept bonds from all of their borrowers in payment of existing mortgages. As a matter of fact, the "book profits" which the banks have obtained during the last 12 months through the purchase and retirement of their own bonds have been used to offset losses and not to pay dividends. In the case of most of the joint-stock land banks they would not have been able to grant indulgence to their deserving borrowers had it not been for the provision of the act which permitted them to purchase and retire their own bonds. There are other proposals that have been incorporated in pending bills which seek in various ways to permit borrowers to pay their loans in farm-loan bonds. All of these proposals are subject to the same legal and practical objections, namely, that contracts can not be unmade without the consent of all parties interested, that mortgages "already made under powers originally granted" can not be vacated, and that the borrowers mostly in need of assistance would not be able to avail themselves of the privileges afforded by the legislation.

PEYTON R. EVANS, General Counsel.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Inasmuch as I must leave the Chamber, would it interrupt the Senator if I requested him to permit me to ask for unanimous consent in connection with the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes to-morrow the unfinished business shall be temporarily laid aside in order that we may take up and consider the Navy Department appropriation bill. I think I am warranted in assuring the Senate that the matter will be disposed of in a very short time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes to-morrow the unfinished business shall be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the Navy Department appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I personally have no objection, but the junior Senator from Utah IMr. Kingl notified me that he would not consent to it and told the Senator from California so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think the Senator misunderstood my request. The Senator from Utah said he would consent to have the matter taken up to-morrow, but not to-day. My request is that the bill be taken up for consideration to-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not think there is any necessity for now undertaking to fix an order of business for to-morrow. May I suggest to the Senator from California that we will take up the Navy Department appropriation bill when he is ready to do it, and there will be no difficulty about it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I venture to ask for this consent agreement now because I must leave the Chamber, and the Senator from Florida has kindly yielded to me in order that I might suggest the unanimous-consent agreement. If there is objection to it I am through.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If we should be within a few minutes of disposing of the measure now before the Senate. I should not want to lay it aside at that time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I would like to finish the consideration of the pending bill if we are going to finish it

Mr ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; so would I.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Then you can pass the appropriation bill when you are ready to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from California ought not to make a remark like that. The bill came to the Senate on the 25th of February, just last Saturday. We are ready to take up appropriation bills at almost any time. We all concede them priority. But the Senator from California is asking now in advance that the Senate shall agree to take up a bill. I shall object to the request of the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If the Senator from Florida will pardon me further, I did not intend to be offensive or provoke any feeling on the part of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the last suggestion of the Senator was tending in that direction.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I was not asking that immediate consideration be given to the bill but was merely venturing to suggest a consent agreement to take up the bill tomorrow, which I thought would be agreeable to everybody. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Florida will proceed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 2 to 13, inclusive, to the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; that the House insisted upon its amendments to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 14, 15, and 16; that the House agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that Mr. Byrns, Mr. Arnold, Mr. Lud-LOW, Mr. Wood of Indiana, and Mr. Thatcher were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13872) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 14 to the said bill and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 15 and concurred therein.

POSTPONEMENT OF MORTGAGE FORECLOSURES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5639) providing for loans or advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of securing the postponement of the foreclosure of certain mortgages for a period of two years, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should apologize for taking up so much time, but I think Senators will agree that it has been because of interruptions and not because of any extended remarks on my part.

I come now to the joint-stock land bank provision. It is proposed that $100,000,000 shall be loaned on farms by the joint-stock land banks throughout the country. Many of them are in default in interest payments, in installment payments, and taxes-not half of them. I take it, but they are subject to foreclosure. If we foreclose a mortgage on a farm and it goes to sale and the mortgagee buys it in, that has the effect of fixing farm values, depressing and lowering them so that we can not put any value now at all on farm lands. No two appraisers would agree as to the value of a farm to-day. No earning power can be shown at present. The foreclosures are not only depriving the owners of their life savings, their property, their homes, but they are doing nobody any good, and they are doing the whole market and the whole situation great harm.

We propose to loan to the joint-stock land banks $100,-000,000. We will then have the property appraised by appraisers appointed by the Farm Loan Board, not by the joint-stock land bank but by the Farm Loan Board, to appraise the value of the mortgages and loan 60 per cent of the value of those mortgages. They must reduce the interest to the borrowers to 4 per cent. Their obligation in the whole layout is that the borrower must get a reduction in his interest to 4 per cent and a postponement of at least two years against any foreclosure. No demand can be made on him for taxes or for interest or for installments or anything of that kind for at least two years. He is relieved of that fear and dread and the consequences of foreclosure for two years and he pays 4 per cent interest on the money. The bank must agree to that, the mortgagee must agree to it, the mortgagor of course is willing to agree to it, and great good can and will come from that sort of transaction to those who have borrowed money from the joint-stock land

A provision was inserted by the full committee, by a majority of only 1 vote, which is found on page 7, line 19, of the bill to the effect that the bank shall agree "that the farm-loan bonds issued by the bank will be accepted at their face value in payment of any indebtedness due the bank under the terms of a first mortgage held by the bank." Mind you, these bonds are not due now. The proposition is to take the unmatured bonds, get hold of them somehow, and turn them in on this debt. That means, of course, absolute liquidation of every joint-stock land bank. Most of them are in difficulties now. Some of them are not, but most of them are. To put that provision in the bill means receivership for the banks, foreclosure of their mortgages, ruin of the farm borrower, and ruin for everybody.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. How can the bank or any other institution borrow money at 4 per cent to suspend foreclosure and yet accept property or other consideration at 20 cents on the dollar in payment of liabilities due it? Inevitably it would not only put the banks into receivership, as the Senator has stated, but it would make them absolutely insolvent.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is quite true. Therefore I insist that the provision ought to be stricken from the bill; otherwise we might as well strike out all provisions in the bill with reference to joint-stock land banks. In the first place, farm borrowers do not hold the bonds. They are not held in lots of $2,000 or $3,000 by farmers at all. The farmer can not get in because a farmer, who can not pay his taxes and installments and interest, can not go out and buy bonds. It would not benefit the farmer at all to have a provision like that.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. GORE. If the farmer has no bonds and can not get them to tender in payment of his debts, then what is the objection? They can not be tendered to anybody else but the joint-stock land bank. The Senator's argument kills itself. Why would speculators want the bonds, if the farmers could not buy them? Does the Senator from Florida object for that reason?

Mr. FLETCHER. But that does not benefit the borrower

Mr. GORE. It would not hurt the bank if the farmer does not ever tender the bonds in payment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida allow me to make a statement with reference to that matter? Mr. FLETCHER. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized in his own right.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in answer to the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma, here is what we would do. I want the farmer to get all the money he can get. I want this bill passed in order to get some money to the farmer. We are not going to get any money to the farmer by such a provision as that which the Senator from Florida was just discussing. I have been trying to convince certain Senators of the logic of that statement. Let me take an illustration which I have been using to them.

If Pennsylvania Railroad bonds to-day are selling at 25 or 30 cents on the dollar, and if I owed them a freight bill of $1,000, I could go out and buy $1,000 of Pennsylvania Railroad bonds for $300 and pay my freight bill of $1,000. I could make $700 on every $1,000 shipment of freight I would make. Just see how ridiculous that is. To show how much more than ridiculous it is, if we go ahead and pass this bill, we will say that a man can borrow $1,000 from the joint-stock land bank. He can then take $350 of that money and walk out and buy $1,000 of the bonds of the joint-stock land bank, due 40 years from to-day, and pay off that $1,000 of indebtedness to the bank and have $650 left in his pocket.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Suppose the bank is foreclosing the mortgage upon a farm that is good for $20,000 and is mortgaged for $20,000 and is selling the farm for $3,000. May not the farmer go out, if he can, and recoup himself and buy bonds and offset the loss which he is making and which the bank is gaining?

Mr. LONG. That would be sound except for this reason. The Senator from Idaho is too good a lawyer to misunderstand my argument. His mentality along legal lines is superior to mine, and I am sure he will not misunderstand my argument. These bonds are not matured obligations. They are due 30 or 40 years from to-day. We have no right to set off a matured obligation with an unmatured obli-

Mr. BORAH. But the farm would be there 30 or 40 years from to-day, too.

Mr. LONG. I am not arguing that. The point I am making is that we can not argue the soundness of a proposition in that way. The proposition is that we would permit a man to walk in and borrow $1,000 and then step outside and buy for $350 a bond that does not mature for 40 years, and walk in and pay off that $1,000 of indebtedness with $350 worth of bonds, and have $650 left. All we would do would be to call in the unmatured obligations and in that way destroy the bank.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina? Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. The foreclosure takes place. The mortgage itself is to run for 40 years. The mortgage would be canceled. So far as the bonds outstanding against that mortgage are concerned, that much of the property is taken out of the security which would have run 40 years had the farmer been able to keep up his payments. The obligation is canceled and that much has passed out of the picture.

Mr. LONG. I will answer the Senator's statement. It is not a question. I think I can show the Senator how illogical that is. We have not taken up the security. The security is not due for 40 years. I could go into the farming business to-morrow and I would open up as many farms as I could, and borrow as many thousand dollars as I could. All I would have to do and all the farmer would have to do would be to borrow $1,000 of new money and buy $350 worth of bonds at the present market value of the bonds and walk back into the bank and take the $1,000 worth of those bonds at their par value and pay off the mortgage and have $650 left.

We are financing the railroads to-day just as we are proposing to finance the farmers. It is proposed now to loan the money to the farmers through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation just as we have been loaning money to the railroads through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If that is sound, why not help the balance of the citizens of the country by providing that a railroad borrowing money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation must honor its own bonds when tendered in payment of a freight bill? That would mean that the Interstate Commerce Commission regulation that so much freight should cost so much money would not apply in reality because it would cost only one-fifth that amount of money.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I want to call the Senator's attention to his own illustration that the farmer can borrow $1,000 and then with $350 of it buy enough bonds to pay off his mortgage. What are we proposing to do right here? We are proposing to lend to the joint-stock land banks out of the Treasury through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation $100,000,000 with which they can go out and buy $250,-000,000 or $300,000,000 worth of their own bonds and stick the profits in their own pockets, and the farmers get no benefit. The Senator has the matter wrong end to.

Mr. LONG. Oh, no. If that is true, then the bill should be so amended as to prevent any such calamity or chicanery as that. If we have so framed the bill that we allow the joint-stock land bank to do that sort of thing, then we ought to amend it in that respect or else kill the whole bill. I am trying to give the farmer $100,000,000. We are not going to give $100,000,000 to the farmer under this bill. What we are going to do is to allow whoever wants to do the wrong thing to take $350, and pay off $1,000 of indebtedness, and take $650 of Government money and put it in his pocket. That is not honest in my opinion, and that is not the way to run a bank.

Mr. BROOKHART. Evidently the Senator has not read the bill carefully. It does not lend a dollar to a farmer. It loans $100,000,000 to the joint-stock land banks to go out and buy their own depreciated bonds, if they want to do so. They can use the whole $100,000,000 to buy their own depreciated bonds and buy in $250,000,000 or $300,000,000 of their own bonds and then go ahead and foreclose the farmers anyway. No, Mr. President, the bill shall not pass in that form so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I was simply saying that the primary object of this $100,000,000 is not necessarily that it should be loaned to the farmer.

Mr. LONG. That is what it ought to be.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will recall that when we passed the $125,000,000 appropriation for the benefit of the land banks it was expected that the farmers would receive a considerable portion of that, not necessarilly of the money that we appropriated but by enabling the Federal land banks to continue to function and by injecting a little more lifeblood into their veins. Just how much of it has reached the farmer is problematical, but it undoubtedly has enabled the land banks to ease the situation with reference to foreclosures. If the Senator will read the hearings, he will find that there are practically no foreclosures now being brought about by the farm-loan banks, and this $125,000,000 helped to bring that situation about; and in some cases it has reached the farmer.

This provision for the loaning of $100,000,000 by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the joint-stock land banks was not in this bill when it was originally introduced. It was incorporated after conferences with the Farm Loan Board and with some member of the board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation who was asked to come here and talked with the committee in executive session about matters pertaining to this bill. Frankly, I will say that I am not enthusiastic about the inclusion of this loan to the joint-stock land banks; I was not enthusiastic about it when it was included, because, whatever one may think about the wisdom or lack of wisdom of organizing the joint-stock land banks originally, I think we are all prepared to admit that, in some form or other, they have got to go; they have either got to be consolidated with the land banks or they have got to be allowed to liquidate in an orderly manner.

Some of them are already in the hands of receivers; but it was represented to the committee—and that is largely the reason why this $100,000,000 was included—that it would enable them to liquidate in an orderly fashion rather than to liquidate with great loss to themselves and to the bondholders and to the farmers. It is impossible to say how much of this $100,000,000 will reach the farmers, however desirable it might be that all of it might reach them; but that is the reason why this $100,000,000 was put in.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest that the farmer is benefited as a borrower by the reduction of his interest rate to 4 per cent and an extension of the time for two years as against any possible foreclosure?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana will realize that the joint-stock land banks now hold about $500,000,000 in mortgages against the farms of the United States. Many of those mortgages are defaulting, and many of the farms on which these mortgages are held are delinquent in taxes and delinquent in the payment of interest, and the interest is at a much higher rate than that provided in this bill. It is expected and hoped that the $100,000,000 advanced to the joint-stock land banks will be justified in the benefit it will confer upon the farmers of a lower rate of interest, in withholding foreclosures, and in enabling the joint-stock land banks, if they must liquidate, to do it in an orderly way. That is the only basis upon which I voted for it in the committee or will vote for it here.

Mr. LONG. That is what I understood, namely, that this bill was going to reduce the interest rate from 8 per cent to 4 per cent, and that it was going to give a 2-year extension on mortgages which were falling due.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator will realize that this whole measure is intended to bridge over a catastrophic situation while we are attempting to frame permanent legislation for the refinancing of the American farm-mortgage situation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will bear with me for just a moment—when we started out to hold hearings in the Banking and Currency Committee based upon the Robinson bills, which were permanent in their character, we soon discovered that it would be impossible to pass any permanent legislation at this session; that any scheme of refinancing the farm mortgages at a lower rate of interest to work out over a long period of time would require the most intensive study, and would involve great controversy and great difficulty. It is not an easy thing to sit down and write a bill to refinance $9,000,000,000 of American farm mortgages.

Mr. LONG. Ten billion dollars of them.

Mr. BARKLEY. We found that we could not do that at this session, but we felt that we ought to do something to relieve the immediate pressure of foreclosure, not only by the Federal land banks, not only by the joint-stock land banks, but by insurance companies and private loaning associations and private banks and by everybody else who holds these $9,000,000,000 of mortgage debts against the farmers of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President-

Mr. BARKLEY. Just a minute. Let me finish the sentence.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. Therefore we felt justified in providing a sort of voluntary moratorium for a period of two years on the theory that during those two years—and I hope much sooner—we may be able to frame permanent legislation dealing with the whole farm-mortgage problem in the United States. For that reason, I will say, we concluded to have a 2-year period for this emergency legislation.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield, in order that I may ask my colleague from Kentucky a question?

Mr. LONG. I should like first to make one more observation along the line the senior Senator from Kentucky has been discussing. As I look at the matter, it is a physical impossibility for the $100,000,000 to do much good if a man can go in with $350 and get a thousand dollars of the money. That is the point I am arguing now.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not get the Senator's point very clearly as to how that may be done.

Mr. LONG. The point is this: As I understand, referring to the provision under discussion when we adjourned on Saturday, on page 7, in the last part of section 5, I think—

Mr. BARKLEY. That provision sets forth one of the conditions upon which the joint-stock land bank may obtain the loan.

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. LONG. That provision reads:

And (3) shall have agreed that the farm-loan bonds issued by the bank will be accepted at their face value in payment of any indebtedness at the bank under the terms of a first mortgage held by the bank.

What does that mean? I do not know whether the Senator from Kentucky voted for it in the committee or not, but what that means is this: The bonds of the joint-stock land bank are to-day selling for, I think, 35 cents on the dollar, are they not?

Mr. FLETCHER. On the average.

Mr. LONG. On the average. That means if a farmer should decide to borrow a thousand dollars he can borrow the thousand dollars, but before he borrows the thousand dollars he can take $350 and buy a thousand dollars' worth of bonds, and he can slip over the piece of paper that cost him $350 and get a thousand dollars of money that the Government has put there.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me remind the Senator from Louisiana that the proposed act provides that "the first mortgage on such lands with respect to which a loan or advance is applied for under this act" must have been "executed before January 1, 1931."

Mr. LONG. Then take an existing mortgage—it is just the same thing; it does not make any difference which way you put it—if he had already borrowed a thousand dollars he could pay it off with $350. That is what he can do.

The Senator from Georgia, who has been a judge, understands the principle that one certainly can not take a matured obligation and match it with an unmatured obligation. I do not think the Senator from Georgia was here when I used as an illustration railroad bonds. To-day the bonds of the Central of Georgia Railway are selling for around 20 cents on the dollar, or perhaps a little more than that—

Mr. GEORGE. And the railroad is in the hands of a receiver.

Mr. LONG. We are loaning them money the same as we ! are loaning money to the joint-stock land banks through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and if the principle to which I have referred is good in law, a man who has a freight bill for a thousand dollars can buy a Central of Georgia Railway bond for $200, pay off the thousand dollars, and not owe any more freight, and thereby save $800.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to remind the Senator that in a proper case he can do that in equity; in equity an unmatured claim can be set off if equitable grounds of set-off exist. The Senator is confusing the matter of freight and the outstanding bonds of the railroad company with the transactions of the land bank. The bond of the land bank is simply predicated upon the mortgage against the land of the several borrowers from the bank. When the bonds fall below par, if any debtor to the land bank is able to buy the bonds and carry them to maturity, of course, he will have an absolute right to set them off or the land bank will be compelled to pay the bonds in full or else suffer receivership. The proposal here is entirely equitable; it has substantially the equity in it that a court of equity would recognize when an unmatured obligation of the creditor is presented by the debtor. The mortgaged premises are generally if not universally purchased by the bank at its bid. The bank can go into the market and purchase and retire a proportionate part of the bonds issued against the mortgage, generally at a cost below its bid at the mortgage sale.

Mr. LONG. I ask the Senator why would it not be fairer for us to say we are going to let the farmer pay off these debts at 35 cents on the dollar than to let some of them do it at 35 cents and others at 50 cents and others at a dollar? In other words, if it is a fair principle, and we are going to let a number of men who owe a thousand dollars get off by the payment of $350, would it not be fairer and more equitable and more reasonable and lawful for us simply to say that we are going to let them all lose at 35 cents on the dollar, for that is what will be the result if we adopt this principle.

Mr. GEORGE. I cannot say that, but I think the principle of the bill is entirely wrong. There were introduced here in the early part of the session bills providing for the refinancing of farm mortgages where there had been a voluntary scaling down of the principal. I think those bills are sound. They give every farm owner an opportunity and an equal chance to liquidate his fixed debt. Here we are simply putting at the top of the mortgage an additional principal, although the security is already inadequate to carry the principal amount now due. So, we are not making loans here to the farmers. I hope nobody will misunderstand it.

Mr. LONG. If we are not doing that, then we ought not to pass the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. We are making loans to mortgage companies, especially Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks, just as we have been making loans to the creditor class since we organized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the mere hope that the debtors would also share in the benefits.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not see how the Senator can contend that some speculator can go in and borrow a thousand dollars and then go buy a farm-

Mr. LONG. My attention has been called to the fact that it would have had to have been a prior debt, but the principle is the same.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is referring to the third requirement to which the joint-stock land bank must agree before it gets this money. Let me call attention of Senators to this fact. In the first place, in order to get this money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, they must agree to reduce their rate of interest to the farmer to 4 per cent. That is the first agreement they must enter into.

Mr. LONG. And extend the mortgage.

Mr. BARKLEY. And they have to agree that they will not foreclose for a period of two years. That is the second requirement. Now comes along the third requirement, that they shall agree that the farm-loan bonds issued by the bank will be accepted at their face value in payment of any indebtedness due the bank under the terms of the first mortgage.

In other words, a farmer who already has borrowed money prior to the 1st of January, 1931, which is more than two years ago, who can go out in the open market and buy these bonds at the market price, may turn them in at face value in payment of the debt he owes to the joint-stock land bank.

Mr. LONG. That is right.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, there is an element of equity and justice in it to this extent: The farmer's property has been devaluated by the depression probably by more than 50 per cent or 60 per cent, whatever it may be. There is no market for it now at all. Where a man who owns a farm borrowed money on it from the joint-stock land bank more than two years ago, and has been compelled to sit and see the value of that farm go down 65 per cent, I do not see anything unjust in allowing him to go out in the market and buy the bonds of the joint-stock land bank, based on his own property in part, and use them in payment of his debt.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, here is just what the Senator is arguing: I am not going to argue against that as a fair principle in its real sense. If the Senator means to say that these farmers ought to be allowed to pay off these debts at 35 cents on the dollar, I will join him, and I will vote for that kind of a bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that is a permanent remedy that we have not been able to work out yet; and I will say that I doubt seriously whether very many farmers will be able to take advantage even of this, because unless some miraculous way is found by which the farmer can get money he never will be able to buy any of these bonds, even at 25 cents on the dollar.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

Mr. LONG. That being the case, the situation will be simply this: We will wreck the banks, and we will not do the farmer any good.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is some question about that. Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has already yielded to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The question of wrecking the banks may be one of time and not of process. I think three of them are already in receivership, and others are hanging on the ragged edge, and it is generally conceded that some way will have to be found to help them over this rough place. Of course, the primary object of this bill is not to help the Federal land banks or the joint-stock land banks but to help the farmer over a rough place.

Mr. LONG. To extend his mortgage two years and to cut in half his interest.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Now, as I understand-and I hope the Senator from Florida will give me his attention—it is not possible to extend these mortgages for two years and to cut this interest in half unless there is an appropriation to the jointstock land banks to support them. If that is true, and if we are going to take the capital away from them, then the farmer is not going to get any benefit from it, because we will have wrecked the land banks and we will not have done the farmer, perhaps, any good at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; I yield to the Senator from Mary-

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to make the observation that by 1929 the national debt had gone down to approximately $16,000,000,000. Since that time we have added $5,000,000,000 to the national debt, making $21,000,000,000. In addition to that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has loaned $3,500,000,000, and the security upon which the loans were made has now depreciated in value so that it will be doubtful if the fund which is loaned can be recouped. Therefore, assuming-which is not the case-that half of that sum has been lost, and certainly it will be lost unless there is a turn of the tide, we will have used the national credit to the extent of $25,000,000,000.

It should be perfectly apparent, it seems to me, that the one hope of survival is for us to keep the national credit in a position where it will not become impaired. How far can we go? Is $30,000,000,000 the point where investors will be afraid to buy any more Government securities? Is thirtyfive billions the point? And when we have impaired the nation credit, what under God's sun will be left with which to rehabilitate the country?

I want to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that this bill carries $500,000,000. It may be all right to expend it in the way that we have directed in this bill; but as long as we are approaching the vanishing point of national integrity in so far as money is concerned, we should take what credit is left and apply it to the very best possible advantage.

It is my observation that in this bill we are dealing with one phase only of the national chaos and that we will have to get away from the farm problem and the bank problem and the railroad problem and view this country as a whole if we are to take what remains and apply it so that we can save the day.

I do not believe that this legislation is well considered, though its intent and purpose is of the very highest and finest. I do not believe there is time now, in the closing days of this session, to pass any kind of a helpful measure for business recovery which will not in the end come home to plague us.

Instead of attacking the depression on a single front I think we will have to attack it on all fronts with what ammunition is left. Now, when the national credit has been used up to the extent of $25,000,000,000, is it not time for us to take stock and find out how much credit we have left before the whole structure of national integrity topples from its pinnacle?

If we appropriate $500,000,000 here, half a billion dollars, and another $500,000,000 for something else, and another billion for something else, I can not help but feel that the day will soon come, and sooner than we expect, with the chaos in the country and in the world, when we will not be able to appropriate because we will not be able to sell the securities of the Republic with which to get the money to appropriate; and mark you, Senators, it is not just the farm problem. It is not just the railroad problem. What good will it be to put a prop under one branch of our business activities if another prop is going to give way and permit the whole structure to fall down?

I believe we have used the national credit unwisely in this emergency; that we should have cut salaries; that we should have cut veterans; that we should have cut national interest rates six months ago. We should have undertaken to call in national securities which are outstanding at 41/4 per cent, which we could have refinanced at 3 per cent, and the holders of those securities would have been no worse off in the long run.

I simply want to enter my protest against this and all similar legislation. I shall oppose these further extensions of national credit, believing that they are only postponing instead of hastening the day of economic recovery.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I want to say to the Senator from Maryland that my understanding is that this bill carries not $500,-000,000 but $600,000,000—$100,000,000 in excess of what has been stated.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true. Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is true.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator let me finish my statement? Then I will yield the floor.

Mr. GORE. I simply want to protest against the Senator from Utah dragging trifles into this discussion-$100,000,000. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Let me get through with this statement and then I will yield the floor.

I want to say, in connection with what my friend from Maryland [Mr. Typings] has said and in connection with what my friend from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has said, that the Senator from Maryland has very appropriately said that we will have to get away from these separate problems and deal with the country as a whole. The Senator from Idaho has rather indicated this morning that we are on the way to beating the Soviet Government; and that is where we are headed for unless we do accept the sound advice of the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Idaho, to this

We have loaned the railroads money, and we know they can not pay it back; we have loaned the farmers money. and we know they can not pay it back; we have loaned money to many other institutions, and we know they can not pay it back, until, as the Senator from Maryland now very appropriately says, we are reaching the vanishingpoint of our national integrity, at least financially speaking, and we are going to have to deal with the problem as a whole; and how are we going to deal with the problem as a whole? There is only one way to do it, and that is for Congress to get down and put into effect a system of inheritance and capital levy taxes to supply the Treasury and to decentralize wealth.

That is the only way in which it is ever going to be done. We are chipping around here, taking a chip off here and a whet off there, with too much to eat and the people starving to death, with too many houses and the people with no place to go, when the only sound, safe method by which it can be done is to decentralize the wealth of this country through an inheritance and capital-levy and income taxes, if necessary, bonded over such a period of time as will enable us to start a public-works program needed by this Government, and shorten the hours of industry, and if necessary of agriculture, to such an extent that we can solve the whole problem instead of a part of it.

If we do not do that we are going to take over the railroads, because they are going to default, and, in fact, they are already defaulting. If we do not do that we are going to take over the banks. We are going to take over the farms. We are going to have a perfect soviet system of government unless we will adopt the sound, sane, capitalistic structure of limiting these surplus fortunes from stagnating the whole country, and keep the wealth spread among the masses, where they can eat what is in the land, and wear what is in the land, and live in the houses that are empty now.

Mr. HASTINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield to me for the purpose of giving notice of two amendments to the bankruptcy bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I propose an amendment to the end of section 74 of the bankruptcy bill, H. R. 14359, to read as follows:

Involuntary proceedings under this section shall not be taken against a wage earner.

Then in section 75 of the same bill I propose an amendment on page 49, line 8, striking out the words "or creditor," and on page 50, line 20, striking out the words "or by any creditor of such farmer."

The whole purpose of the two amendments is to adhere to the policy that has existed since we had a bankruptcy act; that is to say, that a wage earner shall not be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt under the provisions of this act, and that the creditor of a farmer shall not have the privilege of putting him into involuntary bankruptcy under the provisions of the act.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Copeland Kendrick Robinson, Ind. Ashurst Costigan Couzens Dale Keyes King La Follette Lewis Logan Russell Schall Austin Bailey Schuvler Bankhead Dickinson Dill Sheppard Shortridge Barbour Barkley Bingham Fess Fletcher Long McGill Smith Smoot Black Blaine Frazier McKellar Steiwer Borah George Glass McNary Metcalf Swanson Thomas, Idaho Thomas, Okla. Hayden Patterson Carey Hebert Pittman Hull Reed Reynolds Watson Clark Connally Johnson Wheeler Coolidge Robinson, Ark. White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to make one or two observations in regard to the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana.

I offered, in the Committee on Banking and Currency, the proposal which has given rise to this controversy, the provision which would permit a farmer who owes a mortgage debt to a joint-stock land bank of $1,000 to pay off his debt to the bank with a $1,000 bond of the bank. I take the time of the Senate for a moment because I offered this amendment.

Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana and I do not understand this amendment alike. If he understands it, I do not. If I understand it, he does not. Yet I am sure we are seeking to attain the same end. We both wish to protect the farmer to avert foreclosures, to save his farm, to save his home. They are having to pay their debts twice over, three times over, in some cases four times over, owing to the fall in farm prices. The farmer can not pay his debts with 3-cent hogs, 5-cent cotton, 10-cent corn, and 30-cent wheat. Debt is the storm center of this economic hurricane. It is leaving devastation, it is leaving wreckage in its trail. Debt is the burden that is breaking the backs of our people. That burden must be decreased or prices must be increased; one or the other, or both.

I will use an illustration which will show to the Senate what I had in mind when I offered this amendment.

Suppose the Senator from Louisiana owes me $5,000, and I hold his note for $5,000, secured by a mortgage on his farm or secured by a mortgage on his home. The mortgage is due on March 1. On that date the Senator from Louisiana reports to my office to pay the debt which he owes me, and he offers in payment of that debt my $5,000 note, due on March 1, which he acquired from the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher]. He comes into my office and tells me that his debt to me is due and that he desires to pay it. He lays on my desk my note for $5,000, which he has acquired from the Senator from Florida, and says he wants me to accept my note in payment of his debt. I say, "No, Mr. Long; your note is secured by a mortgage on your home. I want money. I want money now. I want you to pay your debt according to its terms, and, if you do not make payment, I will foreclose this mortgage against you and take your home and turn you and your family out on the highway."

"Well," he says, "here is a $5,000 note of yours, a bona fide note, which you agreed to pay on this day, and I want you to take it."

I say, "No; I want money. I do not want my note. My ing to take it. I want money and not my own note of hand. I will go broke if I have to take my worthless paper in the payment of your honest debt secured by your home. Now, you dig up or I will foreclose."

That is what it comes to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GORE. I yield. Mr. LONG. The weak point in my friend's argument is this: This is not a note that is due. In the case the Senator is illustrating I agree with him thoroughly, but in this case one is a note due 40 years from to-day, and the other is a note due to-day.

Mr. GORE. Is there any reason why a farmer who has a note maturing on the installment plan covering 40 years should not, if he desires, liquidate his debt and lift the mortgage from his home?

Mr. LONG. I would like to answer the Senator on that. I am perfectly willing to have a universal system of that kind set up, but why not let me pay my freight bill to the Pennsylvania Railroad-

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator ought to be allowed to: but the case is not analogous. The analogy fails. The situation dealt with in this bill is where a joint-stock land bank, a private corporation, organized for profit, has received from the Government a privilege, the privilege of selling its bonds free of taxation, and they come here pleading that privilege as a basis for the consideration shown in this bill.

Mr. President, the transaction described in this bill does not quite comport with my old-fashioned sense of morality. The man who comes into court ought to come with clean hands. The man who seeks equity ought to do equity. When one of these private concerns holds a mortgage against a farmer's home, and the farmer tenders the bank's bond in payment of his debt, the bank ought to take it, and if it will not take it voluntarily, it ought to be made to take it. It ought not to be allowed to foreclose on homes when farmers could pay the banks in their own bonds.

Mr. President, I will cite a case which happened in Ellis County, Tex. A joint-stock land bank made a loan in that county on a farm. It appraised the farm for $20,000. It lent the farmer $10,000, 50 per cent of the appraised value. The farmer made default. That bank foreclosed the mortgage and took the farmer's home away from him. then sold the farm for $5,000, broke the price of farm land in the community, and, with half of that $5,000, it bought enough of its own bonds to wash out the original indebtedness which it had incurred based on the transaction, and had a net profit of $2,500 out of the transaction. Is that fair? Is that honest? Is that just?

How can men stand up and say that a bank should not take its own obligations in discharge of its debts?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has offered two amendments to the bankruptcy bill, both of which are perfectly satisfactory, and I think ought to be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I inquire what is before us? I thought we were acting upon another bill entirely, that it had been regularly presented, and that we were hearing various presentations upon both sides of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was misinformed. No one has called for the regular order. As the Chair understands it, Senate bill 5639 is before the Senate until the regular order is demanded.

Mr. HASTINGS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware demands the regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 5417) to extend the operation of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and note is worth only 12 cents on the dollar, and I am not will- operated under the reclamation law," approved April 1, 1932.

AMENDMENT TO BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON. This bankruptcy bill now supersedes the bill which we have just been debating, and the bankruptcy bill is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Copeland Kendrick Robinson, Ind. Costigan Couzens Dale Keyes King La Follette Russell Schall Schuyler Austin Bailey Bankhead Barbour Barkley Lewis Logan Sheppard Shortridge Dickinson Dill Bingham Fess Long Smith Fletcher McGill McKellar Blaine Frazier Steiwer George Glass McNary Metcalf Swanson Bratton Thomas, Idaho Thomas, Okla. Goldsborough Moses Neely Brookhart Gore Broussard Bulkley Grammer Norbeck Townsend Hale Harrison Trammell Bulow Norris Tydings Vandenberg Nye Oddie Byrnes Capper Hastings Walcott Caraway Hayden Patterson Carey Hebert Walsh, Mass Pittman Hull Reed Clark Reynolds Robinson, Ark. Connally Johnson Wheeler White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I now formally offer the amendment which I presented to the Senate and which I understand was accepted, but perhaps before the bill was formally before the Senate. At the end of section 74, page 48 of the bill, I move that this additional subsection (p) be inserted.

(p) Involuntary proceedings under this section shall not be taken against a wage earner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment, which the clerk will report.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 48, at the end of section 74, insert the following new subsection:

(p) Involuntary proceedings under this section shall not be taken against a wage earner.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, that is acceptable to me. Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, there was so much confusion in the Chamber that I did not get the purport of the Senator's amendment. Will he state it again or explain it briefly?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the amendment excepts the wage earner from the form of involuntary bankruptcy provided in section 74. Wage earners have always been excepted from our bankruptcy acts; that is to say, they have been protected against involuntary bankruptcy proceedings, and of course for very good reasons. I offer the amendment, the purport of which is that no involuntary petition against a wage earner shall lie under section 74 of the amended bankruptcy act.

Mr. BLAINE. I invite the Senator's attention to the provision on pages 46-47, the last paragraph beginning in line 23:

No order of liquidation or adjudication shall be entered in any proceeding under this section instituted by a wage earner unless the wage earner consents.

I intend to offer an amendment to that paragraph to accomplish another purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. I offer the amendment at another place in the bill. I do not think the language read would prevent the institution of this form of involuntary bankruptcy against a wage earner as it now stands. The amendment which I have offered simply provides that no involuntary proceeding under section 74 shall be taken against a wage earner.

Mr. BLAINE. I myself have no objection to the Senator's amendment. I was merely anxious to ascertain whether it might preclude me from offering an amendment to the paragraph which I have just read.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think so. I am not amending that paragraph at all. I do not think argument upon this amendment is at all necessary. Under the bill, as it stands, a creditor of a wage earner might file an involuntary proceeding against him and he would be compelled to defend It has always been the law in the United States, as I think, that wage earners were not subject to involuntary bankruptcy, that farmers were not, that husbandmen were not subject to involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy for good reason. The farmer's assets are not ordinarily cash assets. If a creditor might go into a bankruptcy court and ask for involuntary proceedings against his farmer-debtor, particularly at the season of the year when the farmer could not convert his assets into cash, the debtor would always be subject to the harassment and injury. It has generally been recognized that sound public policy would exclude, from the class of involuntary bankrupts, wage earners and farmers. The amendment I have first offered is with reference to wage earners and if that be accepted I shall offer one relating to farmers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia was accepted by the Senator from Delaware. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, on page 49, in line 8, I offer an amendment to strike out the words "or creditors" and on page 50, in line 20, to strike out the words "or by any creditor of such farmer."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, those amendments are acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments to the amendment are agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield to me?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin. Mr. BLAINE. I send to the clerk's desk an amendment which I offer and which I ask may be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin offers the following amendment, which the clerk will report.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 47, line 1, after the word "by," insert the words "or against," and in the same line, after the word "earner" where first used, insert "or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil," and in the same line, after the word "earner," at the end of the line, insert "or any person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil."

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, if I may offer a few words to suggest the purpose of the amendment, on last Saturday, as I recall, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] struck out, on page 40, line 23, the words "excepting a farmer." The purpose was to permit a farmer to come voluntarily under this section, especially where there could not be procured 15 farmers in the county to organize for that purpose. The result is, after striking out those words, that the language on page 46, subsection (1), reads:

The court shall in addition adjudge the debtor a bankrupt if satisfied—

And so forth.

It has been the traditional policy of our Government to exclude farmers from involuntary bankruptcy proceedings. The Senator from Delaware has excepted wage earners, and I think, very properly, following the traditional policy, the farmer should be excepted.

Mr. HASTINGS. The amendments ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the! amendments offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment are agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not understand how the Senator from Delaware can retain the floor when the bill is subject to amendment. I want to get the floor in my own right to offer an amendment. I can not offer an amendment unless I obtain the floor.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Nebraska that I obtained the floor for the purpose of offering an amendment to the bill. I yielded to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Blaine] for amendments which might be called perfecting amendments. I desire, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, to offer the amendment pertaining to the reorganization of railroads engaged in interstate commerce. That is the amendment I now desire to offer to the

Mr. NORRIS. I supposed that was the pending amendment. It is to that amendment that I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware is the same provision as is contained in the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. HASTINGS. I may say to the Senator from Florida that on Friday I proposed the amendment and asked that it be printed and lie on the table. It has been printed and a copy can be obtained by the Senator from the clerks at the desk.

Mr. NORRIS. If agreeable to the Senator, he having offered his amendment, I will offer my amendment to his amendment and let it be pending.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have no objection to the Senator offering his amendment when I shall have offered my amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Delaware should first present his amendment and have it reported and then let the Senator from Nebraska offer his amendment to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will first report the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware and then the Senator from Nebraska may offer his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. The clerk will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 57, after line 10, insert the following new section:

SEC. — Reorganization of railroads engaged in interstate commerce: (a) Any railroad corporation may file a petition stating that the railroad corporation is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature and that it desires to effect a plan of reorganization. The petition shall be filed with the court in whose territorial jurisdiction the railroad corporation, during the preceding six months or the greater portion thereof, has had its principal executive or operating office or with the court in whose jurisdiction the corporation has its domicile, and a copy of the petition shall at the same time be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission hereinafter called the commission. The petition shall be accompanied by payment to the clerk of a filing fee of $100, which shall be in addition to the fees required to be collected by the clerk under other sections of this act. Upon the filing of such a petition, the judge shall enter an order either approving it as properly filed under this section, if satisfied that such petition complies with this section and has been filed in good faith, or dismissing it. If the petition is so approved, the court in which such order approving the petition is entered shall, during the pendency of the proceedings under this section, have exclusive jurisdiction of the debtor and its property wherever located. The railroad corporation shall be referred to in the proceedings as a "debtor." Any corporation, the majority of the capital stock of which having power to vote for the election of directors is owned, either directly or indirectly through an intervening medium, by any railroad corporation filing a petition as a debtor under this section, or substantially all of whose properties are operated by such a debtor under lease or operating agreement may file, with the court in which such other debtor had filed such a petition, and in the proceeding upon such petition under this section, a petition stating that it is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature and that it des -. Reorganization of railroads engaged in interstate com-tion in connection with, or as a part of, the plan of reorganization of such other debtor; and thereupon such court shall have the same jurisdiction with respect to it, its property and its creditors and stockholders as the court has with respect to such other debtor. Creditors of any railroad corporation having claims or interests aggregating not less than 5 per cent of all the indebtedness of such railroad corporation as shown in the latest annual report which it has filed with the commission at the time when the petition is filed, may, if the railroad corporation has not filed a petition under this section, but subject to first having obtained the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, after hearing, upon notice to such railroad corporation, file with the court in which such railroad corporation might file a petition under the provisions of this section, a petition stating that such railroad corporation; is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature and that such creditors propose that it shall effect a reorganization; upon such filing of such a petition copies thereof shall be filed with the commission and served by the petitioning creditors forthwith upon the railroad corporation; the railroad corporation shall, within 10 days after such service, answer such petition; if such answer shall admit the jurisdiction of the court, that the claims of the petitioning creditors constitute the amounts necessary to applied them to file guest partities are described. tion in connection with, or as a part of, the plan of reorganization claims of the petitioning creditors constitute the amounts necessary to entitle them to file such petition under this section, and that the railroad corporation is either insolvent or unable to meet that the railroad corporation is either insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature, the court shall, upon the filing of the recommendations of the commission in writing, enter an order approving the petition as properly filed under this section if satisfied that it complies with this section and has been filed in good faith, or disapprove it if not so satisfied; and if so approved the proceedings thereon shall continue with like effect as if the railroad corporation had itself filed a petition under this section; if such answer shall deny either the jurisdiction of the court or that the claims of the petitioning creditors constitute such necessary amounts or that the railroad corporation is insolvent or unable such answer shall deny either the jurisdiction of the court or that the claims of the petitioning creditors constitute such necessary amounts or that the railroad corporation is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature, the court shall summarily try the issues, and if after the filing of the recommendations of the commission in writing it shall find that the petition complies with this section, and has been filed in good faith, the court shall enter an order approving the petition as properly filed under this section, and the proceedings thereon shall continue with like effect as if the railroad corporation had itself filed a petition under this section; otherwise the court shall dismiss the petition.

(b) A plan of reorganization within the meaning of this section (1) shall include a proposal to modify or alter the rights of creditors generally, or of any class of them, secured or unsecured, either through the issuance of new securities of any character or otherwise; (2) may include, in addition, provisions modifying or altering the rights of stockholders generally, or of any class of them; (3) shall provide adequate means for the execution of the plan, which may, so far as may be consistent with the provisions of sections 1 and 5 of the interstate commerce act as amended, include the transfer or conveyance of all or any part of the property of the debtor to another corporation or to other corporations or the consolidation of the properties of the debtor with those of another railroad corporation, or the merger of the debtor with any other railroad corporation, or the merger of the debtor with any other railroad corporation and the issuance of securities of either the debtor or any such corporation or corporations, for cash, or in exchange for existing securities, or in satisfaction of claims or rights, or for other appropriate purposes; and (4) may deal with all or any part of the property of the debtor. The term "securities" shall include evidences of indebtedness, either secured or unsecured, bo ance and confirmation, all holders of claims, interests, or securities of whatever character against the debtor or its property, including claim for future rent, whether or not such claims, interests, or securities would otherwise constitute provable claims under this act.

(c) Upon approving the petition as properly filed the judge (c) Upon approving the petition as properly filed the judge (1) may temporarily appoint a trustee or trustees of the debtor's estate, who shall have all the title and, subject to the control of the judge and consistently with the provisions of this section, shall exercise all the powers of a trustee appointed pursuant to section 44 or any other section of this act, and, subject to the judge's control, shall have the power to operate the business of the railroad corporation; (2) shall fix the amount of the bond of such trustee or trustees and require the debtor, the trustee, or trustees to give such notice as the order may direct to creditors and stockholders and to cause publication thereof to be made at or trustees to give such notice as the order may direct to creditors and stockholders and to cause publication thereof to be made at least once a week for two successive weeks of a hearing to be held within 30 days after such appointment, at which hearing or any adjournment thereof the judge may make permanent such appointment, or may terminate it and may, in the manner herein provided for the appointment of trustees, appoint a substitute trustee or substitute trustees, and in the same manner may appoint an additional trustee or additional trustees, and shall fix the amount of the bond of the substitute or additional trustee or trustees; the trustee or trustees and their counsel shall receive such compensation as the judge may allow within a maximum approved by the commission; (3) may for cause shown, and with the approval of the commission, in accordance with section 20 (a) of the interstate commerce act as amended, authorize the trustee or trustees to issue certificates for cash, property, or other considerates. or trustees to issue certificates for cash, property, or other consideration approved by the judge, for such lawful purposes and upon such terms and conditions and with such security and such pri-ority in payments over existing obligations, secured or unsecured, as might in an equity receivership be lawful; (4) shall require the debtor, at such time or times as the judge may direct and in lieu of the schedules required by section 7 of this act, to file such schedules and submit such other information as may be necessary to disclose the conduct of the debtor's affairs and the fairness of any proposed plan; (5) shall determine a reasonable time within which the claims and interests of creditors and stock-holders may be filed or evidenced and after which no such claim holders may be filed or evidenced and after which no such claim or interest may participate in any plan except on order for cause shown; the manner in which such claims and interests may be filed or evidenced and allowed, and, for the purposes of the plan and its acceptance, the division of creditors and stockholders into classes according to the nature of their respective claims and interests; (6) shall cause reasonable notice of such determination, or of the dismissal of the proceedings, or the allowance of fees or expenses, to be given creditors and stockholders by publication or otherwise; (7) if a plan of reorganization is not proposed or accepted, or, if proposed and accepted, is not confirmed, within such reasonable time as the judge may, upon cause shown and after considering any recommendation which has been filed by the commission, allow, may dismiss the proceeding; (8) may, within such maximum limits as are fixed by the commission, as elsewhere provided in subdivision (g) of this section, allow a reasonable compensation for the services rendered and reimbursement for the actual and necessary expenses incurred in connection with the proceeding and plan by officers, holders may be filed or evidenced and after which no such claim by the commission, as elsewhere provided in subdivision (g) of this section, allow a reasonable compensation for the services rendered and relimbursement for the actual and necessary expenses incurred in connection with the proceeding and plan by officers, parties in interest, reorganization managers, and committees or other representatives of creditors or stockholders, and by their attorneys or agents, and by such assistants as the commission with the approval of the judge may specially employ; and (9) may on his own motion or at the request of the commission refer any matters for consideration and report, either generally or upon specified issues, to one of several special masters who shall have been previously designated to act as special masters in any proceedings under this section by order of any circuit court of appeals and may allow such master a reasonable compensation for his services. The circuit court of appeals of each circuit shall designate three or more members of the bar as such special masters whom they deem qualified for such services, and shall from time to time revise such designations by changing the persons designated or reducing or adding to their number, as the public interest may require: Provided, however, That there shall always be three of such special masters qualified for appointment in each circuit who shall in their respective circuits hear any matter referred to them under this section by a judge of any district court. For all purposes of this section claims against a rallroad corporation which would have been entitled to priority over existing mortages if a receiver in equity of the property of the debtor had been appointed by a Federal court at the date of the filling of the petition hereunder shall be treated as a separate class of creditors. If in any case in which the issues have not already been tried under the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section any of the debtor's creditors shall, prior to the hearing provided for in subdivision (c), clause (2), of this sectio the amounts and character of their debts, claims, and securities, and the last known post-office address or place of business of each creditor or claimant, and (12) a list of the stockholders of the debtor, with the last known post-office address or place of business of each. The contents of such lists shall not constitute admissions by the debtor or the trustees in a proceeding under this section or otherwise. Such lists shall be open to the inspection of any creditor or stockholder of, or claimant against, the debtor, during reasonable business hours, upon application to the debtor or trustees, as the case may be. or trustees, as the case may be.

(d) Before creditors and stockholders of the debtor are asked finally to accept any plan of reorganization, the Interstate Com-merce Commission shall after due notice hold a public hearing at which the debtor shall present its plan of reorganization and at which, also, such a plan may be presented by the trustee or trustees, or by or on behalf of creditors of the debtor, being not less than 10 per cent in amount of any class of creditors. Following such hearing, the commission shall render a report in which it shall recommend a plan of reorganization (which may which it shall recommend a plan of reorganization (which may be different from any which has been proposed) that will, in its opinion be equitable, will not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class of creditors or stockholders, will be financially advisable, will meet with the requirements of subdivision (g) of this section, and will be compatible with the public interest. In such report the commission shall state fully the reasons for its conclusions, and it may thereafter, upon petition for good cause shown, and upon further hearing if the commission shall deem necessary, modify any of its recommendations and conclusions in a supplemental report stating the reasons for such modification. Thereafter the plan of reorganization recommended by the commission shall be submitted in such manner as the commission may direct to the creditors and stockholders of the debtor for acceptance or rejection, together with the report or reports of the commission thereon; and the commission shall at the same time afford an opportunity to accept or reject any other plan of reorganization filed as in this subdivision (d) provided.

(e) A plan of reorganization shall not be recommended by the commission until it has been accepted in writing and such acceptance has been filed in the proceeding by or on behalf of creditors holding two-thirds in amount of the claims of each class whose claims or interests would be affected by the plan, and by or on behalf of stockholders of the debtor holding two-thirds of the stock of each class: Provided, however, That if adequate provision is made in the plan for the protection of the interests, claims, and liens of any class of creditors or stockholders in the manner and liens of any class of creditors or stockholders in the manner provided in clauses (5) and (6) of subdivision (g), of this section, then the acceptance of the plan by such class of creditor or stockholders shall not be requisite to the approval of the plan: And provided further, That the acceptance of stockholders shall not be requisite to the confirmation of the plan if (1) the judge shall have determined (a) that the corporation is insolvent, or (b) that the interests of stockholders will not be adversely affected by the plan, or (c) that the debtor has pursuant to authorized corporate action accepted the plan and its stockholders are bound the plan, or (c) that the debtor has pursuant to authorized corporate action accepted the plan, and its stockholders are bound by such acceptance. For the purposes of this section acceptance by a creditor or stockholder shall include acceptance in writing executed by him; or acceptance by his duly authorized attorney or committee acting under authority executed by him subsequent to the recommendation of the plan by the commission. Upon acceptance of the plan in accordance with the provisions of this subdivision (e) the commission may, without further proceedings, grant authority for the issue of any securities, assumption of obligations, transfer of any property, or consolidation or merger of properties, to the extent contemplated by the plan consistent with the purposes of the interstate commerce act as amended. If the United States of America is directly a creditor or stockholder, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to accept or reject a plan in respect of the interests or claims of the United States.

States.

(f) If the plan recommended by the commission is accepted as provided in subdivision (e), the commission shall thereupon certify the plan to the court together with its approval thereof and that the same has been so accepted, together with a report of the proceedings before it and its conclusions thereon. If the plan accepted as provided in subdivision (e) differs from the plan recommended by the commission it shall, upon acceptance, be submitted to the commission, which shall hear all interested parties upon such notice and subject to such rules and regulations as it shall prescribe. If after such hearing the commission determines that the accepted plan in its opinion is equitable and will not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class of creditors or stockholders; will be financially advisable; will meet the requirements of subdivision (g) of this section; and will be compatible with the public interest; the commission shall thereupon certify the plan to the court, together with its approval thereof and that the same public interest; the commission shall thereupon certify the plan to the court, together with its approval thereof and that the same has been duly accepted, and together with a report of the proceedings before it and its findings and conclusions thereon. if any, making such provisions as may be equitable, and closing the case.

(k) If a receiver of all or any part of the property of a corporation has been appointed by a Federal or State court, whether before or after this amendatory act takes effect, the railroad corporation may nevertheless file a petition or answer under this section at any time thereafter, but if it does so and the petition is approved the trustee or trustees appointed under the provisions of this section shall be entitled forthwith to possession of such property, and the judge shall make such orders as he may deem equitable for the protection of obligations incurred by the receiver and for the payment of such reasonable administrative expenses and allowances in the prior proceeding as may be fixed by the court appointing said receiver. If a receiver has been appointed by a Federal or State court prior to the dismissal under subdivision (c), clause (7), of a proceeding under this section, the judge may include in the order of dismissal appropriate provisions directing the trustee to transfer possession of the debtor's property within the territorial jurisdiction of such court to the receiver so appointed, upon such terms as the judge may deem equitable for the protection of obligations incurred by the trustee and for the payment of administrative expenses and allowances in the proceeding hereunder. For the purposes of this section the words "Federal court" shall include the district courts of the United States and of the Territories and possessions to which this act is or may hereafter be applicable, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States of Alaska.

(1) In addition to the provisions of section 11 of this act for the staying of pending suits against the debtor, such suits shall be further stayed until after final decree the judge may, upon notice and for cause shown, enjoin or stay the commencement or continuance of any judicial proceeding to enforce any lien upon the estate until after final decree.

(m) A certified copy of an order confirming a plan of reorganization shall be evidence of the jurisdiction of the court, the regularity of the proceedings, and the fact that the order was made. A certified copy of an order directing the transfer and conveyance of the property dealt with by the plan as provided in subdivision (j) of this section shall be evidence of the transfer and conveyance of title accordingly, and if recorded shall impart the same notice that a deed if recorded would impart.

(o) The term "railroad corporation" as used in section 76 of this act means any common carrier by railroad engaged in the transportation of persons or property in interstate commerce, except a street, suburban, or interurban electric railway which is not operated as a part of a general railroad system of transportation. portation.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I think it perhaps desirable that I should make some further explanation of the section pertaining to the reorganization of railroads engaged in interstate commerce. I particularly want to recite briefly a history of this amendment as it now appears in print, and as it has been offered by me.

In the general amendment to the bankruptcy act, as I have before stated, there was a provision for the reorganization of corporations. Subsequent to that there were included in it a provision covering railroads. As it was originally drawn, railroads were not included, because railroads are not included in the old bankruptcy act.

After railroads were written into the measure as prepared by the Department of Justice, there were only those matters referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission which properly belonged to the Interstate Commerce Commission under existing law.

When this matter was considered by the House, it was believed there that it was desirable to separate the corporate reorganization sections from the railroad sections, and to write a special section pertaining to corporations engaged in interstate commerce. There was excellent reason for doing that, in view of what the House wrote into that measure. As the House considered it in committee and passed it, they practically passed the power away from the Federal courts into the Interstate Commerce Commission, leaving almost nothing for the courts to do except to approve of that which had been done by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

After the bill had been voted out of the committee in the House, my recollection is, but before it passed the House, I took the bill, together with the measure which had been prepared by the Department of Justice, and submitted the whole question to the Interstate Commerce Commission, asking them to give to me, for the benefit of the Senate, their judgment regarding this legislation. They replied with a very long report, which was printed, with other criticisms and statements by other people relative to this subject, and is now a public document.

I want to call particular attention, however, to some of the things said by the Interstate Commerce Commission in that report. They state:

We shall first consider the advantages over present procedure which the two bills have in common.

Referring to that which had been passed by the House and that which had been proposed by the Senate:

As we see them, these advantages are as follows:

1. The word "receivership" is in ill repute and creates alarm among investors, but reorganizations can now seldom be accomplished except through receiverships. These bills would substitute a trusteeship, which would in practical effect be very like a receivership but would probably arouse less apprehension.

2. The expense of so-called ancillary receiverships in different States or parts of the country, which are now frequently necessary, would be avoided.

3. Creditors and stockholders would have a better opportunity to be heard in regard to appointments of the trustees than they now have to be heard with respect to the appointment of receivers, due to the provision for a temporary appointment to be followed, after 30 days and a hearing, by a permanent appointment.

4. The opportunity of creditors and stockholders to suggest and have considered a plan of reorganization different from that proposed by the reorganization managers would probably be somewhat better than at present, due to the fact that such an opportunity is provided for specifically in the bills.

5. Since the bills provide that the plan, when adopted, shall be 5. Since the bills provide that the plan, when adopted, shall be binding upon dissenting stockholders and unsecured creditors of any class which has accepted a plan (the House bill extends this to secured creditors also), it is possible that reorganization could be accomplished without sale of the property. Even if there were a class or classes of nonaccepting stockholders or creditors, a sale might be avoided if appraisal were adopted as the method of determining the cash value of their interests.

6. The effect of the bills would probably be to expedite reorganization, in comparison with the process under receivership, although this is not certain.

In that connection I may say that since that was written we have consulted with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and think that we have made it quite certain that it could be done very much more quickly.

- 7. Due to the specific authority given to the commission to fix at least a maximum for certain reorganization expenses, there would probably be a greater measure of control over these expenses than at present, although this is not certain, for reasons which are stated below.
- 8. The commission would have more specific authority than at present to consider the equity of the plan, so far as the various classes of creditors and stockholders are concerned.

Then, Mr. President, the chairman of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Eastman, who signed the letter, proceeded to explain that, in his judgment, this bill does not cover all of the situations which are at the present time serious, and that it would be possible for the Congress by some legislation to go very much further than this and accomplish a great deal more.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment offered by the Senator provides, on page 1, line 6:

The petition shall be filed with the court in whose territorial jurisdiction the railroad corporation, during the preceding six months or the greater portion thereof, has had its principal executive or operating office or with the court in whose jurisdiction the corporation has its domicile.

I wonder whether the Senator would be willing to add there this proviso:

Provided, That where any railroad, although engaged in inter-state commerce, lies wholly within one State, such proceeding shall be brought in the Federal district court within that State in which the railroad is located.

I can see no objection to that amendment. It seems to me, for instance, that a railroad operating entirely within a State might have an executive office in New York, and there might be a question of jurisdiction. The petition might be filed in New York when it really should be filed in the district court in the State where the railroad is located.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to proceed with my explanation, and will come back to that, if he desires to offer the amendment, I would like to discuss it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, Mr. Eastman in his letter states:

thoroughgoing reform of reorganization procedure in the public interest would go to this root of the matter, and would entrust the working out of an equitable and effective reorganization from the beginning to some well informed, well equipped and disinterested branch of the public service, just as has been done to some considerable extent in the case of banks and insurance companies.

We should prefer to see an attempt made to deal more fundamentally with this matter, but we realize that the time is short, if anything is to be done at the present session, and that the need for action is urgent.

I particularly want to call the Senate's attention to this statement by Mr. Eastman, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that in his judgment the need for action is urgent, and while this bill is not what he thinks it might well be if we had full time to consider it, he does think that some action is urgent, and, as I understand it, that we ought to accept this bill, with some suggestions he has made with respect to it.

Mr. Eastman said further:

We realize also that legislation of the more thoroughgoing character which we suggest would involve so radical a change in accustomed procedure that it would meet with the resistance all such changes encounter, and would probably entail long discussion.

He follows that by taking the House bill as a basis, and making such changes in it as seemed to him desirable.

After the receipt of that letter, the Department of Justice, taking the House bill as a basis, and taking this criticism of the Interstate Commerce Commission, have prepared the amendment which I have presented here to-day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does Mr. Eastman speak for the entire commission, or is he expressing only his individual view with respect to the reorganization and the imperative necessity for some legislation at this session?

Mr. HASTINGS. The letter is signed by him as chairman of the legislative committee. He probably does not speak for the whole commission. From my reading of the letter I take it that what is said is the judgment of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. KING. Consisting of how many?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am sorry, I can not tell the Senator. Mr. President, I would like for a moment to invite attention to the importance of the legislation and to state that in my judgment it is not a very radical departure from our present procedure in dealing with railroads. It is true that it is radical in that it brings the railroads under the bankruptcy act. Indeed, what we are endeavoring to do here in making these adjustments with debtors, with the individual, the farmer, the railroads, and the corporations, is all somewhat a departure from our general idea of a bankruptcy law.

As I have stated, it has been given a new chapter under the bankruptcy act, calling it chapter 8, where these four subjects are considered separately from the other sections of the bankruptcy law. It is a departure from bankruptcy law, but what it really amounts to is this, so far as the railroads and corporate reorganization sections are concerned. It is an enlargement upon the procedure relative to equity receiverships. It is an enlargement and it is believed to be a very much more workable scheme than the ordinary receivership. In that respect it is of great advantage to the corporation that may be involved. Being an advantage to the corporation, it is an advantage to those who are investors in the corporation and does not in any instance, so far as I know, in any way affect improperly or unfavorably the creditors of such corporations.

So far as I can see there are only two or three difficulties that might arise with respect to the section; I mean difficulties that might cause Members of the Senate to hesitate about voting for it. From my point of view, none of those differences of opinion is sufficient to warrant us in refusing to pass the bill.

As I view it, if the Interstate Commerce Commission are reasonably satisfied that the bill will be an effective measure for the reorganization of the railroads, for the benefit of the public as well as the investor, and if the executives of the railroads be satisfied that this is an important measure for them, the only possible thing left for us to consider is whether or not the public interests are in all respects protected

Mr. DILL. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Patterson in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HASTINGS. I vield.

Mr. DILL. Right in that connection I would like to call attention to the phrase on page 2 of the Senator's amendment, line 19:

Any corporation, the majority of the capital stock of which having power to vote for the election of directors is owned—

And so forth. Why has this right been confined to the capital stock that has a right to vote for directors?

Mr. HASTINGS. Did the Senator finish reading the entire provision? It applies to holding companies. The purpose is to permit holding companies of railroads that control to participate in the reorganization.

Mr. DILL. But it does more than that, it seems to me. It confines it to a majority of the capital stock having power to vote for the election of directors. These corporations or holding companies are so organized that they control all the holding power and the ordinary stockholder does not have anything to say about it. It impresses me the result of this would be to take away the right of the stockholder who has his money invested in the company.

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me discuss it for a moment by reading the entire provision in that regard.

Any corporation, the majority of the capital stock of which having power to vote for the election of directors is owned, either directly or indirectly, through an intervening medium, by any railroad corporation filing a petition as a debtor under this section, or substantially all of whose properties are operated by such a debtor under lease or operating agreement may file, with the court in which such other debtor had filed such a petition, and in the proceeding upon such petition under this section, a petition stating that it is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature and that it desires to effect a plan of reorganization in connection with, or as a part of, the plan of reorganization of such other debtor.

By "majority vote" they merely bring the corporation into court with authority to be dealt with as any other property of a railroad corporation is dealt with. It is one of the few provisions in the section that has not been seriously discussed with me, and I have not had as much criticism of it as I have of other sections.

Mr. DILL. It may be a perfectly sound provision, but reading it through—and that is all I have been able to do with the amendment—I was anxious to know just what the effect would be and just how far it would interfere with the rights of the ordinary stockholder.

Mr. HASTINGS. As I understand it, it merely permits a corporation that controls by a holding company or by a railroad, to be considered as a part of the plan.

Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, it seemed to me the only thing left for us seriously to consider is whether or not the public interests are properly protected under the bill. I am quite certain, with all the authority we have given to the Interstate Commerce Commission, whose duty it is, of course, to see to it that the public interests are protected, that we have gone as far as it is possible to go in that direction. It seems to me it is not possible for any person to complain that under the terms of the bill the public interests are not being properly taken care of.

There is one thing about which I concede there may be a very great difference of opinion. Under this section we have provided that two-thirds of any class of creditors might bind the other one-third without the consent of that one-third. I can readily understand how it might be questionable whether we ought to permit—even after hearing before the court and after the court finds it equitable—the two-thirds of any class to bind the one-third that may be objecting. On the other hand, we must bear in mind always that there are a few persons in every corporation who take the opportunity of objecting for the very purpose of forcing those in charge of reorganizing the corporation to give to them a greater share of the assets than would normally come to that particular class.

The many persons to whom I have talked with respect to it believe that we will be thoroughly justified in adopting the provision in the bill and in the way the House passed it, except that we have made a distinction, as I recollect it, between the secured creditor and the unsecured creditor in that regard.

But may I point out to the Senate that, regardless of how we deal with respect to that provision, it is a great deal better to enact the legislation, leaving the one-third with their rights coming into the reorganization if they want to or declining if they want to, and insisting upon being paid in cash for whatever their one-third interest might be valued. It is a great deal more important to pass the bill with this amendment than it is to refuse to pass it at all. All the information I can get with respect to the railroad situation convinces me that it is particularly serious at this time. Pretty nearly $300,000,000 has been loaned and has not been repaid to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by the railroads of the country. Most of us believe that it is necessary to do that in order to keep the railroads operating and believe it is necessary to keep them out of receivership in order to prevent financial institutions which hold their securities from going into bankruptcy or something else happening to them.

In addition to that, Mr. President, there is coming due this very year nearly $300,000,000 of bonds of railroads and equipment notes of railroads. Under normal conditions that would not be distressing to the railroads. It would in no sense be distressing to the country. It would be a normal thing and in normal times could be taken care of easily by the investing public. But that is not true now. It may be true, indeed I know that it is true, that many of the railroads must be placed in a position where they can negotiate with their investors in order to protect themselves from receiverships.

Whatever we may say with respect to receiverships, however we may dislike receiverships, there is no corporation anywhere that is so greatly handicapped under a receivership as is a railroad corporation. They have their property scattered in various parts of the country. It becomes necessary to have ancillary receivers appointed. Somebody has to operate the property. It is undoubtedly done at great expense. That is not the worst of it. It is done in most instances with great inefficiency, if I may express it that way. In other words, it is inefficiently done under receivership and of necessity that is true. That is no criticism necessarily of the receiver or the man who is trying to run it.

Under this plan it is believed that in a very short while the railroads could present their plans to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission are familiar with the railroads. They know all the phases of the railroad problems. They could help the railroads to arrange a plan. They would send out notices to every creditor and to all the stockholders. They would all have an opportunity to come before the commission and be heard. If they agree upon the plan which the Interstate Commerce Commission finds equitable and that it ought to be accepted, then it is submitted to the creditors of the corporation.

Then there is another place where they can be heard and that is before the court. The plan is taken to the court after it is approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. If, after the Interstate Commerce Commission having approved it, the judge who is considering it finds it equitable and in the public interest, then he approves it, and, without that railroad ever being in the hands of a receiver, it has adjusted its affairs with its investors; it has taken, it may be bonds having interest maturing every three months and changed them into merely income bonds—that is, bonds to which can be applied and paid on account any money with which the corporation may be credited—but it does not mean that the corporation can be put in the hands of a receiver by any person who holds one of its bonds upon which interest has not been paid.

We must remember that in dealing with these corporations it is not necessary to have even three creditors complain, as in ordinary bankruptcy cases, before there is trouble. All that is necessary is to have one creditor make application. An application may be made by one creditor to a court in chancery in the State of Delaware and to courts of equity in most of the other States for a receiver upon the ground that the corporation is not able to pay its debts as they mature. Then it is immediately in trouble. If the allegation is true, if they can not meet their obligations as they mature, then there is nothing the court can do but grant the request and put the corporation in the hands of a receiver. Having once gotten them into the hands of a receiver, consider the great difficulty in getting the various interests of that corporation together and to agree upon any plan of reorganization. In most instances, if not in all, it becomes necessary actually to sell the property of the corporation before any reorganization can be effected, and that is done in various ways. If there be bondholders, then bondholders' committees are organized, and much difficulty is encountered. An effort is made to interest the bondholders. The poor bondholder is written to, but he does not know whether to trust his bond with a committee, whether or not to trust it to the committee. He is at a great disadvantage and tries to find out what it is all about—when there is going to be a reorganization and when something is going to happen for his relief. If we could have enacted into law a measure such as this, he would know instantly what the plan is; he would know whether he is prepared to vote for it or to vote against it; he would know whether he wants to join in with the proposed plan or whether he does not want to join in it. As I see this proposed legislation, it is a step forward that does not involve governmental expense of any kind; but, on the other hand, I think it will save a lot of money to many investors throughout the country.

It may be said that it will take a lot of water out of the various railroads and other corporations. Well, we had just as well have it out, if it is no good to anybody; and having it in there does not help the situation. I think the sooner the railroads and other corporations reorganize and get upon a firm foundation, so that everybody who holds one of their obligations will know it is worth a hundred cents on the dollar, the better it will be; and it seems to me we will do a great service for this country if we can

My friend from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton] has, very properly, I admit, criticized this proposed legislation because of the inability of the committee carefully to consider it; but I beg of him and other Senators who may agree with him not to hesitate to pass this measure upon that ground, because, after all, the Congress will come back in a little while, and it will be very much easier then to correct any mistakes we may make than it would be to pass this bill in its original form, leaving out this provision, and undertake to pass it subsequently.

The bill has passed the House. All we have to do is to pass it through the Senate, submit it to conference, and do the best we can there to reach an agreement with respect to it. If we make mistakes, as we are likely to do, it will be easy enough to correct those mistakes during another Congress that is coming on shortly, if you please, if those mistakes seen sufficiently important to warrant consideration at that time. I am satisfied, however, that there are in this proposal no very serious mistakes such as would do great injury.

It has been suggested to me that it is unreasonable for me to expect Members of the Senate to agree on this amendment when I have given so much more time to it than they have given to it; and it is said that they ought to have the same opportunity as I have had with respect to it. However, I point out to them that all the conferences I have had, and all the study I have given to this bill have been for the purpose of improving it. Those who first complained about it, with one or two exceptions-perhaps that is limiting the number too greatly, there may have been more than that, but there were very few, and I can not recall anydid insist that this proposed legislation was important and that we ought to get through the best bill that we could agree upon; and all the difficulties I have had have been with those persons who believed that if I adopted some suggestions made by them the bill as a whole would be improved.

Mr. BRATTON and Mr. KING addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield; and if so, to whom? Mr. HASTINGS. I yield first to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, permit me to invite the Senator's attention to page 13, line 4, the language there reading as follows:

Upon acceptance of the plan in accordance with the provisions of this subdivision (e) the commission may, without further proceedings, grant authority for the issue of any securities, assumption of obligations, transfer of any property, or consolidation or merger of properties, to the extent contemplated by the plan consistent with the purposes of the interstate commerce act, as amended.

Then, if the Senator will turn to page 14, line 20, I ask him to note the language, reading:

(g) Upon such approval by the commission, and after hearing such objections as may be made to the approved plan, the judge shall confirm the plan if satisfied—

Of certain things which are set forth.

Let me inquire of the Senator what would be the status of securities issued immediately after the commission should act in the event the judge thereafter should refuse to confirm the proposed plan? As to securities issued following approval of the commission but before action of the judge, assuming that the judge refused to confirm the proposed plan, what would be the status of those securities thus put into circulation?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, my understanding is that there would be no authority for the issuing of securities merely because the Interstate Commerce Commission had acted upon the plan, but that it would be necessary to wait until the plan had been approved by the judge. May I explain to the Senator from New Mexico that that rather awkward expression in that particular place was put in for this purpose: The hope was-I do not know who made the suggestion; I am not sure that the Interstate Commerce Commission itself did not make it—that by the use of this language time could be saved in the matter of reorganizations; that when the commission had approved the plan as a whole they might at the same time approve the issuance of securities. My own judgment is that that does not give to the railroad corporation any authority to do anything under the plan until after it has been approved by the judge.

Mr. BRATTON. But permit me to call the Senator's attention to the language reading as follows:

The commission may, without further proceedings, grant authority for the issue of any securities, assumption of obligations, transfer of any property, or consolidation or merger of properties, to the extent contemplated by the plan consistent with the purposes of the interstate commerce act as amended.

Does not the Senator think that that language authorizes the sale of such securities prior to confirmation by the judge?

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator must bear in mind always that, while all this is going on, the whole property of the railroad is in the hands of a trustee, and nothing can be done in the way of issuing new securities until that trustee has been discharged and the property returned to the railroad. There is one exception, of course, to that and that is in the case of the issuance of trustees' certificates which are provided for in another place. However, after the plan is approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission nothing can be done with it, so far as the railroad is concerned, because the railroad has not any authority over its own property at that time, it still being in the hands of a trustee.

Mr. BRATTON. If that be true, why should the commission grant authority at all?

Mr. HASTINGS. Because it becomes necessary under the existing law for the Interstate Commerce Commission to give to the railroads authority to issue certain securities, and the purpose of this language was to provide that they might do it all at one time.

Mr. BRATTON. That is quite true, but now we are creating a new system for the administration of the affairs of railroad companies during the process of reorganization. During that period, as the Senator has well said, the corporation is under the control of the judge. That being true, the judge supervising the reorganization, and having the final word in the premises, namely his decree of confirmation, why is it necessary to have the commission act at all?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I will be very frank with the Senator and say that if I were writing this provision and using only my own judgment I should not have given the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority which this section grants. But there is this to be said in defense of the position of those who insist that the Interstate Commerce Commission ought to have the authority: The Interstate Commerce Commission is the one commission of the Government that practically has control of the railroads; it knows or ought to know, and I believe does know, more about the railroads than any other agency of the Government. It knows more about their financial condition than any other person or body. It is urged that in many instances applications made to a court might be made to a judge who has had no experience whatever in railroad matters, but who would be dependent entirely upon interested railroad officials in determining what he should do and whether the plan was a good plan or whether it was not a good plan. I was finally convinced, in order that the public might be made safe always and that other persons interested in the railroad might be made safe, that it was perhaps, after all, a wise thing to submit the plan to the Interstate Commerce Commission and let it work out with the various investors the best plan possible and submit it to the investors before they should be asked to confirm it. So I became convinced after a while that this plan was, perhaps, better than to leave it with the judge, as I had originally intended.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I agree perfectly with the Senator that the Interstate Commerce Commission should have a voice in these proceedings for the very reason the Senator has so well expressed. With that in mind, I wonder why the Senator in this amendment did not carry forward the provision contained in the House text or, indeed, the language found in his former draft, to confine the appointment of a trustee or trustees to a roster for such purpose proposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In the present draft the Senator has abandoned that; he takes away from the Interstate Commerce Commission any voice in the selection of a trustee or trustees during reorganization. I wonder what moved the Senator to do that. Does he mind telling us?

Mr. HASTINGS. I would not if I knew, but I am not certain that I know. As I have stated before, a representative of the group in New York that were endeavoring to help devise some scheme that would assist the railroads, a representative of the President elect, Solicitor General Thacher, and the Interstate Commerce Commission conferred time and time again with respect to this, and out of it all came the striking out of this particular provision.

So far as I am concerned, I do not think it is of very great importance; and while I might not be willing to accept an amendment, I certainly would not oppose anybody who insisted that that ought to go in. I do not think it is important enough even to consider very long, as I see it.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. BYRNES addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator has answered the question I desired to ask him, whether he opposed an amendment to that effect.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I have to go to a committee meeting.

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I call attention to the amendment I suggested, and I believe the Senator will have no objection to it. In line 6, on page 2, if the Senator will follow me, I propose to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and this language:

Provided, That where any railroad, although engaged in interstate commerce, lies wholly within one State, such proceeding shall be brought in the Federal district court within the State in which the railroad is located.

I can see no objection to that, and I offer that amendment. Mr. HASTINGS. May I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this section applies only to the reorganization of railroads engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know that.

Mr. HASTINGS. For the moment I was thinking that a railroad that operated in one State only could not be engaged in interstate commerce, but, of course, that is not true.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am supposing that it is. It may be engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not think I have any objection to that amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Delaware, I desire to express the opinion that the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton] should be agreed to. I think the provision of the House is infinitely better than that contained in the amendment of the Senator from Delaware; and inasmuch as he expresses the view that the matter is not one of great importance, I hope he will concur with the Senator from New Mexico in accepting the House provision.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the original suggestion came from the House; and I think the Solicitor General and myself modified that somewhat by suggesting the panel. Since the Senator from New Mexico asked me the question, I am not certain that I am correct in saying that I think the Interstate Commerce Commission wanted to avoid the naming of any such panel. That may not be correct; but certainly that is not a very serious matter in this bill, and if the Senator—particularly the Senator who served with me on the subcommittee—wants to propose that as an amendment, I shall be glad to accept it.

Mr. BRATTON. At a later time I shall offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, as amended.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I send forward an amendment to appear on page 21, line 16, following the period, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 21, at the end of line 16, it is proposed to add the following:

Or which does not derive more than 50 per cent of its operating revenues from the transportation of freight in standard steam railroad freight equipment. Railroad or railway corporations excluded from the provisions of this section shall be subject to the provisions of section 75 of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BRATTON. Let me state briefly the purpose of this amendment, and I think the Senator from Delaware will accept it.

In connection with the definition of the term "railroad corporation," this amendment is designed to include an electric railway independently owned and not operated as a part of a general system of transportation whose principal revenue is from the transportation of freight, if such an electric railway has physical connections with steam railroads, exchanges standard freight equipment with them, and transports freight in standard steam freight equipment. It merely includes an electric railway of that kind, and brings it under the provisions of the bill.

I hope the Senator from Delaware will accept the amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I had intended to write into the section relative to corporate reorganization some provision which would accomplish, I think, the same result. I have some memoranda on it, and when it came to the corporate section I proposed to offer an amendment. I had not considered whether it was desirable or necessary to have it in this section also; but the Senator from New Mexico undoubtedly has given careful consideration to it, and I am content to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have a number of amendments that I should like to offer. Unfortunately, I have not been able to have them printed; but I shall direct the attention of the Senator from Delaware to them.

The first amendment that I should like to offer is on page 2, line 2, after the word "office," where I propose to strike out the words "or with the court in whose jurisdiction the corporation has its domicile."

My purpose in offering the amendment is that it seems to me, under all the circumstances, the situation is well enough taken care of if the jurisdiction is given to courts, as provided in the preceding language—

In whose territorial jurisdiction the railroad corporation, during the preceding six months or the greater portion thereof, has had its principal executive or operating office.

To permit the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court where the corporation has its domicile may not have any relation to the territory in which the railroad corporation actually conducts its business. As is well known, many corporations organize for purposes of incorporation in States where the laws concerning incorporation are more satisfactory than elsewhere to those who are undertaking the organization of the corporation; and it seems to me that there is a much greater likelihood that the principal executive or operating office of the corporation will be located in territorial jurisdictions which have relation to the actual transportation business and the territory served in which the corporation is operating.

I do not know whether the amendment I have offered will meet the approval of the author of the main amendment or not, but I consider it to be rather an important provision. Otherwise, if the language remains in the amendment as first suggested, we may find that a great many of the proceedings provided for in the amendment will occur in the States where the corporations have their domicile and will be perhaps thousands of miles away from the territory in which they are operating and from the communities in which they have their principal operating offices.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I say to the Senator from Wisconsin that what he has in mind with respect to States that are incorporating companies to operate in other places does not ordinarily apply to railroads. I do not know of any instances in which the railroads do not have to have some authority in their own State in that respect; and a great many people insist that this is quite important, for the reason that it follows the old bankruptcy law. I do not believe it is the same language, but the effect of it is the same as that of the old bankruptcy act.

One purpose that makes it important, as I see it, is that a question of jurisdiction might arise under this general description here of the corporation having its principal executive or operating office in a certain jurisdiction "during the preceding six months or the greater portion thereof." It might very well be asked, What are considered its principal or operating offices? It is always true, however, when that question arises, and there is some doubt about it, that there is a place where we know the court has jurisdictionnamely, the place of domicile. I said that I had received a great deal of correspondence about it from a great many people who are very much interested in it, but I might qualify that by saying that I do not remember definitely whether that was with respect to the railroad section or the corporate section. I was thinking it applied to both, but it may not have applied particularly to the railroad section.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that an example I had in mind was the proposed merger of the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific. Of course, it did not go through, but I understand the proposal was to incorporate the new company in one of the Eastern States, a thousand or more miles away from the territory in which those two railroads are now operating. With that suggestion in mind, it seemed to me that we would have a much better situation if the words which I have suggested should be stricken out, so that any proceedings under this measure would have to be taken in the court which would have jurisdiction over the particular territory in which the chief operating office of the railroad was located, and thus we would be certain of bringing it nearer to the territory in which the corporation was conducting its operations.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I would like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question, and I would be glad to have the attention of the Senator from Delaware. Under this bill is it assumed that the courts can take jurisdiction to enforce bankruptcy upon a railroad in any part of the country where any part of the railroad runs? Take, for instance, the Illinois Central Railroad, which is exceedingly interested. This morning I am in receipt of a telegram indicating their desires, and something of their needs. They are the lessors or owners of the Central of Georgia Railway. May I ask the able Senator whether, under this bill, a proceeding could be initiated by the Illinois Central in a court in Georgia because it was the owner of a company in Georgia, looking to relief of bankruptcy, instead of proceeding at the city of Chicago, the home of the charter? What is the Senator's idea; or has he had a chance to consider it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, my understanding of the matter now under discussion is that there would be two courts which would have jurisdiction of the proceedings contemplated by this amendment, either the court which has jurisdiction over the area in which the principal offices of the corporation are located, or the court which has jurisdiction over the territory of the State in which the corporation had been incorporated.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] who has given such considerate attention to many phases of this bill—and upon this subject he and I have conferred—this question: Is it the opinion of the Senator from Delaware that a proceeding looking to bankruptcy for a railroad could be taken any place where any part of the railroad track or its properties existed, in any State in which it might have a branch?

Mr. HASTINGS. By no means. The bill as it passed the House provided:

The petition shall be filed with the court in whose territorial jurisdiction the railroad corporation, during the preceding six months or the greater portion thereof, has had its principal executive or operating office.

That was the language of the House, and we have proposed these words, "or with the court in whose jurisdiction the corporation has its domicile."

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask, what is it the Senator from Wisconsin fears?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I seek to strike out the words "or with the court in whose jurisdiction the corporation has its domicile."

Mr. LONG. That clause ought to be stricken out.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For the reason, I will state to the Senator. Perhaps I mentioned one example which brought the matter to my attention. The Great Northern and the Northern Pacific Railroads, operating west of the Twin Cities to the coast, were recently contemplating a merger of those two corporations. It did not go through, but in the newspapers they discussed, and it was generally understood, that they would incorporate in Delaware. Under the terms of this amendment, assuming that that had been done, there would be two courts which could have jurisdiction of proceedings contemplated by the amendment, as I understand it, one the Federal court which has jurisdiction in the territory of the Twin Cities, in which the operating office is of Delaware, where the corporation would have its domicile.

I have another instance in mind. The Louisiana & Arkansas Railroad, operating in those two States, is incorporated in the State of Delaware. It seems to me that the closer these proceedings can be brought to the territory in which the railroad is actually conducting its business, the better it will be from all points of view.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I take the liberty to offer an additional illustration? I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to assume, as I am sure he knows, that the Illinois Central, one of the constituents of my State, has a branch running to Memphis, Tenn., and does maintain now its principal office in Chicago. Does the Senator assume that the words "territorial jurisdiction," within the meaning of the statute, would give jurisdiction to courts at Memphis, Tenn., as well as those in Chicago?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not understand that to be the case. Let us take the Illinois Central as an example. The only court which would have jurisdiction would be the court which has jurisdiction over the territory in which the Illinois Central has its home office, or the court which has jurisdiction over the territory in which the Illinois Central is incorporated and has its domicile. As I understand it, the Illinois Central is incorporated in the State of Illinois. So in that particular instance it would only be an Illinois Federal district court which would have jurisdiction over any proceedings contemplated by this amendment concerning the Illinois Central Railroad. But I did mention several instances where there would be different courts, having different jurisdictions, because the principal operating office of the company would be located in one territory and the domicile or the incorporation would be in another.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether the views he is expressing are incorporated in the bill or incorporated in an amendment he tenders to the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I seek to make the pending amendment read just as the bill read when it passed the House, by striking out the words which have been added in the amendment now pending, as follows, "or the court within whose jurisdiction the corporation has its domicile," so that it would read:

The petition shall be filed with the court in whose territorial jurisdiction the railroad corporation, during the preceding six months or the greater portion thereof, has had its principal executive or operating office.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Delaware this question? What objection does the Senator from Delaware tender to this suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I am not certain that there is any very great objection to it. I might say, in reference to the incorporating of railroads in Delaware, that I did not know that the railroads had taken or could very well take advantage of the incorporation law of Delaware. Everything else is incorporated there, and the law does provide for the incorporation of railroads, but I never knew that it was a practical thing to take advantage of it, or that any railroad ever had. I am evidently wrong with respect to that.

I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to this fact: He seeks to strike out certain words, as he well stated, to make the bill agree with the bill as it passed the House, which would prevent us from doing anything with the matter in conference if it seemed to be important to do something with it. I should like to have the language left as it is in my amendment, and then have an opportunity to confer with House Members, and to feel free to agree with the House on it, unless there seem some very good reason for leaving it out.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have already conferred with Representative LaGuardia concerning it and I discussed the matter at some length with him. He saw no reason why this provision should remain in the bill. As I have already stated, the Senate knows the reasons which prompted me to offer the amendment. I think it would be | it fix a sliding scale?

located, and the court which has jurisdiction of the State | a great mistake if we were to find that these receiverships were taking place a thousand or more miles away from the territory in which the railroads operate.

> The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment. On page 6, line 12, after the word "trustees," to insert the words "recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. KING. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 6, line 12, after the word "trustees," the Senator from New Mexico proposes to insert the words "recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission," so that it will read:

Upon approving the petition as properly filed, the judge (1) may temporarily appoint a trustee or Interstate Commerce Commission. trustee or trustees recommended by the

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I got the impression from what the Senator from New Mexico said a little while ago when he mentioned this subject that he preferred the provision for a panel as it was written in one of the committee prints.

Mr. BRATTON. I prefer the House text. If that can not be had, then I would prefer the panel suggestion to the text now contained in the amendment. My first choice is the House text, which this amendment carries forward.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understand the amendment just stated by the Senator, there is no obligation upon the court to appoint or name as trustee or trustees a person or persons designated by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is merely discretionary. Suppose the Interstate Commerce Commission declined to appoint a trustee. Could the court then name one? In the contingency of the failure of the Interstate Commerce Commission to make a recommendation, or if the Interstate Commerce Commission made a recommendation and the court declined to follow the recommendation, then what would happen?

Mr. BRATTON. Then, of course, it would be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to make another suggestion. I think we must assume that the Interstate Commerce Commission would do its duty and would make a suggestion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would it not be rather cumbersome to undertake to secure a majority of the votes of the Interstate Commerce Commission in making these appointments? I think there are 12 members of the commission, and the question of a quorum might arise, or a question as to the validity of an appointment might even arise. Why would it not be better to leave it in the hands of the judge?

Mr. BRATTON. Because the Interstate Commerce Commission is the tribunal of experts who devote themselves to railroad matters, and if this measure is enacted into law, I have doubt that they will make up for themselves for future use a panel from which they could readily submit names to the judge.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. BRATTON. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. What about compensation for these employees? Would they serve at the compensation now fixed by law for the men on the panel suggested by the Senator?

Mr. BRATTON. The bill provides for the compensation of trustees

Mr. McKELLAR. I had not gone into that feature. Does shall be agreed upon by the commission before it is allowed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, would the Senator from New Mexico be willing to provide for a panel and then in conference see whether or not it is more desirable to accept that than the House plan?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; I am willing to do that.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am willing to accept the amendment then.

Mr. BRATTON. I withdraw the amendment just offered and in lieu thereof I offer the following: On page 6, line 12, after the word "appoint," I move to insert the words "from a panel of standing trustees qualified for such service to be selected and designated in advance by the commission."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Delaware to accept the amendment?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have a few other amendments. If the Senator from New Mexico has concluded I shall offer them. Some of them are textual in character and I think the Senator from Delaware will be willing to accept them. They may not be necessary. I would invite the Senator's attention to page 2, line 13, after the word "it." I suggest to the Senator that there be inserted at that point the words "if not so satisfied," so as to read "or dismissing it if not so satisfied." The Senator will find that on page 4, line 12, those words do appear and I thought perhaps they should be inserted also at this point.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On the same page, page 2, line 16, after the word "section," I move to insert "and for the purposes thereof." The object of the amendment, I will say to the Senator from Delaware and to other Senators, is to provide that the exclusive jurisdiction which the court is to exercise over the property of the debtor shall be confined purely to the purposes of this section, and it will prevent the raising of any question as to whether the Interstate Commerce Commission have jurisdiction over other matters which they now have under existing law in a case where a railroad corporation is operating through a receiver or trustee.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the Senator state his proposed amendment again?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 2, line 16, after the word "section," insert "and for the purposes thereof," so as to

If the petition is so approved, the court in which such order approving the petition is entered shall, during the pendency of the proceedings under this section, and for the purposes thereof, exclusive jurisdiction of the debtor and its property wherever

Mr. HASTINGS. I can see no objection to the amendment. I am willing to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 3, line 18, I ask the Senator whether the word "the" should not be stricken out and the word "a" be inserted, so as to read "file with a court" instead of "file with the court."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I rather believe the language employed in the bill is preferable to the substitution of the indefinite article. The object manifestly

Mr. BRATTON. It provides that their compensation is to require the filing with the particular court in which the railroad corporation would have the right to file its petition.

Mr. HASTINGS. There is but one court.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On the other hand, it occurred to me that they might have their right to file a petition in more than one court.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Not since the Senator's amendment has been agreed to limiting the filing of the petition to the jurisdiction within which the principal operating office is located.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The only point I had in mind is that the language is "executive or operating office," and they are not always in the same place. But it is not important. I shall not press the amendment.

Mr. President, on page 6, line 17, after the word "control," I propose to insert the words "and the jurisdiction of the commission," so that it would read:

Upon approving the petition as properly filed the judge (1) may Upon approving the petition as properly filed the judge (1) may temporarily appoint a trustee or trustees of the debtor's estate, who shall have all the title and, subject to the control of the judge and consistently with the provisions of this section, shall exercise all the powers of a trustee appointed pursuant to section 44 or any other section of this act, and, subject to the judge's control and the jurisdiction of the commission, shall have the power to operate the business of the railroad corporation.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I think the Senator's amendment would involve a very grave question. There is a situation which we have consistently tried to avoid in preparing the amendment; that is, that any conflict or possible conflict which might arise between the two authorities, one the judge and the other the commission, should be avoided. I think we would undoubtedly be in great difficulty if we should give the judge control and the Interstate Commerce Commission control. Certainly, it ought to be in one or the other and not in both.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It occurs to me the purpose of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin is to reserve to the commission the jurisdiction it now has.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; under the interstate commerce

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; under the interstate commerce act with respect to rates and regulations of that character.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am sorry I did not understand the Senator's purpose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the language is unfortunate, I would be glad to have the benefit of the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest that it read, "and the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission as provided by the interstate commerce act as amended."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I accept the modification suggested by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HASTINGS. Now, will the Senator from Wisconsin be good enough to state the amendment as modified?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It would then read:

And subject to the judge's control and the jurisdiction of the commission as provided in the interstate commerce act as amended, shall have the power to conduct the business of the railroad corporation.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is perfectly satisfactory to me. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 8, line 16, a typographical error occurs to which I wish to invite the attention of the Senator from Delaware. The letter in parentheses instead of "(g)" should be "(f)", so as to read: "as elsewhere provided in subdivision (f)." If the Senator will turn to subsection (f) on page 14, line 10, he will see that the paragraph referred to is not the paragraph which should be

Mr. HASTINGS. The subdivision (g) referred to is on page 14.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield just at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. Permit me to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the fact that there are two subdivisions which are denominated "(g)". One appears on page 14, line 20, and the other appears on page 17, line 1. Ought not that letter to be "(h)"?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct, but let us get the other one straightened out first.

Mr. BRATTON. I thought perhaps that led to the confusion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No. I was going to draw attention to the one to which the Senator from New Mexico has referred when I had disposed of the other one.

If the Senator from Delaware will note, on page 8, line 14-

(8) May, within such maximum limits as are fixed by the commission, as elsewhere provided in subdivision (g) of this section.

Now, if the Senator will turn to page 13 he will see that in line 15 that section begins with the letter "(f)," and if he will turn over to page 14, where that is continued as "(f)," he will find these words in line 10:

The commission shall also, after hearing, if necessary, fix the maximum compensation which may be allowed—

And so forth. So it seems perfectly obvious that the language on page 8 refers to section "(f)" and not to section "(g)," because it says:

May, within such maximum limits as are fixed by the commission, as elsewhere provided in subdivision.

And the text of the amendment now is "(g)," but I am convinced it should be "(f)."

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator is correct. It ought to be "(f)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Delaware for his interpretation of the language to be found on page 8, beginning in line 14, as follows:

May, within such maximum limits as are fixed by the commission, as elsewhere provided in subdivision (f) of this section, allow a reasonable compensation for the services rendered and reimbursement for the actual and necessary expenses incurred in connection with the proceeding and plan by officers, parties in interest, reorganization managers, and committees, or other rep-resentatives of creditors or stockholders, and by their attorneys or agents-

Now may I ask the Senator do the words "and by their attorneys or agents" refer to all the different groups and parties mentioned in the preceding language or does it refer only to "committees or other representatives of creditors or stockholders"?

The reason why I draw the Senator's attention to this language is that in the bill as it passed the House and in the committee print No. 2 which the Senator introduced in the Senate it read:

And the attorneys or agents of any of the foregoing.

Now that language has been changed in this new amend-the words "attorneys or agents" insert "of any of the foregoing."

Mr. HASTINGS. I remember distinctly, I may say in reply to the Senator, of there being some criticism of either the House bill or some one of the drafts I had made; but I can not remember exactly what it was.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am sure the Senator wants to grant reasonable fees to be fixed for the services of attorneys or agents who represent any of the groups that are mentioned.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does not that language do just that?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Perhaps it does; but I wanted to make certain of it, because in making a comparison of the Senator's bill, committee print No. 2, and this amendment I saw the language had been changed; and knowing that the Interstate Commerce Commission, through its legislative committee, had suggested the language that was in the Senator's committee print No. 2, I wondered if the Senator would have any objection to reincorporating it in this amendment?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The punctuation there would seem to make the words "attorneys or agents" apply as the Senator has indicated, but his suggestion to insert the words "of any of the foregoing" would remove all possibility of doubt.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is what I felt. I offer the amendment, Mr. President, to strike out the words "by their" and to insert the word "the," and after "agents" to insert the words "of any of the foregoing."

Mr. HASTINGS. That is satisfactory to me, Mr President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BRATTON. I offer the following amendment: On page 18, line 3, to strike out all after the semicolon and down to and including line 11:

And they shall be, and they are hereby, relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws, as designated in section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, and of all other restraints, prohibitions, or re-requirements by law, State or Federal, in so far as may be necessary to enable them to do anything authorized or required by the plan or by any order made under and pursuant to the provisions of this section. of this section.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

PROPOSED OCEAN MAIL CONTRACT WITH INTERNATIONAL MERCAN-TILE MARINE CO.

Mr. BLACK. I send to the desk a resolution and ask that it may be read. It is very important that it be acted on immediately, if it can be done. I can not believe there will be any objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 375), as ment to read—

And by their attorneys or agents.

It seems to me that the language in the Senator's original bill, committee print No. 2, and the bill as it passed the other House was more explicit and included all of the various parties in interest mentioned in the proceeding language. Unless the Senator has some very good reason for not doing so, I would suggest to him that he strike out the words "by their" and insert the word "the," and after

Whereas it is understood this new line is to be operated by the International Mercantile Marine Co. (Inc.), which already receives large subsidies from the Government while at the same time operating foreign-flag lines competing with American lines; and

Whereas it appears that there has not been and will not be sufficient time to fully investigate the economic necessity of such line or the propriety of granting a mail contract on March 1 next, and as the matter of ocean mail contracts is to be generally investigated by a committee of the Senate; and
Whereas the Merchant Fleet Corporation reported on February

6, 1933, that this steamship service is not justified: Now, therefore,

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to postpone the awarding of the said mail contract until the matter can be more fully investigated and the soundness of the proposition more completely determined from the standpoint of the Government's interest and all the facts and circumstances involved.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, this is a matter of vital importance. There is at present being considered the signing of a contract, day after to-morrow, for a subsidy of $10,000,-000. I have on my desk evidence to the effect that the statement has been made in the hearings that it is necessary to get it through while the present administration is in power or it can not go through.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. Is this resolution offered and unanimous consent asked for its present consideration?

Mr. BLACK. I expect to ask for its present consideration, but I have not done so as yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama submitted the resolution which was read.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to see the resolution. I just came into the Chamber and heard only a part of it. I ask to have it go over. I object to its consideration now.

Mr. BLACK. I have not made a request as yet for its consideration, and I have not yet yielded the floor for the purpose of having any objection made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton] has the floor.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from New Mexico yielded to me. Mr. President, I can not believe that there is a Senator in this Chamber who will object to this resolution when the facts are presented.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Idaho. Mr. BORAH. I just came into the Chamber while the resolution was being read. Will the Senator state briefly the object of the resolution?

Mr. BLACK. The resolution calls attention to certain facts which I can establish by information on my desk. It requests the Postmaster General not to take action with reference to signing a contract for a $10,000,000 subsidy to the International Mercantile Marine Co. for a steamship service between Philadelphia-Baltimore, and Liverpool-Manchester.

I should like to give the Senate the facts. I have here before me the hearings before the United States Shipping Board, and I also have a copy of a report made by the Merchant Fleet Corporation. I would not bring this matter up now were it not for the fact that I have called up the Postmaster General's office, and have been informed that it is their intention to go ahead and sign this contract when the bids come in day after to-morrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is a rather remarkable circumstance that contracts of this character are to be made on the 1st day of March, when there is to be a change in the control of the department on the 4th of March. May I ask the Senator from Alabama whether he has any intimation from the Post Office Department if the Senate makes the request, that it will be complied with?

Mr. BLACK. I have no information to that effect, but I will say to the Senator that if the Senate shall make the request, it will certainly give notice to any contractor who may sign the contract that there is a question as to its authenticity and as to the right of the Postmaster General to execute it. Now I wish to call attention-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I wish to say that I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of the Senator from Alabama. I do not wish any misunderstanding about that.

Mr. BLACK. I understand the Senator's position.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not say that I am opposed to it, but I did not hear the entire resolution read: it is a very important matter, and I do not know how far it might reach.

Mr. BLACK. It is extremely important.

Mr. FLETCHER. Therefore, I want to look at it so that I may know how to vote on it.

Mr. BLACK. I am not asking the Senator to vote now. I should like to explain the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to ask the Senator a question. The contract he refers to, and the only contract he refers to, is to be made with the International Mercantile Marine?

Mr. BLACK. It is to be made with a company called the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co., which, according to my information, is a part of the International Mercantile Marine, on the board of directors of which appear J. P. Morgan and others.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the only contract to which the Senator refers?

Mr. BLACK. That is the only one now.

Mr. FLETCHER. How many ships does it involve?

Mr. BLACK. I will give the Senator the facts in just a

Mr. President, I would not bring this up were it not for the very significant fact, stated by the Senator from Arkansas, that here is a proposal to sign a contract on the 1st day of March, and if I did not have in my possession the hearings showing that it is the deliberate purpose to attempt to execute the contract during the life of the outgoing administration

Mr. President, I have before me the hearing before the United States Shipping Board in re Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co., Washington, D. C., Friday, February 3, 1933. I will read first from page 43 of those hearings:

Commissioner Cone. We have got very little time left under this, too. You have put the deadline on us of this administration. is some job you have given us.

Mr. HORAN

That is the attorney for the company-

The Postmaster General has got to advertise this week-

And it was done and that is why I had the courage to call you on the telephone. If it was not for the importance of it I would not have done it.

Now let us see what was the next statement made by Mr. Keating, one of the other attorneys for the company seeking this $10,000,000 of Government money at the end of this administration (p. 46):

We say this is a perfectly sound project, and the only difficulty with it that I can see is that we are awfully pressed for time-

This was February 3, 1933. Why should they be pressed for time over a $10,000,000 subsidy?-

If it is not done this week, the possibility is that it may never

Why was that? That was because the attorney for the company that wants this subsidy knew that they had to advertise it that week. If they did not, there would be no chance to have action by the present Postmaster General. He says:

Sometimes when you really recognize that there is a real project it is surprising how fast people can work.

And it is. It is a little surprising how fast they worked in connection with this.

Let me read another paragraph from the hearings. I read from Mr. Horan again.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what hearings these are? I did not catch that.

Mr. BLACK. This was a hearing before the United States | before 12 o'clock day after to-morrow this contract will Shipping Board with reference to the application of the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. for a subsidy.

Mr. FLETCHER. What date was it?

Mr. BLACK. February 3, 1933. I read from page 49:

We must see daylight in the possibilities of the line, and we believe that with the plan as we have laid it out, with the capital we have, the backing we have, if we are given what we are asking for we will make a success of this line.

Now, listen to this:

If we don't, we are done. We don't really hope much from the next administration.

Mr. Horan says:

Well, the Postmaster General says he must know this week, so he can advertise it, or it will be too late.

Too late for what? Is the Government going to cease functioning? Too late to get the $10,000,000 subsidy from the present administration.

Let me read again. I am reading from Commissioner Cone (p. 56):

Now, to speed up and accomplish all this before this particular administration goes out of office is giving us a first-class job, and you want to take that away from here in the back of your heads.

Now let me call attention to the closing statement with reference to the necessity for action. I read again a statement from the chairman of the Shipping Board, made at the same hearing (p. 57):

The Charman. Mr. Huntley must realize that we are not alone in this proposition. We have got to get up a proposition that will be acceptable to the Comptroller General or he will tell us to carry out the contract we have already got.

As a matter of fact, I might interject here that they already have contracts for these lines, and the Fleet Corporation has reported that this line is not justified by the conditions.

Continuing:

We have got to get something that will appease him-

That is, the Comptroller Generalconvince him that we are doing this in the interest of the Government. We can't just throw something over at him, because he will simply say, "Nothing doing, boys."

Mr. Huntley. I understand that is unfortunately true.

The CHAIRMAN. We have got to handle this thing very carefully.

Let us see how carefully it has been handled. First, let me read the statement of the president of the Merchant Fleet Corporation with reference to this, on February 6, which was after the hearing occurred to which I have called attention:

From this tabulation-

Says the Fleet Corporation-

it will be noted that the establishment of a direct Philadelphia-Liverpool-Manchester service is not justified.

But in spite of that fact they proceeded to advertise for bids; and, according to my information, they advertised so that it was impossible for any company on earth except one to get the contract. That one is a part of the International Mercantile Marine.

In order that you may know something about who that is, let me give you the names of the directors:

Vincent Astor, Harry Bronner, J. M. Franklin, P. A. S. Franklin, W. Hanes, Basil Harris, J. P. Morgan, J. W. Platten, Kermit Roosevelt, C. H. Sabin-

Who, by the way, according to my information, is the president of the Guaranty Trust Co., Mr. Morgan's bank-Charles Steele, C. A. Stone, Donald Symington, Elisha Walker.

And there appears here a letter from Mr. Atterbury requesting quick action.

So we have this situation, and that is the reason why I have brought up the matter this afternoon. If it goes over for one day, it goes until to-morrow. If the resolution were to be offered to-morrow and have to go over until the next day, the bids would be opened at 12 o'clock, and I desire to state frankly that in my judgment, from the way this matter has proceeded, if something is not done morrow at 12 o'clock. Therefore, it will be necessary to be signed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that a few days ago. when we were discussing the $19,000,000 subsidy appropriation, and the attention of the Senate was brought to the fact that the Postmaster General contemplated executing a number of contracts for so-called extensions, a resolution was offered and an amendment to the bill requesting him to desist from letting those extension contracts; but he proceeded immediately and let those extension contracts, and they are now in existence, and if they are valid, of course, the Government will have to pay the penalty.

Mr. BLACK. It is my judgment that if a contract should be made with these people on this basis, the probability is that the courts would strike it down. There is too much evidence of haste. Why should the statement be made repeatedly that something must be done during this administration, or it can not be done? Why the haste in advertising and sending out notices, according to information given to me, by telegram instead of by letter, in order that the contract might be properly advertised? What is the reason for this rush?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection is that when the Postmaster General was before the Committee on Appropriations he stated that no more of these contracts would be let before the new administration takes office. It comes to me as a very great surprise that this enormous contract. providing for a subsidy of $1,000,000 a year for 10 years, is brought in here at the last moment; and, under the circumstances, I do not see how in the name of Heaven any Senator can object to the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Alabama. It ought to be done, and it ought to be done at once.

Here is a line from Philadelphia to Liverpool. We have all the mail facilities that are necessary. This very line. or its parent line, the International Mercantile Marine, already has so-called contracts with the Government. I doubt if they are valid contracts; but I do not see how any Senator can object to the passage of this resolution, and its passage immediately.

Mr. BLACK. Of course, if the letting of a contract is postponed, that does not destroy the chance of these people to present their petition properly. If they have the right basis for their request, it will be granted; but here is a situation where they state in the hearing that it is necessary for them to get action before this administration ends, before these people go out of office.

So, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution offered by him. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Yes, Mr. President. A number of Senators are absent from the Chamber, and I have been requested by one or two who desire to look into the matter that they be afforded that opportunity. At the present time, therefore, I shall object.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon if it is his intention to have the Senate adjourn this afternoon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that depends entirely upon the progress made with the unfinished business. Should we complete its consideration I shall move to adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BLACK. I ask the Senator by reason of the fact that bids for this contract are to be opened day after toattempt to get action to-morrow. I understand that the Senator from Oregon has not investigated the matter dealt with by the resolution and it may be possible that he will not object to it to-morrow.

Mr. McNARY. I make no promises in that line. The proposition is an important one; and, in common with others, I desire to read the resolution and study it. Tomorrow the Senator will have his opportunity. He can ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution, of course, at any time; or, if there is an adjournment, we will have routine morning business, and the resolution will come up automatically if it goes to the desk to-night.

Mr. BLACK. That is the reason why I asked the Senator if he contemplated an adjournment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest to the able Senator from Alabama that in the interest of securing the objective he has in mind he have a complaint all ready, prepared and signed, to obtain an injunction to restrain the execution of any contract that may be entered into.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 2654) to allow credit in connection with homestead entries to widows of persons who served in certain Indian wars.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 14489. An act relating to the construction of a Federal building at Mangum, Okla.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, it will be observed that the language which my amendment proposes to strike from the bill would repeal the antitrust laws, so far as the reorganization process authorized in the bill is concerned. The language is as follows:

And they shall be, and they are hereby, relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws, as designated in section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, and of all other restraints, prohibitions, or requirements by law, State or Federal, in so far as may be necessary to enable them to do anything authorized or required by the plan or by any order made under and pursuant to the provisions of this section.

Mr. President, this is not confined to ordinary consolidation proceedings. This is a comprehensive system of reorganization, which might involve several lines. It might involve a number of separate entities; it might involve consolidations, mergers, extensions, parallel lines, and other conceivable situations with respect to railroads.

It is proposed here completely to suspend and repeal the antitrust laws in so far as a proceeding under this act is concerned, thus permitting the court to proceed with a free hand, authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to perform its functions with a free hand, so far as the antitrust laws are concerned.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that there is much danger in the proposal. I may be wrong, but I believe this measure would operate, whether intended so or not, to bring about a gigantic monopolistic control of the railroads of this country. The repeal of the antitrust laws, their complete suspension, their annihilation, so far as the reorganization process is concerned, would contribute to that end, would further that object, would support that attainment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the Senator's idea as to the effect upon State regulatory bodies and State laws which seek to control the railroads? Of course, if the courts took jurisdiction over all of the property, the courts could not collect judgments against railways during the pendency of a proceeding, except in the method provided in receiverships. I am not familiar with the amendment. I have been absent for several days on account of illness.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator from New Mexico has shown me the amendment he proposes, and I have carefully considered it. I have just heard his statement relative to his fear with respect to the possibility of the operation of this law, namely, that it might result in the creation of a great monopoly among the railroads.

That is so far from any object that we have, and I am so anxious, as is the Senator from New Mexico, to avoid there being a possibility of doing that under the bill, that I am very much inclined to accept his proposed amendment. I want to say that this language was written in the amendment following the language in the existing interstate commerce law relative to consolidation of railroads, and it was approved with some suggestions by the Interstate Commerce Commission. But it is not essential that it be written into law in order to carry out its main purpose. For that reason I am very glad to accept the Senator's amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. Then I shall desist from further discussion of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Patterson in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from New Mexico proposes, on page 18 of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, in line 3, to strike out the following:

And they shall be, and they are hereby, relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws, as designated in section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, and of all other restraints, prohibitions, or requirements by law, State or Federal, in so far as may be necessary to enable them to do anything authorized or required by the plan or by any order made under and pursuant to the provisions of this section. In the event that the judge should disapprove the plan, he shall file an opinion stating his reasons therefor.

enable them to do anything authorized or required by the plan or by any order made under and pursuant to the provisions of this section. In the event that the judge should disapprove the plan, he shall file an opinion stating his reasons therefor.

(i) The provisions of sections 721, 722, 723, 724, and 725 of the revenue act of 1932 shall not apply to the issuance, transfers, or exchange of securities or filing of conveyances to make effective any plan of reorganization confirmed under the provisions of this section

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. This is an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 21, after line 10, add the following:

No judge or trustee acting under this act shall change the wages or working conditions of railroad employees, except in the manner prescribed in the railroad labor act, or as set forth in the memorandum of agreement entered into in Chicago, III., on January 31, 1932, between the executives of 21 standard labor organizations and the Committee of Nine authorized to represent class 1 railroads.

No judge or trustee acting under this act shall deny or in any way question the right of employees on the property under his jurisdiction to join the labor organization of their choice, and it shall be unlawful for any judge or trustee to interfere in any way with the organization of employees, or to use the funds of the railroad under his jurisdiction, in maintaining so-called company unions, or to influence or coerce employees in an effort to induce them to join or remain members of such company unions.

No judge or trustee acting under this act shall require any person seeking employment on the property under his jurisdiction to sign the so-called yellow-dog contract, or any agreement promising to join or to refuse to join a labor organization; and if such yellow-dog contract has been enforced on the property prior to the property coming under the jurisdiction of said judge or trustee, then the said judge or trustee, as soon as the matter is called to his attention, shall notify the employees by an appropriate order that said yellow-dog contract has been discarded, and is no longer binding on them in any way.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to offer a substitute for the Senator's amendment to my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the proposed substitute of the Senator from Delaware.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from Delaware proposes to insert the following:

All existing laws relating to railroads or railways engaged in interstate commerce shall be applicable to any trustee appointed and operating a railroad or railway pursuant to this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute of the Senator from Delaware for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the amendment which I offered there is absolutely nothing that conflicts in any way with the law which we enacted at the last session of Congress known as the anti-injunction law. The substitute offered by the Senator from Delaware would not, in my judgment, meet all the contingencies that might arise. For instance, I have in my possession now a yellow-dog contract which one of the leading railroads of the United States, so I am informed—of course, I have no personal knowledge of it—requires at the present time must be signed by anyone seeking employment on that railroad, one that we thought we had outlawed and which we did outlaw in all injunction proceedings.

I want to call attention to the fact that a railroad going into the hands of a receiver will be in the control of the court through the receiver and that existing laws do not necessarily apply to them. They are outside of the law as I understand it. Even if there were, as there is, a railroad labor act on the statute books, if would not necessarily have any application to a railroad in the hands of a receiver. The Senator's substitute might reach some of that condition.

But something over a year ago the railroads of the United States and the representatives of the railway labor unions had an extended meeting in the city of Chicago lasting, as I remember it, a week or 10 days, from which there resulted an agreement which was referred to in the amendment I have offered, by which the railroad men agreed to a reduction in pay of 10 per cent and certain other provisions in regard to the discharge of men, and so forth. That is a matter of record, a matter under which the railroads have been operating and are operating right now.

My amendment would provide that any agreement made at that time should be carried into effect and should be respected by a receiver operating a railroad thrown into the hands of a receiver.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I can understand that where a railroad is thrown into the hands of a receiver and it operates through subsidiary organizations a number of other roads, a consolidation might be effected by order of the judge or the commission, and that would necessitate perhaps dismissing a large number of men on one road and employing additional men on another road. Would the Senator's amendment interfere with legitimate orders that might be issued by the court for the purpose of effecting economies and proper consolidation of the systems?

Mr. NORRIS. No; it would not, but if a dispute should arise about wages or about working conditions, it would be the duty of the judge having the case in his court, where the receiver reported to him and was subject to his orders, to settle that dispute or have it settled in accordance with the railway labor act or in accordance with the agreement under which the railroads are operating now and have been operating for nearly a year.

Another thing, Mr. President, not touched by the substitute of the Senator from Delaware is that the amendment which I have offered gives to the railroad men the right to organize and to belong to organizations of their own choosing. It is intended to prevent the operation in these cases of the so-called company union. I went all over that matter in the discussion of the anti-injunction bill in the last session of Congress. This is simply applying those principles to railroads in the hands of receivers.

In addition to that it is made clear that any person seeking employment shall not be required, before he can get the employment, to sign a yellow-dog contract. I do not want to go over that question again, because I discussed it at length in connection with the anti-injunction measure which we passed last year and which would have no application, of course, to a railroad in the hands of a receiver. But I do want to call the attention of the Senate to what that yellow-dog contract means. It has more force now than it has ever had in the history of the United States, in my opinion.

The men now holding jobs regard them as something sacred in these depressing times. When the receiver of a railroad would say, "Sign on the dotted line," everyone would sign. He would feel that it was a death warrant. It would in effect be taking away from him his liberty, making it impossible for him to organize with his fellows or to go with any other man on the railroad to ask for redress. No matter how great the grievance might be he could not do that. In other words, it would be made possible for the receiver to fix the terms, the wages, the hours of labor, the conditions of labor, and everything else, and the employee could only protest alone. He would not dare to join and could not join with any of his fellows if he signed that kind of contract.

The amendment provides also that in the case of a railroad whose men have signed such a contract and it is in existence, it shall be nullified and the court or the receiver shall by proper order notify the men that the yellow-dog contract is null and inoperative.

It permits rather than compels men to join a so-called company union, to join whatever union they want to that they shall be free men, and that they shall not have that freedom taken away from them by any action of the receiver or by any order of the court. That is not completely covered by the substitute offered by the Senator from Delaware; and it seems to me, since there is not anything new in the amendment that I have offered, as it only applies to receivers the laws that now apply to corporations employing labor, that there ought to be no question about its adoption and the rejection of the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, my attention was called a few days ago by some persons representing the labor organizations to the fact that in railroad receiverships the Board of Meditation can not have any control over the employees and the disputes of employees with the receiver of a railroad corporation. I had intended during the consideration of this amendment to frame some amendment that would take care of that situation. The Senator from Nebraska told me that he had in mind making some similar suggestion.

The fear I have, and the only objection I have to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, is that I do not know, from a hasty examination of it, whether it launches out into some new field or whether it does not.

What I sought to do by the amendment in the nature of a substitute was to make this thing certain, and if I have not done so by the substitute I shall be glad to have any suggestion made that would do it. I think it is proper and important that under this proposed act a trustee operating a railroad should be in exactly the same position with respect to employees so far as Federal laws are concerned as the railroad itself would be, and I thought by this short substitute to make all the laws pertaining to railroads and railways engaged in interstate commerce—whether they be laws pertaining to labor or other laws—applicable to this situation. My understanding is that that is all the Senator from Nebraska desires to do?

Mr. NORRIS. That is all, I will say to the Senator; I have not incorporated anything new in the amendment. If there is something new in it, I am not aware of the fact; but, for instance, let me call the Senator's attention now to the fact that his substitute would not make it unlawful for a receiver to compel anyone applying for work to sign a yellow-dog contract.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I inquire, Did not the anti-injunction act which we passed last year prohibit that sort of contract being made?

Mr. NORRIS. No. The Senator will remember that the Judiciary Committee were in much difficulty to avoid a constitutional objection that might be serious to that bill. What we did in the bill was to take jurisdiction away from the court to enforce such a contract. We outlawed it; but the real thing which we did was to take away from any court jurisdiction to enforce any contract of that kind.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does not the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Nebraska prohibit the receiver from making such a contract?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir; it does.

Mr. HASTINGS. And in that sense it is different from existing law? Is not that correct?

Mr. NORRIS. Probably it is.

Mr. HASTINGS. I can not conceive of a receiver making such a contract.

Mr. NORRIS. It not only prohibits, I will say to the Senator, the receiver from requiring anybody to sign that kind of contract, but if a contract of that kind shall have been signed it orders the receiver to tell the men who do so that it is of no force.

This is a little different, if the Senator will permit me, from passing a new law on the subject. We are providing here for a means of handling a railroad by a receiver. That receiver is the instrumentality, we might say, of the Government of the United States; he is the servant, at least, of the court; and the court is the instrumentality, perhaps, of the Government of the United States. We simply say that while the laws do not apply when the railroad is in the hands of a receiver, it being under the jurisdiction of the court, yet we say to the court, "You shall not make any rule like this; you shall not make any rule like that or make any requirement of this kind." That is all we do.

Mr. HASTINGS. As I see it, if the Senator should insist upon his amendment, or that particular portion of it, and it should be adopted, it would certainly take us into an entirely new field of legislation which was not originally intended by this bill. I hope the Senator will agree to accept my substitute for his amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I could not do that. I hope the Senator will consent to withdraw his substitute and accept my amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. I can not do that, because I think the amendment takes us into an entirely different and new field, involving the discussion at least of a constitutional question and many other things. I should like my substitute to be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Delaware for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. [Putting the question.] The "noes" have it, and the amendment to the amendment is rejected. The question recurs upon the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I call for a division.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is too late to ask for a division. The result has been announced by the Chair.

Mr. HASTINGS. What was the announcement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, this is a very important amendment. Do I understand the Chair holds that I did not ask for a division soon enough?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator did not ask for a division until after the Chair had announced the decision and, as the Chair understands it, was then too late to ask for a division.

Mr. HASTINGS. Well, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby my amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska was rejected may be reconsidered and that we may at least have a division upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent preferred by the Senator from Delaware? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris].

Mr. HASTINGS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me say in the first place that I am not to blame for this delay. Neither are any of us who are in favor of this amendment to blame for this delay. We were willing, without a roll call, to take the vote of the Senate.

After the vote was taken on the substitute offered by the i3enator from Delaware, the Chair declared that the vote was lost and the substitute rejected. After that was done the Senator from Delaware asked for a division. The Chair held that he had asked for a division too late; that the matter had already been decided. I do not need to argue that to the Senate. They realize that.

I had no desire, however, to take any technical advantage of the Senator from Delaware; and he then asked unanimous consent that he might have a vote by a division. I did not object. Nobody else objected, and when he had the opportunity then to take the vote by a rising vote, instead of doing it and going on with the business of the Senate he suggested the absence of a quorum, and that is the reason why the rest of you are here. That having been done, all this effort that I supposed was made in good faith to try to hurry things along has been overthrown by the fact that after we had first agreed that he should have the vote by a rising vote of the Senate, he declined that and suggested the absence of a quorum.

Now, Mr. President, I propose to debate this matter at more length; and I am going to ask for a roll call, not only on the substitute but perhaps on the main amendment as well.

Mr. President, there is not anything new in the amendment I have offered. We argued here for a week or more on the sol-called yellow-dog contract. We took away from the United States courts the jurisdiction to enforce them. That bill passed the Senate. I think, with only four votes against it after the Committee on the Judiciary had had it under consideration for more than three years, with such delays taking place in the committee as are taking place now in the Senate by the action of the Senator from Delaware in first asking for unanimous consent, making his objection too late, and then, when nobody objected to unanimous consent, and he had his own way about it, he was not satisfied, and insisted on making the point of no quorum.

All that this amendment seeks to do, Mr. President, is to put the real principles that were involved in the so-called anti-injunction bill in force on a railroad that has gone into the hands of a receiver; and the point is made by the Senator from Delaware that this amendment is unconstitutional.

Mr. President, I take it that when a railroad goes into the hands of a receiver and is operated by the court, which is an instrumentality of the Government, that court could employ or not employ—and we as being above the court, could direct the court to employ or not to employ—any kind of people that we desire to include in or exclude from the instruction. It would not be unconstitutional for us to say to the judge, "In operating this railroad you will issue an order that none except able-bodied men shall be employed; that before anybody is employed he shall pass a physical examination; that his eyes shall be examined; that an educational test shall be required." The question of the Constitution does not enter into it. We are simply instructing the receiver who has charge of a railroad as to some of the things that he must do and some of the things that he must not permit to be done.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator why the substitute does not ban the so-called yellow-dog contract, since we passed a law outlawing that contract?

Mr. NORRIS. The main way in which we outlawed it, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas, was to take away from the Federal courts jurisdiction to enforce it. That was the real thing that happened in the so-called anti-injunction bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator permit another question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The substitute provides that-

All existing laws relating to railroads or railways engaged in interstate commerce shall be applicable to any trustee appointed and operating a railroad or railway pursuant to this section.

I do not see that there is any material difference between the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska and that of the Senator from Delaware except that the latter is more general, and makes all laws that are now in force applicable to the operation of a railroad under a trustee. I may be wrong about it.

Mr. NORRIS. In my opinion, Mr. President, unless we put something in here dealing with the matter, the laws that we have on the statute books would not necessarily apply. I do not believe that the anti-injunction law now would apply in the case of hiring a man, for instance.

Suppose I come along to a railroad that is in the hands of a receiver, and the receiver says, "Here is a contract that you must sign." When I look at that contract, I find that it takes away all my liberty; it deprives me from joining a union of my own choice; or, if I am a member of a union, it compels me to get out of that union. I do not think there is anything in the substitute offered by the Senator from Delaware that would prohibit that from being done if it were enacted into law.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. REED. If we were to add, at the end of the substitute, the words "including the act of" such and such a date, and then giving its title, would not that make it conclusive?

Mr. NORRIS. No; in my judgment it would not.

The Senator must remember that this act that we passed is not an act that would have application unless an effort were made to enforce this kind of contract. The jurisdiction would be taken away from the court to enforce such a contract; but there is not anything to prevent the receiver from requiring an applicant for a job on a railroad to sign that very contract.

Mr. President, Senators talk about this anti-injunction law being a law. It does not have any application to this kind of case. I have in my possession right now a real yellow-dog contract that I am told by those who brought it to me and gave it to me is required to be signed by all applicants for employment on one of the largest railroads in the United States at the present time. I do not think the substitute of the Senator from Delaware would have any application to it. I am satisfied, and I think anybody else who will read it will be satisfied, that the amendment which I have offered does apply to it, and would prohibit such a thing.

Here is the contract:

The undersigned applicant for employment by the Great Northern Railway Co. as --, or at present employed-

There is a blank to put in how he is employed-in consideration of the granting or the continuance of such employment, hereby states and represents to the Great Northern Railway Co. that he is not a member or affiliated with the Inter-national Association of Mechanics, the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America, the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, the Amal-International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, the Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers' International Alliance, the International Brotherhood of Electric Workers, or other brotherhood of railway carriers of America, and agrees that during the entire period of such employment he will not apply for membership in or become a member of or affiliate with or lend any support, financial or otherwise, to any of said organizations. Upon the failure of the undersigned to comply with the foregoing agreement in every respect it is agreed that this may be treated by the Great Northern Railway Co. as a resignation from its employment, and that such employment shall immediately cease.

That is the kind of yellow-dog contract that applicants for employment in the coal mines, where the difficulty arose more often than at any other place, were required to sign.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If we were to modify the language of the substitute so as to provide:

All existing law, including the anti-injunction act-

Inserting the date of it-relating to railroads-

And so forth.

If those words were inserted, would not that cover the object and include all that is in the Senator's amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the only difference is that the express term yellow-dog contract is not used. Several Senators have spoken to me and said that they do not like the amendment because I have put in it the words "yellowdog contract."

I have defined the yellow-dog contract in the amendment. I have no objection to taking out those words; but why is everybody afraid of this amendment? Why are we afraid to direct the receiver of any railroad in the hands of a receiver to comply with the instructions that are in the amendment I have offered? What is the danger in it? What is the evil about it? If we do not want the yellowdog contract enforced, for God's sake, why have we not the courage to say so? Why is this substitute so holy, and why are we importuned and caused to believe, if possible, that it means the same thing? If it does, why offer it? Why put it in the way? Why is it here? If we have something that expresses our ideas, why do we try to put it in more general language and probably leave a loophole that will make it illegal?

Mr. President, if it will ease the consciences of Senators, I am perfectly willing to strike out that obnoxious term and to let the definition I have in the amendment stand. "Yellow-dog contract" is a well-understood term. You will find it in the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States, I think. You will find it in the briefs of the lawyers in dozens of cases. You will find it a thousand times in the hearings before the Judiciary Committee. Everybody knows what it means. It is a contract that takes away human liberty. It is a contract that compels men to sign away their human rights in order to support their families. This is a time when it would be peculiarly effective, when men would sign almost anything to obtain a job, and this amendment is to protect those men from that kind of evil.

That kind of contract, when enforced, simply means that the man who signed it is a slave. That is what it comes down to, and the books are full of cases of that kind. Men have gone to jail for violating that kind of contract when it was backed up by a sacred injunction from a Federal judge.

Let me read. I think there is no objection to the first paragraph in the amendment. The second one reads as follows:

No judge or trustee acting under this act shall deny or in any way question the right of employees on the property under his jurisdiction to join the labor organization of their choice, and it shall be unlawful for any judge, trustee, or receiver to interfere in any way with the organizations of employees or to use the funds of the railroad under his jurisdiction in maintaining so-called company unions.

Does anyone want that stricken out? That is another term that is well known all over the country, "company unions." That is one of the evils that follow, and logically follow, the signing of a yellow-dog contract. After the employees have agreed not to sign or, if they do belong, to get out of any of these organizations organized by the wilful act of the men who made them, then the next step is to form a company union. The company handles it, the company controls it, and the men who are in it are not free.

I thought we were over that, and that there was no use going over it again, so the yellow-dog contract does not appear there. I think this is the only place where it appears.

No judge, trustee, or receiver acting under this act shall require any person seeking employment on the property under his jurisdic-tion to sign—

I will strike out, if Senators are sensitive about it, the words "the so-called yellow-dog contract," so that it will read:

Shall require any person seeking employment on the property under his jurisdiction to sign any contract or any agreement promising to join or to refuse to join a labor organization; and if such contract-

Striking out "yellow dog" again-has been enforced on the property prior to the property coming under the jurisdiction of said judge, trustee, or receiver, then the said judge, trustee, or receiver as soon as the matter is called to his attention shall notify the employees by an appropriate order that said-contract has been discarded and is no longer binding on them in any way.

Striking out "yellow dog" again-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is satisfactory to me. Mr. NORRIS. What does the Senator from Delaware say

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I would not hesitate at all to prevent an officer of the court from entering into what the Senator calls a yellow-dog contract with reference to the employees of a railroad. This provision, however, would evade any contract which may have been made between the railroad and its employees. I do not know whether that is particularly objectionable. I do not know how much trouble that would get anybody into.

If the Senator would confine himself to prohibiting an officer of the court from entering into this contract, which all agree nobody ought to be permitted to enter into, I would not object. But, as I read the amendment in the first instance, it seemed to me very objectionable from many points

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, he will remember that he said to me, while the roll was being called, that this particular language I have eliminated, "yellow dog," was the objectionable feature. As I understood him, that was the only objection he had to it. What other objection has the Senator?

Mr. HASTINGS. I must confess that when an amendment was proposed to this bill with several lines in it, calling something a yellow-dog contract, it seemed to me it was the kind of thing we ought not to accept. It is true that I do not know what the yellow-dog contract is, and as I think the matter over, I see no particular objection to prohibiting an officer of a court from entering into such a contract, if the Senator would be satisfied with that modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute as modified by the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, has any committee passed upon this proposed amendment of the Senator from Delaware? Has it been before any committee, and has any committee held any hearings on it or passed upon it?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I can not say there have been any hearings upon this section as it now appears here in the form of an amendment. There were hearings, and extended hearings, upon the general subject during the whole months of May and June of last year, and the record of those hearings is subject to the inspection of any Senator who wants to see it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, we are about to pass upon an amendment affecting the whole question of the reorganization of the railroads of the country, adding it to a measure without any committee of the Senate having given it any consideration or passed upon it in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. REED. At the present moment the question is on the amendment dealing with the so-called yellow-dog contracts. Should we not settle that matter before taking up the broader question raised by the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WHEELER. I think that is possibly true, but I had just come into the Chamber, and I did not know the other matter was before the Senate.

I merely wanted to say that I think it is a very poor way to legislate to come in and offer an amendment which deals with the complete reorganization of the railroads, and deals with it in this manner, without the amendment having ever been considered by a committee of the Senate. I, for one, will not vote for legislation under these circumstances, although I might otherwise be in favor of it, provided some committee had given it some thought and we had had some chance to give it serious consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. A committee of the House of Representatives did give the subject prolonged consideration, and reported, and there was passed a provision very similar to that which is presented by the Senator from Del-

I hope the Senator from Delaware will accept the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska as modified.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I was about to suggest that we have the amendment as modified reported at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator refer to the substitute?

Mr. HASTINGS. I refer to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his substitute?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], as modified, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 21, after line 10, the Senator from Nebraska proposes to add the following:

No judge or trustee acting under this act shall change the wages or working conditions of railroad employees, except in the manner prescribed in the railroad labor act, or as set forth in the memorandum of agreement entered into in Chicago, Ill., on January 31, 1932, between the executives of 21 standard labor organizations and the committee of 9 authorized to represent class 1 railroads.

No judge or trustee acting under this act shall deny or in any way question the right of employees on the property under his jurisdiction to join the labor organization of their choice, and it shall be unlawful for any judge, trustee, or receiver to interfere in any way with the organizations of employees, or use the funds of the railroad under his jurisdiction in maintaining so-called company unions, or to influence or coerce employees in an effort to induce them to join or remain members of such

No judge, trustee, or receiver acting under this act shall require any person seeking employment on the property under his jurisdiction to sign any contract or agreement promising to join or to refuse to join a labor organization; and if such contract has been enforced on the property prior to the property coming under the jurisdiction of said judge, trustee, or receiver, then the said judge, trustee, or receiver, as soon as the matter is called to his attention, shall notify the employees by an appropriate order that said contract has been discarded, and is no longer binding on them in any way. them in any way.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have just been examining the act of March 23, 1932, the anti-injunction measure, as it was called, and I find that it does differ from the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska in this respect: Whereas the anti-injunction measure declared the so-called yellow-dog contract to be against public policy, and took away any jurisdiction at law or in equity to enforce it, the amendment now offered goes farther and outlaws any agreement to join what is called a company union. I do not think the Senate should adopt the amendment without realizing that it does differ in that respect from the language of the act we passed last year outlawing certain contracts. There is that difference, then, between the substitute offered by the Senator from Delaware and the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

I personally have not any strong desire to support the company unions, and I have never liked the so-called yellowdog contract, but I did not want to vote for the amendment without stating the fact that there is this difference. The amendmen now offered goes that much farther than does the present law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I think many Senators are very much interested in this legislation and are anxious to get through with it, so that they may proceed to something else, and in view of many requests I shall withdraw my proposed substitute and accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed substitute is withdrawn, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have a few more amendments which I desire to offer, after consultation with the chairman of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

On page 10, line 7, after the word "the" the second time it occurs, I move to insert the word "permanent," so that it will read "Any creditor or stockholder shall be heard on the question of the permanent appointment," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 10, line 8, after the word proposed," I offer to insert the word "recommendation," so it will read "the proposed recommendation, approval," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. After the word "approval," in the same line, I move to insert the word "confirmation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 12, line 1, I propose to strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, t amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On the same page, line 4, I propose to strike out the word "recommended" and insert in lieu thereof the words "finally approved," so it will read "A plan of reorganization shall not be finally approved by the commission," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 14, line 11, after the word "compensation," I propose to insert the words "and reimbursement."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I now offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, line 13, strike out the period and insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That unless good and sufficient reasons appear therefor no allowance for fees or compensation shall be made to officers of corporations who have acted as managers or in any capacity in connection with the reorganization when such corporation had an interest in the matter.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the language appeared in the bill introduced by the Senator from Delaware, commonly referred to as committee print No. 2, but it has been eliminated from the amendment which he now offers. The purpose of the proviso is to prevent an investment house or a bank which owns securities of a corporation seeking to come under the provisions of the bill from collecting fees or compensation for work or activities in connection with the reorganization where they were acting not only for themselves but for other security holders who might have designated them as their agents. I have consulted with the Senator from Delaware, and he explained to me that the proviso was eliminated on his original committee print No. 2 upon the suggestion that it would work hardship in certain cases.

I may state that as I understand it the proviso I now offer was also in the bill as it passed the House. Mr. LA-Guardia, the Representative from New York, who gave a great deal of time and attention to the railroad-reorganization section contained in the bill as it passed the House, is very certain that the proviso is important and that it will prevent the collection of excessive fees or compensation where the work is really being done in the interest of an investment house or a bank that owns the stock, but where it may be alleged or claimed that they are operating for the protection of the interests of others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 15, line 11, after the word "compensation," I move to insert the words "or reimbursement." This simply makes the language conform to another amendment which was adopted on page 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 16, line 23, I propose to strike out the word "recommendation" and insert the word "determination," so it will read:

The court shall refer to the commission for its consideration and determination the amount to be fixed as the upset price and the appraisal of any securities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 17, line 1, the letter in parenthesis is evidently a typographical error. It now reads "(g)," and it should read "(h)." Therefore I move to strike out "(g)" and insert "(h)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is another typographical error in the same line. I move to strike out the word "or" and insert the words "of the," so as to read "upon such confirmation the provisions of the plans shall be binding upon the corporation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 17, line 24, after the word "shall," I move to insert the words "subject to the jurisdiction of the commission."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 19, line 23, after the word "receiver" and before the period, I move to insert the plies only to employees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the | words "within maximum limits approved by the commission."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may I have the further attention of the Senator from Delaware? On page 21, line 11, after the words "as used in," I move to strike out the words "section 76 of," so as to make it read:

The term "railroad corporation" as used in this act means any common carrier by railroad-

And so forth.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am agreeable to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 21 of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, after line 16, insert the following new paragraph:

(p) In proceedings under this section, claims for personal injuries to employees of a railroad corporation and claims of personal representatives of deceased employees of a railroad corporation arising under State or Federal laws shall be preferred claims against the assets of such railroad corporation, in receivership or reorganization as herein provided, such claims to be subordinate only to costs of administration of such receivership or reorganization.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not know what will be the attitude of the Senator from Delaware toward the amendment. I am perfectly willing to explain it if it is desired that I do so.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator propound a question to me? I am opposed to the amendment as I understand it.

Mr. BLACK. Then I will explain it very briefly. Under the law as it now is, if a railroad company should go into the hands of a receiver and it happens that six months ago a trusted employee of that railroad who had been in its employ for many years had been killed and a suit should be brought and judgment obtained by his widow, the receiver would not be compelled to pay the claim as a preferred claim. As a matter of fact, it has been my experience that receivers are not compelled to pay such claims at all. This method has been used by railroads frequently for the purpose of defeating just claims of the widows of their former employees, and just claims of employees who have been injured or mangled while working for the railroad company.

The amendment is very simple in its effect. It simply provides that if a railroad company goes into the hands of a receiver, the widow of the deceased employee, or an injured employee, shall have the right to recover such damages as the court may award and the judgment shall be paid as a preferred claim. If the amendment does not become the law and there is a wholesale receivership throughout the country for the railroads, many injured employees will be wholly and completely deprived of the damages to which they are justly entitled.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is there any reason why this provision should apply to injured or killed employees of a railroad company any more than to other persons injured or killed by a railroad company?

Mr. BLACK. I do not know that there is. There has grown up in the country a rather settled idea that employees who have given of their time and their efforts for the benefit of their employers shall have a right to recover for personal injuries received. The amendment offered apMr. BROOKHART. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. Will not the Senator modify his amendment to include those referred to by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BLACK. I desire to state to the Senator that in so far as I am personally concerned I would have no objection to an amendment offered to my amendment which would bring about that object. I did not know just what would be the reaction of the Senate to an amendment that went

Mr. BROOKHART. It seems to me they stand on the same basis. I think the Senator is right in his suggestion that such claims ought to be paid.

Mr. BLACK. That in brief is the object of the amendment. It would provide that employees injured by railroads or the widows of employees killed by railroads should recover such judgments as they could obtain and those judgments should be treated as preferred claims against the assets of the railroads. Why should they not be preferred over and above the mortgage holders or the bondholders?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I can scarcely concede the acceptance of such an amendment to the bill. Of course, the purpose of the bill is to put the trustee in the same position that the railroad itself was in before the trustee was appointed. We sought in every way we could to make all laws that are applicable to railroads applicable to the trustee, which does not always happen, but in this legislation we are satisfied that it is important to provide that it shall be applicable. But I can not concede the wisdom of making a special class of persons who shall benefit and have priority in the payment of claims merely because a trustee has been appointed for the railroad. If it should be applicable in the case of a trustee, it ought to be applicable to railroads in general and to corporations in general. It does not seem to me it is worth while arguing the matter; it is so far from the general object of the bill that it ought to be rejected.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand the law, there are now favored groups, and this amendment should be adopted for this reason: A person who is injured does not have a provable claim; in other words, the ordinary creditor has a provable claim, but the person injured by a tort action does not

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator is mistaken with respect to that; that is not correct. The definition here of a creditor and a debtor includes everybody who has a claim against the debtor, and it applies to tort actions and contracts and every kind of action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Tennessee to give me their consideration for a second of time? I am not familiar with the particular amendment tendered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] but lawyers sitting in this body who have had to do with litigation generally, may I say such as myself, who are acquainted particularly with what may be called personal-injury litigation, will recall the history of the decisions of the court which should now seriously be considered. Beginning with the Huidekoper cases, the court held that it required six months and made an order leading up to the case of Kneeland against Trust Company, in One hundred and thirty-sixth United States Reports, that personal-injury judgments that had been recovered and were existing within six months previous to the receivership would be recognized but those previous to six months were treated for recovery as against the Railroad Trust mortgage, as wholly valueless as of possible collection against the trust mortgage under protection of receivership.

Subsequent to the Kneeland case, the Supreme Court of the United States considered these previous cases and declined to obey the 6-month rule and follow either one of the decisions of the past, and the court held anew that the trust mortgage took precedence to all liens or judgments. They held that no lien of judgments or of even the contractor who had built portions of a road, notwithstanding a contractor's lien created and permitted by the laws of the State wherein that road was built, could take precedence over the lien of the mortgage known as the trust deed.

For that reason may I be so bold as to say to eminent Senators who brought this question up that it is very necessary, as I view it, that some expression should be written in the bill at this particular time to meet the situation as declared by the court? If it is the purpose to allow those who have been injured to enjoy the benefit of a judgment granted in their favor, something should be put in the measure that will protect them, because the opinions of the Supreme Court to which I have alluded make it utterly impossible for them to collect against the lien of the trust deed. On the other hand, if it is the purpose to give the trust deed its precedence and allow the judgment to be collected only from such sum as may be the residue or excess over that which the trust deeds call for, that should be made clear. But unless some expression shall be made in the bill, I apologize for being so bold as to suggest that the Supreme Court of the United States have made it absolutely impossible for an injured person, with a judgment or without a judgment, to recover a penny as against the trust deed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. BLACK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. I am informed that I may transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. I make that transfer, and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH (after having voted in the affirmative). have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Warson]. In his absence, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and let my vote stand.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]: and

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dale] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

I also desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] on account of illness.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. Howell] on account of illness.

Mr. WHEELER (after having voted in the affirmative). transfer my pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Thomas] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher], and will let my | any character was permitted to file a voluntary petition vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 26, as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. Black to the amendment was

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], as amended.

Mr. BRATTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on this amendment as amended, I desire to explain why I shall vote

I believe that an amendment that has such far-reaching consequences as this amendment has, and will result in such broad reorganization of the railroads as this probably will, ought not to be adopted with the cursory consideration that has been given to it in the rough-and-tumble debate here on the floor of the Senate. I think it should have had the careful consideration of the Judiciary Committee, in order that we might know more fully just what the effects of it will be.

I am in favor of the principle of the legislation. I think some such legislation ought to be enacted; but I think that a few weeks' delay, such as would be necessary for the special session to take up this matter, could well be endured, rather than to pass legislation so far-reaching with so little consideration.

For that reason I shall vote against the amendment, and if it is adopted I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am unable to support this amendment; and I desire to say briefly that in my opinion the amendment ought to have been submitted not only to the Judiciary Committee but to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I dare say no more important piece of legislation has been before the Congress at any time in recent years.

Mr. President, the theory of the bankruptcy law was originally for the protection of the debtor, and it was open only to the individual debtor. Since Henry VIII the bankruptcy courts of the English-speaking people have confined the benefit of the acts largely to the individual debtor.

There is a moral restraint upon the individual who seeks to discharge his debts through any form of bankruptcy. There is no moral restraint upon a corporation, private or public.

In the course of the development of bankruptcy law as we know it, corporations were permitted to be adjudicated bankrupts in an involuntary petition brought against them. At first the involuntary proceeding was confined to trading corporations, to commercial corporations, to corporations that were engaged in ordinary business transactions. It was not until comparatively recent years that a corporation of protect the carriers of the country. I am willing to do all under the bankruptcy laws of the United States, and then the right to file was restricted to a commercial or trading corporation in a very strict sense.

Never in the history of our country has a public corporation or a quasi public corporation been permitted to discharge through a bankruptcy court its obligations-its obligations, if you please, not to private creditors but to the public, because a quasi-public or public corporation owes obligations to the public as well as to its immediate creditors. For the first time in the history of this country we are permitting a public or quasi-public corporation to come into a court of bankruptcy and discharge itself from its obligations to creditors; and I do not hesitate to say from its obligations to the public, because that is the object of this legislation.

I know very well that it may be said that we are living in a distressed time. So we are; but, Mr. President, there is no reason now, there never can be a reason, why we should depart from constitutional restraints when we are called upon to give power to the Executive, or from well-considered public policy when we are called upon to give aid to business enterprises, whether handled by individuals or by corpora-

I have no prejudice whatever against corporations, public or private, and I am not urging objection to this amendment through any hostile feeling whatsoever to corporate enterprises; but when it is remembered that a corporation comes into being clothed with special protection of the law; when its incorporators, its stockholders, have no liability or limited liability, personal to themselves; when all that they risk is simply what they pay into the corporate enterprise itself; when they are shielded and protected by the law from individual liability; and when, as in the case of a railway company, a quasi-public corporation, they are clothed with extraordinary powers and are protected by extraordinary immunities; then it does seem to me that there is no ground of sound public policy upon which that sort of corporation could come into a court of bankruptcy and relieve itself of its obligations, public and private, to its creditors and to the public alike.

The railways are not going to pass away even if there are receiverships. The physical properties will remain. The franchise rights will remain. The duty and obligation to operate will remain.

It may be said that these railways owe the banks and owe the savings banks and owe the trust companies and owe the insurance companies, and so they may; and I would go as far as anyone to protect them. Indeed, I have gone beyond my judgment since December a year ago, when I yielded to the plea, openly expressed and privately whispered, that if we did not create the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to finance the railroads, to finance the mortgage companies, and to finance the banks, the capitalistic system itself stood in immediate danger of collapse. Senators here voted for that measure when their judgment was against it, in the hope that the emergency we then faced in its acute form was temporary, and that somehow or other we might be able to come through that temporary embarrassment by resort to this extraordinary piece of legislation which places so great a strain upon the credit structure of the country.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask the able Senator from Georgia whether it is not also true that under the substitute as now before us reorganization of the railroads is likely to be controlled by banking creditors rather than in the public interest under such expert supervision as that of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I may say to the able Senator from Colorado that I fear precisely what he indicates in his question. I am willing to do all that I can do to country; but I do not think the Congress of the United States is called upon to leave out of consideration every sound public policy when we are asked to legislate under these conditions, and, on the one hand, to give to the President of the United States without question extraordinary powers that have no recognition under our system. Why? Because we are in trouble. Are we going to get out of trouble by running counter not alone to the spirit but to all the well-established constitutional barriers and sound public policy long established by the English-speaking people, to say nothing of our history here in the United States? Are we going to get out of trouble by saving the railroads at any cost? Is it not time that someone said that all we have done has been to make a futile effort, through the exhaustion of the credit of all of the taxpayers of America, to sustain a particular creditor class?

I wish to sustain them; I voted to sustain them; but are we never going to stop? Are we never going to ask the question, Who is to benefit from the legislation? Who is to benefit from this extraordinary legislation that somehow, under the fear of impending crisis and collapse, we are constantly invited to consider and to pass?

We tried to help the banks, and we did help the banks in every way that we knew; and in the present emergency we must continue to help the banks wherever a spot appears that can possibly be reached by any reasonable cost-indeed, by any extraordinary hazard, even to the credit of the country itself, because the credit of the country is involved. We tried to help the insurance companies and the savings banks, who may own many railway securities. We have done our best to help them. Now, we propose to reorganize the railways of the country not through courts of equity administered upon equitable principles but under a debtor's respite law; a law that, so far as it stands upon sound public policy-and it does-is based upon the idea that the individual citizen himself is entitled to seek relief through that process of the law.

Is this reorganization in the public interest? Then put it under the Interstate Commerce Commission, and let the Interstate Commerce Commission reorganize the railways. They know more about it than the bankruptcy courts; or, if it must be administered through the courts, put it into the courts of equity, which through long years have learned how to supervise the reorganization of railway corporations.

If this bill becomes law, it is easily imaginable that these Federal bankruptcy courts will actually have in their control and management very nearly all of the business now carried on in the United States. If we adopt this amendment, and the pending companion amendment dealing with all the corporations, and permit these corporations, public and private, to come in under the shelter of the bankruptcy courts, you will have pretty nearly all the business in the country carried on under and through this tribunal or instrumentality.

Mr. President, if this bill had gone before the Committee on the Judiciary, and had had careful consideration, not upon its technical provisions so much but upon the broader questions involved, some of which I have indicated, and had it gone to the Committee on Interstate Commerce-and I think it should have gone to both committees-I would feel, in this emergency, like going along, if it were possible to continue to approve this kind of legislation. But it has had no consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary, and my inquiry reveals that it has had no consideration by the Committee on Interstate Commerce; that it has come upon the floor with some consideration-and I presume mature consideration-from a committee in the other House, but the Senate is without the benefit of advice from that committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. GEORGE. I yield. Mr. NORRIS. The Senator just reminded me, when he referred to the consideration given to the bill by the House, that neither the Judiciary Committee of the House nor the House itself has had before it the pending amendment. The that I can do to protect the financial institutions of the | House has given consideration to the bill as it passed the House.

> Mr. GEORGE. I think the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is correct, but I thought that a similar provision, or one somewhat similar, was in the bill as it passed the House. I may be mistaken about that.

> Mr. NORRIS. It may be that the provisions are very

Mr. GEORGE. I understand they are similar. Perhaps they are not identical. Upon that point I am not informed. I do know that no committee of the Senate has considered carefully this railroad provision of the bill, or the provision which deals with other corporations, and it seems to me that it is a matter of most serious importance. I know that we are called upon here to depart from well-established principles if we open the door of the voluntary bankruptcy court to public corporations or quasi-public corporations.

On the desk is an amendment to this bill, though I do not know that it will be pressed, offered by a distinguished Member of this body, a Senator for whom I have the warmest regard, proposing to discharge municipal corporations from their private and public responsibility through a Federal bankruptcy court.

Mr. President, for the reasons I have given I can not support this measure. If the time comes when our carriers must be reorganized, I shall vote for their reorganization under the most liberal terms conceivable, but I do not want to see the carriers of the country reorganized in the interest of the creditor classes alone, for which we have legislated for many months, so far as actual results are concerned, whatever purpose, whatever intent, we may have had and did have.

The time has arrived when we must stop traveling in this direction, I shall therefore vote against the measure.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President. I dislike to take up the time of the Senate at this late hour, but some things have been said about lack of consideration in connection with this legislation.

It is true that the Committee on the Judiciary did not take cognizance of the amendment in a formal way. It is true that the Committee on Interstate Commerce did not take formal action regarding the amendment. But the Senator from Delaware, who is a member both of the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Interstate Commerce, worked on the legislation for weeks in cooperation with members of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and in cooperation with members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and for weeks conferences were held between Members of the House and Members of the Senate. and members of both the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and while it may be said that the conferences were informal in character, consideration has been given to the legislation.

The Senate will recall that some time ago I offered a resolution asking that further loans to railroads by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be discontinued. Hundreds of millions of dollars had already been advanced to the railroads by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to prevent default and to prevent the excessive cost of receiverships.

When my resolution was offered it went to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the chairman, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck], appointed a subcommittee, of which I was chairman. We held many hearings, in which the Interstate Commerce Commissioners appeared and in which the railroads were represented, and when anybody who wanted to appear had an opportunity to do so.

As a result of the introduction of that resolution both the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have withheld further loans to the railroads. Their reason for withholding further loans to railroads-and I understand that now applications are pending for loans to the extent of about a hundred million dollars—was their anticipation of the enactment of just such legislation as that now before us.

It is quite clear that unless legislation of this character is enacted at this session of Congress, hundreds of millions of dollars of Government money will be poured into the railroads under existing law, because no one has yet attempted to bring about the repeal of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, nor has any definite action been taken to stop further pouring of public and taxpayers' money into the railroads.

Mr. President, this measure was evolved in the public interest. It was not evolved in the interest of the creditors. It was evolved for the purpose of maintaining adequate transportation with a proper capital structure. It was evolved for the purpose of cutting down and trimming down the capital structure, so that the railroads might exist without further borrowings from the Government.

I am not in a position to debate this question with the learned Senator from Georgia, who is a lawyer, and a former judge, and is able to go back to Henry VIII, and discuss the bankruptcy law and the technique of this problem; but I am speaking of it from a practical business man's point of view. Unless something is done at this session of Congress, hundreds of millions of dollars of Government money will be jeopardized by having it poured into the railroads, which should not have it, and yet it will all be done under color of law.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield. Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the Senator's understanding that one of the purposes of this legislation is to scale down the capital structure, and squeeze a lot of the water out of the railroads?

Mr. COUZENS. I could not answer that by saying "yes" or "no." It is for the purpose of scaling down the capital structure. I do not like to use the word "water."

Mr. CONNALLY. "Wind" will do just as well.

Mr. COUZENS. There is sometimes a misunderstanding as to what is meant when we say "watered stock." intention is to scale down a lot of the fixed charges.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not use the term in an offensive sense; but everybody knows that the present capital structure of the railroads is such that they can not earn dividends and pay their debts.

Mr. COUZENS. Not only that, but they can not pay the interest on their maturing bonds, and just as soon as there is a default, a receiver is put in charge. That is just what we want to stop.

Mr. CONNALLY. This is a measure for modified receivership, is it not?

Mr. COUZENS. This is a plan to take out of the Wall Street bankers the power to reorganize the railroads, which they have had heretofore. Every time there has been a default on the part of a railroad, the Wall Street bankers have taken charge of the reorganization, and in the case of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, they collected nine or ten million dollars in fees for the reorganization.

Mr. President, this legislation would prevent that sort of thing, and would put the control in the combined hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the courts.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator says that unless this measure shall be enacted we will pour several hundred million dollars more into the railroads. I assume the Senator means that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will have to do that in order to keep them out of receiverships.

Mr. COUZENS. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator approve of that? Why not let them go into receiverships, and why not let them be reorganized? Why not scale down the capital structure? I for one shall not vote to lend the railroads money until they do what the Senator says we want them

Mr. COUZENS. Unless this bill shall be enacted into law, under the present law the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would not only be permitted, but really required, to lend to the individual railroads which have not the money to pay the interest on their maturing bonds.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield. Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator says that if this bill shall be enacted into law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can not make further loans to railroads.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator misunderstood me. I said they would not be required to.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand it, of course if a road takes advantage of the provisions of the bill, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will not lend the road any more money. But there is nothing to stop the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from lending to railroads now, which railroads may eventually avail themselves of the provisions of the pending bill.

I am in sympathy with what the Senator says, and it occurred to me that if we are to adopt this amendment, we ought immediately to stop further loans to the railroads, because it seems to me that the two policies are not in consonance.

I am afraid that many of the railroads which may not take advantage of the amendment will, in the interim, borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and eventually come in and take advantage of the provisions of this amendment. In my judgment, if we are to adopt this policy, the loan policy should be stopped immediately.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Maryland and I are not in disagreement. In other words, nearly a month ago I offered a resolution to accomplish the very purpose the Senator suggests; and, as a result of the introduction of that resolution, extensive hearings were held and developed the very thing I am now discussing, and with which the Senator from Maryland is in accord.

Mr. President, unless we do enact this legislation, there will be no excuse either for the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve or the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make further loans to railroads.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether there is any provision of which he knows which would stop further loans to railroads, even though this amendment were adopted?

Mr. COUZENS. The Interstate Commerce Commission. with its knowledge of the value of the railroads and the outstanding securities and the earnings, can then say to the railroads, "Your capital structure is too high. Come under this act, and do not go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for more Government money." But if this measure is not passed, there will be no refuge except the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I object to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation being a refuge with Government money for railroads which are over-capitalized.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Might I ask the Senator from Michigan if it is his understanding, and does he comprehend, that under this bankruptcy measure the railroads will have the privilege of an individual, to be released from their indebtedness after having disclosed their assets in the ordinary proceeding of bankruptcy? If so, will they not have the right to be exempted, and to be released of the indebtedness they owe the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the hundred million dollars to which the Senator from Michigan has correctly alluded? Would this bankruptcy provision enable them to escape their liabilities to the Federal Government as a creditor, exactly as they escape the liability to the New York banks or any other private creditors which hold their notes?

Mr. COUZENS. I do not believe that the New York banks-and when I speak of the New York banks I am talking about the big commercial banks and investment bankers—own any debts of the railroads. What I am saying is that in the judgment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation they have obtained adequate security. Adequacy is always a question of judgment. The adequacy to-day may be successfully denied, but if we have any improvement in industry and the market value of the securities increases, the adequacy would be sustained.

Mr. LEWIS. But does the Senator realize that under this | provision, giving exemptions or privileges to the railroads under the bankruptcy act as applied to individuals and business houses, they would have the same privilege to be exempt from their debtor, the United States, known as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, for that $300,000,000 as they would against any other debt, whether for rails or

Mr. COUZENS. It would depend upon the specific security that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in the document I have here, have listed the security they hold for these loans. It runs somewhere about $300,000,000. The security is assumed to be considerably in excess of the loans at the time made, but based on the existing market price it is lower in many cases than the face of the loan. When the reorganization comes about it will depend whether these securities are first mortgages, consolidated mortgages, or second mortgages that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation hold. It is obvious that a first mortgage under any of the provisions of the bill would be a prior lien against consolidated mortgages and junior mortgages. I could not say how the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would come out with respect to any specific loan, but certainly they are better off under this bill as it is now proposed than they would be if we let the railroads borrow more money and get further into debt to the Government.

Mr. LEWIS. Does not the Senator from Michigan recognize that when the railroads are put into bankruptcy those liens, those securities which were given the Government for their loans, do not stand out by law as a first lien to take precedence of all others? When thrown into bankruptcy they are all thrown, figuratively speaking, into the hopper, and the court only allows such application of the debts as the securities under the law provide.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator is not quite correct in that assumption because it will depend on whether it is a first mortgage, second mortgage, or what grade of mortgage it is. If it is a first mortgage, it will certainly have a better standing in court than a junior mortgage would have.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the Senator from Illinois well understands that without consent of the parties in interest the bankruptcy court does not change the priority of the lien.

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It does not impair the lien. Mr. COUZENS. No. If in the case of the loans to railroads the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have secured first mortgages, they certainly have a greater lien upon the adjustment than would a junior or consolidated mortgage.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it not the Senator's opinion that the Government, having made loans to certain railroads, would realize more on its loans through this process of reorganization than could be expected through a process of reorganization conducted by a court of equity?

Mr. COUZENS. There is no question about it, because before they can get to that place they will borrow more money and default on their interest and securities and get into the hands of investment bankers in New York, which would take all the cream off of the reorganization in the way of expense and set-up.

Mr. LEWIS. It has been misapprehended as to my position. I am in favor of the enjoyment by the railroads of the privileges that are granted other debtors, but I want to invite the attention of the able Senator from Michigan. Under the provisions of the particular bankruptcy bill does he not realize-or am I in error, as my able friend from Arkansas intimates—that the liens or securities which have been given to the Federal Government to secure the loans only 10 per cent of their value by the courts or by the bankruptcy proceedings?

Mr. COUZENS. As I said to the Senator, it depends upon the classification of the securities. If they hold receiver's certificates that were issued after the bonds were in default, then the receiver's certificates constitute a prior lien to the

Mr. LEWIS. So the Senator appreciates that the securities given to the Government for the loans which have been obtained will under this bill still stand as a priority in the house of the Government?

Mr. COUZENS. Only in some cases. I would have to analyze each loan, because one loan may not have the same kind of collateral as other loans may have. One loan may be secured by first-mortgage bonds, another one by secondmortgage bonds, and another one by receiver certificates. I could not classify in one statement what the result to the Government would be under this particular measure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I shall vote for the pending amendment and within just a few moments will give some of the reasons which impel me to support it. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] has made a very illuminating and informative statement. With the main points in his statement I am in entire accord.

The advantages of railroad reorganization under the pending bill are very clear and easily disclosed. When I say "advantages" I mean to every interest which may properly be considered. Many railroads are operating at a loss. Many of them are in such financial condition that unless some system of reorganization be provided they will either be driven into the courts or compelled to resort to the courts.

One of the advantages of this plan is that it provides a uniform system for the reorganization of such railroads as may be insolvent. Without this legislation we will have just as many different plans of reorganization as there are railroads thrown into courts of equity. That of itself might or might not be a great disadvantage. Nevertheless it seems to me that it is preferable to provide a method which is uniform, so as to assure similar if not identical treatment for the creditors and stockholders of the various railroads that may find it necessary to take advantage of the act.

Another advantage is to be found in the diminished costs which will be incurred under this plan. We all know that under the system which has heretofore prevailed the costs of railway reorganizations have been enormous and in many instances excessive. Lacking any uniform procedure, prolonged litigation usually occurs and many of the assets which ought to go to the satisfaction of the claims of creditors have been absorbed in costs and attorneys' fees.

The third reason for the legislation is that it tends to promote prompt action respecting railroad reorganizations that are necessary.

Reference has been made to the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission is the tribunal intrusted with the regulation of railways engaged in interstate commerce. I point out to my good friend the Senator from Georgia IMr. Georgel, who criticized the amendment and who objected to it, that no reorganization can occur under the bill without the express approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. So that we will have the advantage of the advice, the recommendation, and a decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission respecting almost every important step which it is necessary to take in connection with the reorganization of a railroad.

It is far preferable to resort to an arrangement of this character than to leave the railroads with their present capitalization to go on struggling indefinitely, attempting to obtain money on the basis of Government credit, only to find some of them, at least, in the end compelled to pass through expensive receiverships. I should have preferred that the Judiciary Committee of the Senate might have the opportunity of deliberating over the amendment. But, as explained by the Senator from Michigan, the subject has been studied at length by a committee at the other end which the railroads have obtained can be held to be worth of the Capitol and by a committee of this body, and it has the Senate.

I am going to make a suggestion now to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings]. Only four more legislative days of the present session remain. In my judgment, it will not be practicable, indeed it will be almost impossible, to give to the corporate reorganization provisions the consideration which we have given to the railroad features of the bill. It will be necessary, in my judgment, for the section dealing with corporate reorganizations generally to go over. I am going to suggest and urge upon the Senator from Delaware that when the railroad provisions have been disposed of we proceed, if possible, to final action on the measure, leaving the remaining section to be treated as the Congress may hereafter find necessary. I believe it would be unfortunate and would result in harm if the Senate should fail to incorporate the railroad reorganization section.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would it not be possible for the conferees, under the parliamentary situation, in view of the provisions in the House bill, to work out a provision including corporate reorganizations?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It would be possible, Mr. President; but I think I should be frank with the Senator from Kentucky and state that, considering the very short time that is to elapse before the end of the present session, I doubt whether it is practical to do that. It is entirely true that the section relating to corporations generally will technically be in conference; but I think the Senator from Delaware will agree with me that if we pass over the subject here it is not likely that the corporate reorganization section can be included.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas vield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. KING, I should regret exceedingly if the intimation of the Senator from Kentucky should be carried into effect. We have had too much legislation by conferees; and if the provision which the Senator thinks should be deleted from this bill should be added to it by the conferees, I am sure it would defeat the entire bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have concluded what I desire to say, Mr. President.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I rise only to reply to the last suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I agree with him, unless the Senate can take sufficient time to consider the corporate reorganization section, that no effort ought to be made to include it in the bill in conference. I think it is too important to undertake to get it done in that way.

With the section pertaining to the individual debtor agreed upon, the section with reference to the farmer agreed upon. and if the section pertaining to railroads which I have offered in the form of an amendment should be agreed upon, I feel that a great deal will have been accomplished by this bankruptcy measure. I should certainly regret to do anything that would tend to prevent the enactment of this bill with those three sections in it. But. Mr. President, I am greatly embarrassed because of the many pleas that have been made to me with regard to the corporate reorganization section, the many Senators who have urged upon me the importance of adopting such a section, and the responsibility I have taken upon myself to agree to introduce the section. 'I would be put, it seems to me, in an exceedingly embarrassing position if I should agree to the suggestion of the Senator from

I know that, with his experience and with his interest in this bill generally, his advice is probably good, and I hesitate not immediately to adopt it. I should like in some way to get the opinion of the Senate on the question. I do not quite know how to do that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I can suggest a way by which that may be done. After we have disposed of the railroad section, if the Senator persists in his attitude, and fixed by the commission.

been the subject of intense consideration by Members of | offers the amendment relating to corporations generally, I may ask the floor to move to commit that amendment to the Committee on the Judiciary, and if that motion should carry it would end the matter; and I believe that it would

> Mr. HASTINGS. I should be content with that expression of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. Let us vote.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have been impressed with what the Senator from Arkansas said about the reduction in expenses which the plan proposed by this amendment would bring about. He asserted what is well known, that the present system of receiverships is a most expensive one and has resulted in a great waste and dissipation of the assets of debtor corporations. He also asserted that the expenses incident to reorganizations under this amendment can be greatly reduced. I should like to inquire either of the Senator from Arkansas or the Senator from Delaware what provisions there are in this bill that give any assurance that the same high fees and the same general waste of assets will not prevail that have existed in connection with bankruptcy cases in the past?

Let me say in this connection that I have on my desk a table, taken from Senate Document No. 65, showing for a period of 10 years the creditors' rate of return from the assets of debtors. In the year 1923 the creditors received a return from the assets of debtors of 7.7 per cent; in 1924, 6.3 per cent; in 1925, 7.1 per cent; in 1926, 6.2 per cent; in 1927, 6.4 per cent; in 1928, 6.3 per cent; in 1929, 5.4 per cent; in 1930, 7.4 per cent; in 1931, 5.1 per cent. That is a shocking indictment of the manner in which our present bankruptcy laws are administered, resulting practically in the complete dissipation of the assets of the debtor, giving the creditor almost nothing, while referee and attorney and appraisers' fees absorb all the debtor's assets.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I can answer the Senator, I think, to his entire satisfaction. He has asked what assurance can be given that the expenses of railroad reorganizations will be reduced under this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And the fees of trustees and of masters. I notice the bill provides for temporary trustees and for masters of various kinds.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The answer is twofold: First, that the process has been simplified and made uniform. That of itself will tend to reduce the expenses usually incurred.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think that is true.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In the next place, certain items of expense are expressly limited; and, in the third place, practically all fees allowable under the bill must be approved or recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That will not only strengthen the idea of uniformity, so far as it ought to be strengthened, and prevent the allowance of extravagant or exorbitant costs and fees, but it will make sure that a body that knows exactly what service has been performed shall pass upon the compensation for the service.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the judges of the district courts have anything to do with the compensation paid to the trustees and masters referred to in the proposed legislation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The district courts in which the petitions may be lodged will make the allowance, but there must be a recommendation by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I think the language inserted by the Senator from Wisconsin made it the duty of the commission to decide the matter.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Has the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin been adopted?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the amendment to which the Senator refers provides, I understand, that the maximum limit shall be set by the Interstate Commerce Commission and within that maximum limit the district judge may fix the commissions.

Mr. CLARK. But the court can not go above the amount

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct. I said "within the maximum limit."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator is correct. The Interstate Commerce Commission ascertains that will be the maximum amount to be allowed, and the court within that limit may make the allowance.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Illinois. Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, by courtesy of the Senator from Wisconsin, let me ask the Senator from Arkansas a question. I want to confess to the Senator from Arkansas that I am greatly disturbed and shrinking somewhat in cowardice as against the charge that I can see coming, that we have passed a measure, when we shall have passed this bill, which I am favoring, that will have taken the security which the railroad companies gave to the Government for the money of the people which they borrowed from the Government and by bankruptcy proceedings and will have enabled the railroads completely to take their securities out of the control of the Government and allow them to be handled and manipulated through the bankruptcy court to the loss of the Government, which relied upon such securities as a lien to secure the money of the people which was loaned to the railroads. I ask my able friend from Arkansas what is there in this bill that can protect us against that accusation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, courts of bankruptcy, as I said a few minutes ago, do not abdicate liens; they do not disregard the liens that exist, nor do they deprive the creditor of the security that he possesses. What the courts do is to give him the benefit of his security. If the security is not worth anything, of course, the Government would not realize anything, but the Government would realize more in a proceeding of this nature than it would realize in a court of equity, and, in most instances, much

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely want to say that the criticism the distinguished Senator from Illinois makes is undoubtedly correct. It does not make any difference how we may reason about it, two-thirds of the creditors of every class have it in their power to enter into an agreement and submit it to the bankruptcy court, and, if approved, the debts of that class are settled upon the terms agreed upon by the two-thirds. Everybody knows that the Government will represent approximately—I should say, in all instances—less than one-third of the particular claims falling in that particular class.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I merely wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement; then I shall be pleased to yield the floor.

I do not wish the fact that I have offered this amendment during the course of the consideration of the pending bill this afternoon to create a false impression of my attitude concerning the particular amendment of the Senator from Delaware. The amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware is not the one which I would approve had I been drawing an amendment to accomplish the end which the Senator seeks to achieve.

I personally favor the plan suggested in the letter of Commissioner Eastman to the Senator from Delaware, proposing the creation of a division of reorganization in the Interstate Commerce Commission, to be equipped with the proper staff and competent assistants to eliminate altogether the courts from reorganization proceeding and providing that they shall be under the control of such a division of the Interstate Commerce Commission from the outset. I think, however, every Senator here will recognize that in the closing hours of this Congress it is not possible to secure the enactment of such a radical departure from the customary procedure.

As I view it, the choice in this matter is between the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware and permitting the impending receiverships of railroads to take place under existing law. The question that Senators must decide here is whether they prefer to let the impending receiverships take place under the existing law, or whether they believe that the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware is a sufficient step in advance; whether they believe that the amendment will protect the public interest, and therefore believe that it will be better to adopt it than to permit the receiverships that are impending to take place under the existing law.

There can be no question but that legislation could be passed at the special session of Congress, and perhaps a more drastic and far-reaching provision be enacted at that time; but, as has been intimated here on the floor of the Senate, we all know that we are confronted with eventualities concerning certain railroad corporations in the near future. Therefore it seems to me that Senators, in weighing their decision as to how they will vote upon this amendment, should take into consideration the fact that unless action is taken in connection with this amendment, the impending receiverships will take place under the existing law.

We only have to go back as far as the receivership in the Milwaukee case to recognize that there is crying need for legislation upon this subject. It might be argued that, if receiverships take place under the existing law, some effort might be made to draw them into new legislation enacted at the special session, as in fact inducements are offered in the pending amendment to bring receiverships now in existence under its terms. The fact remains, however, that unless some action is taken there is grave doubt as to whether receiverships may not take place between now and the time when legislation could be passed at the special session; and, if so, those receiverships would be in the usual procedure of the equity courts.

So far as I am personally concerned, I feel that legislation upon this subject should be enacted at the present short session of Congress. I take that position with a great deal of hesitation, because I share the feeling of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] that legislation of this importance should have had the careful scrutiny of the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I am confronted with the necessity of a choice, however; and in view of the fact that certain efforts are made in this legislation to protect the public interest in the impending receiverships, I would rather take the legislation that is offered now, and take my chances upon securing more drastic and more far-reaching legislation at the special session of Congress.

Before resuming my seat, Mr. President, may I say that I hope the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] will follow the procedure he has suggested concerning the amendment on corporations to be offered later by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings]. If he makes the motion to commit that amendment to the Committee on the Judiciary, I hope it will carry. I express the further hope that those interested in this legislation will recognize that that action by the Senate is an indication that we do not propose to legislate on that subject at the short session; and I hope the conferees will take that into consideration.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I merely wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether, as I interpreted his statement, he thinks that we are bound to choose between going into court in a bankruptcy proceeding and going into court in a receivership proceeding; that we can not stand still.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not believe I am committing any indiscretion in stating the information I have, because I think it is common knowledge. It is that there are several railroads which are very likely to go into receivership before any legislation could possibly be enacted at the special session of Congress, if it is called, as it is expected to be, about the middle of April. So the statement I made, and what I intended to say, was that we must choose between permitting those railroads that may have to go into receivership between now and the time legislation could be passed at the special session to go into receivership under existing law, or enacting this legislation and providing for those proceedings to take place as set forth in this amendment.

Mr. GORE. The status quo can not be preserved, then, or will not preserve itself?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that that is my information concerning several of the railroads

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think most of the Senators are in a good deal of doubt as to how they should vote on this amendment. In the course of my remarks, which I think will be quite brief, I desire to make a suggestion that to me seems to be the best solution we can make.

In the first place, let me say that if these railroads which Senators say are about to go into the hands of receivers should go into the hands of receivers under the existing law immediately upon our adjournment, assuming that we do not pass this bill, I have no fear that the unconscionable things that have happened in the past will happen in those cases.

I am satisfied that the debate that has taken place in the Senate and the action that took place in the last session of Congress in refusing to confirm one of the judges who allowed perhaps the most unreasonable and unconscionable fees that have ever been allowed in a receivership case will be sufficient to prevent the courts of this country from repeating the many evils that have happened in the past. So I do not share the fear that some Senators have that we are going to have a repetition in any receivership case of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul receivership case.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator might supplement that statement by referring to the action of the House a day or two ago in impeaching a judge because of granting excessive commissions and exhibiting favoritism in receivership cases.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to that; and Senators will remember that at the last session of Congress—

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. May I point out to the Senator one thing that I think has been overlooked by both the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Nebraska? It may be that these railroads will not go into receivership. It may be that they will bleed the Federal Treasury. So I do not think there is necessarily an alternative of going into receivership under the old law.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not so fearful that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is going to be in any particular hurry to loan a lot more money to railroads that ought to be in the hands of receivers.

Mr. COUZENS. But they are doing it.

Mr. NORRIS. Furthermore, I do not share the belief of some Senators that there is going to be such a rush of receiverships in railroad cases immediately when we adjourn, especially if we take the action I am going to suggest.

Mr. President, I do not dispute or belittle anything that has been said by any of the Senators on either side of this question as to the terrible predicament that the railroads and the country are in; but I want to state before I make my suggestion that a part of this bill ought to go to the Interstate Commerce Committee. It never ought to have gone to the Judiciary Committee. The railroad provision of this bill has no business before the Judiciary Committee. It never ought to have been referred there. There ought to be separate bills. There ought to be one bill that has nothing to do with any subject except the common carriers of the country.

Since this bill has been under discussion I have had suggestions made from some of the most eminent authorities on the question, in which they outline what they think ought to be done. I have heard from the Senator from Wisconsin the opinion of Mr. Eastman; and I have great respect for Mr. Eastman's opinion. I do not believe there is a Senator here who has a greater respect for him than I have. If I had to pass blindly into something where I could not see the other side, as seems to be the case with the question presented now, I should be willing almost always to follow the opinion of Mr. Eastman on a question pertaining to the railroads.

He has an idea, and I think it is a splendid idea—I think we ought to do it—that there ought to be, in the Interstate Commerce Commission, a section that has to do with the reorganization or refinancing of railroads that are in financial difficulties. I should like to put it all in their hands, rather than to go through the expensive method of receiverships in the courts.

We can not legislate intelligently on this subject without having it considered by a proper committee, and without taking the proper evidence of men, some of whom have made a life study of this question. We are doing this without giving any consideration to anything of that kind. We are passing on an amendment that never has been referred to any committee. We are building this bill on the floor of the Senate; and I will take some chances on getting a better bill, rather than to get now a bill that is unsatisfactory to everybody, and that very few Senators know very much about. I will take some chances on getting it before the Interstate Commerce Committee, where it can be properly considered, and where a real bill can be evolved.

If we pass this bill containing this amendment, the probabilities are that we will have no such opportunity. There will be no such legislation. We will start with what we have done now, with all the infirmities of the legislation.

Mr. President, it seems to me we could do this:

We could pass a simple Senate resolution directing the Committee on Interstate Commerce to proceed during the recess of Congress, immediately upon our adjournment, to have hearings on the subject of railroad reorganization with a view of bringing in here, perhaps on the very first day of the special session, a well-considered, well-defined plan upon which we could operate. There will be an interval of only a month or six weeks. I am not informed as to just how long it will be, but only a few weeks; about long enough for the Interstate Commerce Committee to go to work during the interim when Congress is not in session, and bring in here and have ready for our consideration a bill outlining a complete system, one that we will want to put in force and have remain on the statute books permanently. If we do not do something of that kind, we are probably going to take this half-baked proposition and enact it into law, and will regret it the balance of our lives.

It would take only a Senate resolution to do that. I do not suppose anybody would object to the passage of a Senate resolution directing the Interstate Commerce Committee of this body to proceed during the vacation—this is a continuing body, and that has been done often in the past—and bring in here at the special session a bill that will at least have been considered by those who are best qualified in the Senate to deal with the matter and by all the experts outside of the Senate. That investigation would be under the control of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, my term will expire on March 4.

Mr. NORRIS. What March 4?

Mr. COUZENS. Next March 4.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator means as chairman of the committee. The probabilities are that the Senator from Michigan will be the chairman of the subcommittee which would hold the hearings. I have no doubt but that that would be the fact.

At least, Mr. President, we would put the matter into the hands of a committee which would be better qualified than any other committee of the Senate to handle the subject. There has so far been no opportunity to study it. That committee could call in as many members of the Interstate Commerce Commission as it saw fit to. They could get experts from over the country who would be glad to come here and who have no interest whatever except to help frame a really good bill. It seems to me, therefore, that we are justified in voting down this amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, does the Senator mean to say that this complicated and involved amendment of 21 pages has never been before any committee for consideration?

Mr. NORRIS. Never; it was offered on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I share the views many Senators entertain in regard to this measure, namely, one of great doubt and uncertainty. It is very regrettable that there has not been fuller consideration given by a committee or committees of the Senate. But we have to vote, and I am going to state the reasons for my vote.

I am going to vote in favor of the pending amendment for this reason, that the member of the Interstate Commerce Commission who I think is the ablest man on the commission, who I think has championed more than any other member the public interest, thinks this amendment provides a better, more direct, and less expensive way of working out the railroad problem than the existing cumbersome and expensive receivership reorganization law. In view of the emergency and the importance of simple and direct methods of reorganization, I shall vote for this amendment, though I wish more extensive study had been given the entire subject.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to take a few minutes to give some of the reasons why I shall vote against the amendment.

I share the views of the Senator from Nebraska, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, to which this bill was originally referred. He said that the amendment had not even been considered by that committee. It has not been considered by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which has exclusive jurisdiction with respect to railroad matters.

My own view is that the railroads are going to have to scale down their capital structures. I think they ought to scale them down. I think that unless they do scale them down, they will have to go into bankruptcy, or into receiverships.

This is a measure too complex, too intricate, too important, for me to vote upon it largely in the dark. If the Committee on the Judiciary, after examining the amendment, declined to act on it—and that committee ought to know more about it than the rest of the Senate—if the Senate here now, in the last three days of its session, under tremendous pressure, in a mere brainstorm, passes this legislation because it thinks something must be done, but does not know quite what it is, I can not get my own consent to vote for the amendment, even for the reason the Senator from Massachusetts ascribes, when he says he is willing to take the judgment of one member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to suggest to the Senator that I believe the same member of the Interstate Commerce Commission to whom the Senator from Massachusetts referred has suggested that what he would like to see would be a new division in the Interstate Commerce Commission having charge of matters of this kind.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think that may be true. Mr. NORRIS. Something this measure does not provide for.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. But he does think, in view of the emergency, this machinery is simpler and more direct, and would serve the public interest better, than the present method of handling receiverships.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska is correct, and the Senator from Massachusetts is correct—and I assume they both are—if we are going into this subject at all, why not do the thing which is best? Why do the halfway thing? It simply accentuates what the Senator from Nebraska and the other members of the Committee on the Judiciary have said, that the matter has not had proper consideration. In other words, they have considered it briefly, they know something ought to be done, they know one of the patient's legs ought to be cut off, but they do not know which one, and they will just cut off one in order to be doing something.

I have in mind the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton], who is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, to which the bill was referred, and I have for his views the highest respect. The Senator from New Mexico, I understand, takes the view that this amendment has not had proper consideration by any committee of the Senate. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Dill], another member of the committee, I understand entertains the same view. If members of the Committee on the Judiciary itself, a committee which has considered this amendment, are of the opinion that it has not had sufficient consideration, why should the Senate vote for it, when we admit that the Senate has not had the time or the opportunity to consider the measure?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator from Texas find anything in what we are proposing to do that is not better than what we have?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Louisiana that I have not had opportunity—and I am sure he has not—to examine this amendment in all of its aspects. We have been in the present depression three years, and if what we have now has been wrong so long, why has not the Committee on the Judiciary, and why have not the proponents of this bill, why have not those who are so insistent now that the Senate shall pass this measure without examination, in the last few days, been working on such a plan as the pending one, and proposing it to the Congress?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question? He has not answered the last one. The Senator has not disputed the last question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. I ask the Senator if we did not reject the action of the Committee on Finance for an amendment offered by the Senator from Texas in connection with the last income tax bill we considered, after all the Finance Committee had done, and is not the law better than what we had from the Finance Committee?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for his compliment; but I do not really get the relevancy of what the Finance Committee did last year has to do with what the Senate is about to do now.

Mr. President, for the reasons I have stated, I do not expect to support the amendment. I am not adverse to legislation providing for the reorganization of the railroads. I think they will have to be reorganized. But when the time comes to reorganize them I want the plan of reorganization to be so well considered that minority stockholders will have protection, that the unfunded creditors of the railroads shall have their day in court, that the public interest may be protected, and that the reorganization shall not be conducted purely in the interest of the owners of the railroads. I conceive this bill to be primarily intended for the benefit of the owners of the railroads and the operators of the railroads. The bondholders and stockholders are in most cases the same. A man has so much stock and so many bonds.

I am not opposed to a proper measure for the reorganization of the railroads; but I can not get my own consent to vote on a measure of this magnitude without more study and more discussion and more consideration than the committee of the Senate and the Senate itself have seen fit to give it.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long, but permit me to say briefly the conclusion I have reached with respect to this amendment.

I was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary to which the House bill was referred.

That subcommittee, consisting of three members, gave the legislation no consideration. The distinguished Senator from Delaware, the chairman of the subcommittee, devoted himself to it energetically and industriously, for which I commend him; but the fact is that it is now proposed to pass a comprehensive measure, of far-reaching consequences, dealing with the capital structure and the indebtedness of the railway transportation systems of the country, with one Member of this body understanding it, the other 95 Members having at best a superficial comprehension of its contents, its operative effect, and its consequences.

Mr. President, it is urged upon us that the emergency requires action under these circumstances. I do not concur in that view. Strange it is that this measure was not urged until the closing days of this session of Congress were upon us. Then we were told that we were faced with an emergency which required legislation on this important subject.

We are familiar with the mistakes that have been made in the past in enacting legislation in the rush and the pellmell of the closing days of the session. We can make some tremendous mistakes here. Most of the legislation we have enacted during this crisis, aye, the vast majority of it, has been for the benefit of the creditor class of the country. Now we are called upon, with one Member of the Senate understanding what we are doing and 95 of us not fully understanding it, to vote this proposal up or down.

Mr. President, the Committee on the Judiciary by an affirmative vote more than a week ago indicated that it felt that it did not have the time to go into the legislation and report it to the Senate with that deliberation which it deserved. By a majority vote the members of that committee indicated that they felt that the responsibiliy was too great and the time was too short. Now it is proposed, in the very last week of the session, with no study by either the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to rush through a measure which those who advocate it imply will be availed of immediately by many railway corporations, because they say that we can not wait until the extra session of Congress convenes, probably in April. They imply that the provisions of this measure will soon be invoked by numerous railroad corporations. Yet we are asked to pass the measure and give them the benefit of it now, and let the public take the consequences, with only one Member of the Senate understanding what we are

Mr. President, the responsibility is too great. When a Member of this body does not understand a proposal thoroughly he should vote against it. I propose to vote against this amendment; and, should it be adopted, then I shall vote against the passage of the bill. I would prefer to have the whole subject matter deferred for a month or so, in order that the Senate might proceed with the deliberation, with the calmness, and with the caution, which the magnitude and the consequences of the legislation not only require, but, in my judgment, demand of this body.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am going to take but just a moment of the Senate's time. This proposition is most astounding to me. Those of us who are members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce have some knowledge of the tremendous investment in railroad properties. There is not a more complicated problem before the American people than the question of railroad transportation. It is now involved not only by virtue of the depression, through the shrinkage of the business, but it is faced with competition that threatens almost the destruction of the roads, from the internal-combustion engine, the hard-surfaced roads, trucks, automobiles, and auto busses. Now the problem before us is, what will we do with the railroads in the face of this modern competition?

We have not had the proposal referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, nor have we had any hearings by or the advice of the Interstate Commerce Commission, nor have we heard the railroad owners, nor have we heard the bondholders and stockholders; but out of a clear sky we are asked to consider and pass within an hour or two a measure involving the transportation of all the United States, which affects more vitally every man, woman, and child in America than possibly any other problem that may come before us.

We have been studying the question of competition that has brought about perhaps the major part of the shrinkage in revenue of the railroads. It is not the depression alone. Had the railroads of the country not been in sharp competition with the new methods of transportation, they would not have been here to-day fighting for this kind of legislation. They would be living as are the telegraph and telephone companies and others that have not had the same kind of sharp competition.

This is not an emergency problem. It is a problem involving a radical readjustment of transportation both in speed, distance, and tonnage. I beg the Senate to take into consideration the fact that it is not the depression alone. It is the competition of modern progress expressed in this new method of transportation that has to be adjusted. We have got to find a place for the railroads, for the trucks, for the busses, and for the automobiles in the transportation system of our country, and we can not solve that problem by resort to a bankruptcy court. We have to take this matter in its fundamental aspect and with the most mature deliberation find a system by which both may live, if both can live.

I want to enter my protest here this evening against coming in, during the last hour of the consideration of the measure, with a proposal that is to reorganize the entire railroad system. Does it take into consideration the causes that brought about the unfortunate condition in which they find themselves? There is not a word in the bill about it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is there anything in the measure which guarantees that the railroads will scale down their capital structure?

Mr. SMITH. Not a line.

Mr. CONNALLY. They offer that as a pretext for getting the measure through, but some provision ought to be made in the bill somewhere that the railroads shall be revalued and their capital structure scaled down to where they can live.

Mr. SMITH. When the reorganization comes and the revaluation comes it must be based upon the earning capacity of the properties. The earning capacity of the railroads to-day, as I have said and now repeat, is not predicated upon the depression alone. It has a minor part. It is the competition that has cut into their earnings. When we start the reorganization we must take into consideration this competition and ascertain what is the value of the property in the light of the competition.

I have sat here and listened in vain to learn who it is that has given thought to this question. We have had it before the Interstate Commerce Committee in the form of other measures. There we have been trying to devise means by which we can so regulate their competitors as to give the railroads a chance to rehabilitate themselves or at least make an earning in accordance with the property investment. Yet here we are just about to vote, as the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton] said, on a bill about which nobody seems to know anything.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. What is there about this bill that is not better than what we have?

Mr. SMITH. What is there about the bill that is as bad as anything else we could get?

Mr. LONG. I am just asking the Senator with all the knowledge which I confess I do not possess if there is a thing about this bill that is not better than what we have to-day, what is it?

Mr. SMITH. I do not consider that this bill will remedy the situation at all.

Mr. LONG. That is not the question. Is it not better than what we have now?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. LONG. Why not? Mr. SMITH. For the simple reason that this bill does not in my opinion touch or come anywhere near touching the solution of the problem which has brought about the present condition of the railroads.

Mr. LONG. I admit that, but the fact is that it is better by far, because it reduces expenses, simplifies the process, avoids receivership, lessens the time involved, causes less calamity, and, while it is not the solution which both the Senator and I would want, it is much better than what we have to-day.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this is an invitation to all the railroads to come into bankruptcy courts. If we do not enact this legislation, we may have but one or two receiverships, but if we pass this legislation, we will have them all involved. It is an invitation to come into bankruptcy. The expense that the Senator mentions will be aggravated because the aggregate of those who come in will exceed the receiverships that we might otherwise have. Even though it might be considered better than what we have, I maintain that the legislative body, the Senate, owes it to the public and to itself to consider carefully and fully a matter of such vast importance, involving billions as it does, and involving the transportation of the country. Yet we sit here and on the say so of one man are about to pass a bill that nobody knows anything about, and I doubt very much if the author himself knows about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The year and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. Blaine's name was called). I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. Blaine] and to state that if present he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], who, if present, I understand would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATson]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead]. On this question he is paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR]. If the senior Senator from Minnesota were present, he would vote "nay," and I understand that if the junior Senator from New Jersey were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Schuyler] has a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black]. If present, the junior Senator from Colorado would vote "yea," and the senior Senator from Alabama would vote "nay."

I also desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson];

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Thomas] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Cutting] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 15, as follows:

So Mr. Hastings's amendment as amended to the substitute reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from Delaware on page 53 of the bill as reported by the committee, to lines from 15 to 19, inclusive. I have received a number of communications relative to the provision referred to. I invite the Senator's attention to a statement in one of the communications and ask his judgment as to whether the interpretation placed upon the provision by the person who has telegraphed me is correct. He states that this provision gives excessive discretion to the commissioner or the judge with respect to the treatment of secured and unsecured creditors. He takes the position that under the provision to which I have just called attention the secured creditor is subordinated if the judge desires to the unsecured creditor; in other words, that the judge will have such arbitrary and unlimited power that he may relegate the secured creditor to a subordinate position and elevate the unsecured creditor to a paramount position. Is the interpretation so placed upon the provision such as the Senator places upon it?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will say in reply to the Senator that it is not, and I inquire of the Senator whether he thinks there is any justification for any such interpretation of that provision of the bill?

Mr. KING. When I first read the provision I had some doubt, but the Senator from Delaware has studied this measure and has lived with it so long that I thought of course his judgment might be better than the judgment of some of us who have never seen the measure until a day or two ago.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think there is no danger at all along the line suggested.

Mr. KING. I wanted to get the Senator's statement in the RECORD.

I now ask the Senator's attention to one other provision, based upon a suggestion from an eminent banker in the West who has had a copy of this bill. He suggests, calling attention to page 56, that lines 3, 4, 5, and 6 be stricken out, for the reason that the provision will result in unjustifiable loss to creditors through the inability of the creditor, under may ensue or failure properly to care for the property may attend the activities of the court.

Mr. HASTINGS. It will be observed that the purpose of those provisions, one of which the Senator has mentioned, is to prevent the proceedings being initiated by persons who are trying to collect their money from the debtor until he has had an opportunity to present the matter before the court. The section itself begins by pointing out-

Except upon petition made to and granted by the judge after hearing and report by the conciliation commissioner the following proceedings shall not be instituted.

In other words, if there be any good reason for the judge permitting these proceedings to go on, the persons interested may file a petition and the proceedings may go on as though the application were not in existence.

Mr. KING. Another eminent banker has telegraphed me, stating that under section 75, paragraph (b), the conciliation commissioners should be compensated on a salary basis rather than a fee basis as proposed, which would put a premium on the number of cases filed rather than to discourage wholesale filings. Does the Senator think there is merit in that suggestion?

Mr. HASTINGS. No. I may say in reply to the Senator that, as this amendment was originally drawn, it provided for a fee of $5 a day for services plus 5 cents a mile for actual expenses. It was believed after careful consideration with those who drafted it that the chances were that there would be a continuous service for every conciliation commissioner, perhaps every day of the year, and it was believed that it would be very much more equitable and very much cheaper for the Government if we fixed a definite sum for each case. I think there can be no doubt of the correctness of that contention in view of the work the conciliation commissioner will be compelled to do.

Mr. KING. One other suggestion. A number of protests have come to me against compelling the Government to pay the expenses and the salary or compensation of the conciliators, and so on, instead of having the property which is under the control of the courts subjected to the payment either at the expense of the creditors or of the debtors. The question has been asked, Why should the Government be compelled to pay for the expenses to which reference has been made?

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course there are many answers to be made to that question, and I think everybody has to decide for himself whether it is wise or unwise. We have gotten into the habit of trying to do something to aid and protect the farmer, at least to pretend to protect and aid him. It is contended constantly that what we have done amounts to nothing, but we keep on trying just the same, and I have no particular objection to it. While I dislike to put him in a class by himself and treat him differently from the ordinary debtor, I think perhaps there is some excuse for it; though, in my opinion, everyone must reach his own conclusions in respect to whether it is wise or not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in addition to what the Senator from Delaware has stated, let me say that, after due consideration of that phase of the bill, it was decided that it was best to have the conciliation commissioner an employee of the Government rather than of the individuals who are affected by the proceeding.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Delaware that on Saturday I offered an amendment, to come in on page 42, line 6, and withdrew it temporarily. It was in this language:

A claim for future rent shall constitute a provable debt and shall be liquidated under section 63 (b) of this act.

Upon further consideration I think that amendment should be included in the bill, and I hope the Senator will accept it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico will recall that the only reason I objected to it was because I was afraid it would open the door to amendments to the general bankruptcy law. If we are now in a position where we are about to vote on the bill to-night and there any circumstances, to repossess the land even though waste | is no danger of our getting into controversy by trying to amend the bankruptcy law generally, I will accept the amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. I think, Mr. President, that such an amendment as I have offered is necessary in order to give the relief needed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 42, line 6, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert the following:

A claim for future rent shall constitute a provable debt and shall be liquidated under section 63(b) of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I should like to make a further statement. I stated a little while ago that I felt compelled to offer the section relative to cooperative reorganization. I have consulted a number of Senators and have been urged not to do it by many of them, and I have reached the conclusion that it will aid us in disposing of this bill to-night if I shall not offer that section.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Delaware will bear in mind when the bill gets into conference that it will not facilitate its final passage if he brings back in the conference report a provision in regard to corporate reorganization.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have no intention of doing so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendment be ordered engrossed and the bill to be read a third time?

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. DILL. I ask for the yeas and nays. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

King La Follette Lewis Austin Couzens Bailey Bankhead Dale Sheppard Smith Dickinson Long Barkley Dill Steiwer Bingham McGill Thomas, Okla. Frazier McKellar Townsend Bratton George Goldsborough Brookhart McNary Metcalf Trammell Tydings Vandenberg Bulow Gore Grammer Neely Byrnes Nye Patterson Wagner Walsh, Mass. Capper Caraway Hale Harrison Pittman Coolidge Hastings Robinson, Ark. Hebert Robinson, Ind. Copeland

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I raised the point of no quorum because I wanted a roll call on the passage of the bill. I think those of us who are opposed to it are entitled to have that, and I hope the Senate will grant it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well; let us have it. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass? On that question the Senator from Washington demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. Blaine's name was called). Making the same announcement as before concerning the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BLAINE] and his pair, I wish to state that if my colleague were present he would vote "nay," and I understand that the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], with whom I am paired, I understand, would vote the same way that I shall vote on the passage of this bill. Therefore I am free to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. Shipstead's name was called). Making the same announcement as before concerning the pair of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead], I wish to state that if present he would vote "nay," and the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Barbourl, I understand, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Hatfield]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Reynolds], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

I also wish to announce that the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott] and the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] are necessarily absent. If present, they would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD];

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Thomas] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler];

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally];

The Senator from California [Mr. Shortridge] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Hull];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carey] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley].

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Schuyler] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Cutting] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Schall] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 8, as follows:

POSTPONEMENT OF FORECLOSURE OF CERTAIN MORTGAGES—AMENDMENT

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 5639) providing for loans or advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of securing the postponement of the foreclosure of certain mortgages for a period of two years, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, KANSAS CITY, KANS.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, on Saturday the Senate passed House bill No. 14500. It seems that there is an error in it which needs to be corrected. I therefore submit and ask present consideration of a concurrent resolution that will secure the return of the bill to the Senate for correction.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 44), which was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the Vice President of the United States in signing the enrolled bill (H. R. 14500) to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kan., be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it had been my intention at this time to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 8681, to develop American air transport services overseas, to encourage the construction in the United States by American capital of American airships for use in foreign commerce, and to make certain provisions of the maritime law applicable to foreign commerce by airship. In view of the large number of absentees I shall not press the motion now. I give notice, however, that at the conclusion of the morning hour to-morrow I shall ask that the bill be made the unfinished business.

Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 28, 1933, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 27, 1933

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou who art timeless and ageless, our yesterdays are passed, and through Thy providence we are at the threshold of another day's labor; Thy guidance can prevail, so we wait in prayer. Regard in mercy our petition. Thy promises link this day with eternity. Open up our souls and let them feel the pulsations of Thy Holy Spirit; do Thou determine the quality of our manhood. Here let Thy light shine abroad bearing wisdom and discretion on every side. May we be built up in goodness and be led to understand the right way, the wise way to give just government to our people. Heavenly Father, unite us in a common zeal, in a common ambition, and in a common consecration in defense and in support of the stability and the might of the Republic. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14363) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes," and had receded from its amendment No. 13 to said bill.

The message further announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 14, 15, and 16 to the bill (H. R. 13520) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes," further insists upon its amendments Nos. 1 to 16, inclusive, to said bill, asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Oddie, Mr. Smoot, Mr. Bingham, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Keyes, Mr. Moses, Mr. Glass, Mr. McKellar, Mr. Bratton, and Mr. Byrnes, and Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 792. An act for the relief of William Joseph Vigneault:

H.R. 1936. An act for the relief of Sydney Thayer, jr.;

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, together with the Senate amendments thereto and the amendments of the House to certain of the Senate amendments; further insist upon the disagreement of the House to Senate amendments Nos. 2 to 13, inclusive; insist upon the amendments of the House to Senate amendments Nos. 1, 14, 15, and 16; and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. Byrns, Arnold, Ludlow, Wood of Indiana, and Thatcher.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Before the gentleman leaves the matter of this conference, I have had a good many inquiries from those interested in the present status of the matter affecting the appropriation for vocational education.

Mr. BYRNS. That is in conference and nothing has been agreed on.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the exact status of that matter in conference?

Mr. BYRNS. The exact status is that a proposal was made to repeal all the permanent appropriations, but in the amendment which was adopted vocational education was excepted. The House conferees felt that all these permanent appropriations should be repealed in the sense that they must be reported by the Director of the Budget and passed upon each year, so that the House and the country may know what is being done.

There is no good reason for excepting one appropriation any more than another, but all should be included except provision for payment of interest on public debt and debt retirements. That is the whole proposition, and the matter is still in conference because of the action of the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senate action was to sustain the existing status with reference to these appropriations, as I understand it.

Mr. BYRNS. The Senate yielded; but since they have disagreed to the conference report over there the whole matter is back in conference.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will permit, provision for payment of interest on national debts is not included, as I understand, in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. No; I just told the gentleman from Alabama that it was not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Furthermore, if I may add a word, it seems to me that the appropriation for vocational rehabilitation or vocational training, which is in the nature of a 50-50 arrangement with the States, should be included in any arrangement that is made with reference to the repeal of these laws.

Mr. BYRNS. In other words, it should come before the

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It should come before the House; and if other permanent appropriations are to be eliminated—and I think they should be—I also believe that this particular appropriation should be included with them.

Mr. BYRNS. It certainly ought to come before the House, as the gentleman states.

GEORGE WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 14745) relating to the tenure of congressional Members of the George Washington Bicentennial Commission.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the membership of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives on the George Washington Bicentennial Commission shall continue irrespective of their terms as Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, of course, I have no objection so far as the personnel named in the bill is concerned, although I am quite surprised to see that it has become necessary to extend this commission beyond the life of the present session of Congress. I supposed that the work of the commission largely had been closed by this time. The active work throughout the country in connection with this commission has been disposed of, and I am wondering if the gentleman from Tennessee can give the House any definite information as to how many employees there are at the present time, what they are doing, and how much longer it will be necessary for these people to be employed in order to close up the work of the commission, and how much money there is on hand and whether or not it will be necessary to appropriate any more money for the commission.

Mr. BYRNS. I am sorry I can not give the gentleman any definite information upon those subjects. I was confined at home at the time of the last meeting of the commission, and I have not been advised in the matter. I probably should have the information.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman believe it would be a good idea to withdraw the bill until a later day?

Mr. BYRNS. The session is rapidly coming to a close——Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that, but it will only take five minutes to pass it.

Mr. BYRNS. This is simply to provide for the continuance of Mr. Tilson, who has already retired from the House, and Mr. Hawley, who retires on March 4

Mr. SNELL. As I said, I have no objection whatever to the personnel, but it seems to me the House ought to have some information before we vote to continue the commission.

Mr. BYRNS. I am told by the gentleman from New York that this work is rapidly proceeding to the point where it can be closed up, but there are certain books ordered printed which have not been completed, and the business has got to be wound up.

Mr. SNELL. I agree that it ought to be wound up, but I was told this morning that it would take nine months. I wish the gentleman would withhold this resolution until later in the day.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the resolution for the present.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL FOR 1934

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13872) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13872) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 8, 12, 13, and 20:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 6, 9, 10, 11, 18, and 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$85,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,583,822"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,655,822"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,754,854"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$375,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$411,810"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,209,091"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 14 and 15.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13872) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

AMENDMENTS CORRECTING TOTALS, SPELLING, AND CITATIONS

Recommendations in the accompanying report as to the following amendments are for the purpose of correcting totals, spelling, and citations of statutes to accord with the action of the conferees on the controlling amendments: 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, 13, 17, and 21.

Recommendations as to other amendments are as follows:

AGRICULTURAL EXHIBITS AT FAIRS

On No. 2: Appropriates $85,000, instead of $10,000, as provided by the House, and $99,085, as provided by the Senate.

FORAGE CROPS AND DISEASES

On No. 7: Appropriates $201,014, as provided by the House, instead of $225,482, as provided by the Senate, for forage crops and diseases.

TRANSFER OF APPROPRIATIONS

On No. 9: Strikes out the House language relating to transfer of appropriations under section 317 of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, as continued by section 4 of the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation act, fiscal year 1934.

On No. 19: Inserts language, as proposed by the Senate, permitting a 10 per cent transfer of appropriations within bureaus of the department.

NAVAL STORES INVESTIGATIONS

On No. 11: Eliminates the House provision forbidding the expenditure of any part of this appropriation for the erection of buildings, stricken out by the Senate, and retains the provision inserted in lieu thereof by the Senate permitting the expenditure of not to exceed $10,000 of the appropriation for the erection of buildings.

MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION ACT

On No. 12: Appropriates $89,525, as proposed by the House, instead of $194,300, as proposed by the Senate, for carrying into effect the provisions of the migratory bird conservation act.

AGRICULTURAL ENGINEERING

On No. 16: Appropriates $375,000, instead of $350,000, as proposed by the House, and $403,287, as proposed by the Senate.

PHONY-PEACH DISEASE QUARANTINE

On No. 18: Retains the language, inserted by the Senate, making the appropriation for the phony-peach disease available for the certification of products out of the infested areas to meet the requirements of State quarantines.

DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED COTTON TO THE AMERICAN RED CROSS

On No. 20: Strikes out the paragraph, inserted by the Senate, appropriating $4,100,000 for the distribution of Government-owned cotton to the American Red Cross.

IN DISAGREEMENT

The committee of conference have not agreed with respect to the following amendments:

On No. 14: Relating to Federal aid in the construction of approaches to publicly owned toll bridges.

On No. 15: Amending the emergency relief and construction act so as to make the Federal-aid highway appropriations contained therein available until January 1, 1934, in lieu of July 1, 1933, as provided in said act.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the Interior Department appropriation bill was under consideration, I directed attention to the interchangeability clause or provision in that bill, and pointed out that the interchangeability related only to the reclamation fund. I called attention to the fact that in the Agricultural bill there was an interchangeable item authorizing the department to interchange to the extent of 10 per cent of all amounts carried in the bill. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] stated that his committee was relying on a general policy that would be carried in the Treasury and Post Office appropriation act that would extend to all the appropriation acts. I would like to know if we are going to have a uniform policy for the interchangeability of appropriations, or whether we are going to restrict one department as with the Interior Department or make it general? I am making this inquiry for the benefit of the incoming administration.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The provision authorizing the inter-

Mr. BUCHANAN. The provision authorizing the interchangeability of appropriations is the child of the economy act, placed there so that they could make adjustments.

The correct policy is to limit the shifting of any appropriations within the bureau and not to permit an interchange between bureaus of the department. Otherwise, one fund could be built up at the expense of others.

Having 10 per cent interchangeability within the bureau has been the policy of the Agricultural Department for many years. In fact, this department transferred only $19,000 last year, and that was within the bureaus.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform us whether that is to be the policy or whether it is going to be haphazard—limiting the interchangeable privilege in one department and allowing it to run wild in another?

Mr. BUCHANAN. We hope to establish a general policy limiting the interchange of appropriations within the bureaus.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any such item in the present Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is still in conference.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. It seems to me that we have yielded a very considerable amount of increases to the Senate in this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman will figure up the concessions that the Senate made and the concessions that the House made, he will find they are about equally divided.

Mr. TABER. That probably is so; but at the same time the bill is substantially raised over the amount it carried when it left the House, is it not?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is raised about $120,000 or $130,000. Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman think in times like these, instead of raising the amount, we ought to cut it down?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman must bear in mind that where differences exist between the two Houses and conferees are appointed on the part of both Houses, the result of the conference is necessarily a compromise. The conferees on the part of the House expect to yield somewhat if they can not maintain the position of the House, and the Senate conferees expect to yield some if they can not maintain the position of the Senate. There is a coming together, necessarily, and a compromise in order to get the bill through.

Mr. TABER. I note on page 16 of the bill that we have compromised on an increase of $75,000 where the Senate provided an increase of $89,000. We have given the Senate nine-tenths of all the increase they ask for. It seems to me that we ought to get a better break than that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman will look at another item he will find that the Senate yielded over $100,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. So far as the final figures of the bill are concerned, how do they compare with the Budget estimates? How much of a saving has there been in the entire bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is $7,852,702 under the Budget esti-

Mr. SNELL. The bill, as it stands to-day, is that much under the Budget?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What were the principal items where that large decrease took place?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The principal items were in public roads?

Mr. SNELL. How much was that?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Six million eight hundred and fourteen thousand three hundred and eighty-seven dollars.

Mr. SNELL. So that six-sevenths of the decrease was in the public-roads proposition?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The ordinary activities were reduced $1,038,315 under the Budget estimate.

Mr. SNELL. But the large amount is in the roads prop-

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. So far as amendment No. 20 is concerned I suppose that the $4,100,000 is cut out because that is carried in another bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes. I will say to the gentleman, however, that the amount which I indicated the bill as it now stands is under the Budget estimate, does not include the $4,100,000 carried in the Senate amendment for the distribution of cotton to the Red Cross. Since the latter is to be appropriated in another act we do not take credit for the reduction. The reduction which has been indicated, of $1,038,315 under the Budget estimate for the ordinary activities, is a net reduction.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make inquiry concerning the public-roads matter, still in dis-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can do that when the Clerk reports the amendment. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 14: Page 66, line 2, after the word "concerned." insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That hereafter in the administration of the Federal highway act and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, the first paragraph of section 9 of the act of November 9, 1921, shall not apply to publicly owned toll bridges or approaches thereto, constructed and operated by the highway department of any State."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Buchanan moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That hereafter in the administration of the Federal highway act and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, the first paragraph of section 9 of the act of November 9, 1921, shall not apply to publicly owned toll bridges or approaches thereto, constructed and operated by the highway department of any State, subject, however, to the condition that all tolls received from the operation of any such bridge, less the actual cost of operation and maintenance, shall be applied to the repayment of the cost of its construction, and when the cost of its construction shall have been repaid in full, such bridge thereafter shall be maintained and operated as a free bridge."

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand the amendment, this road provision applies only to the bridges operated by highway departments. Is that correct?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It applies only to State bridges operated by States under a highway system.

Mr. DOWELL. And may I inquire about the amendment offered by the gentleman?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The amendment provides that when they shall have collected a sufficient amount of toll to repay the cost of construction the bridge shall be operated and maintained as a free bridge.

Mr. DOWELL. And that refers to the highway bridges that are under the highway departments?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman should make a short statement to the House and tell us what is contained in the Senate amendment and just what he intends to do.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield five minutes to me on this amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. This is an important amendment, and I think that explanation should be made by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Senate amendment repealed section 9 of the highway act, in so far as publicly owned toll bridges were concerned, and permitted a State that was operating a toll bridge over a public highway to charge tolls indefinitely.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman say what is contained in section 9 of the highway act?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly:

That all highways constructed or reconstructed under the provisions of this act shall be free from tolls of all kinds.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That relates to State highways?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Highways through a State, or interstate; recognized public highways that Federal aid is extended to. So that the Senate amendment repealed that, as far as publicly owned toll bridges were concerned, and would permit the charging of tolls on bridges over highways in such State throughout unending time. The House conferees could not, and would not, agree to that amendment, because we believed that the public highways should be free from toll charges; so we agreed to an amendment providing that all tolls collected should be applied to the cost of construction of that bridge, if it was constructed through bond issues or otherwise. In fact, in other words, if it owed for the construction, and if a sufficient amount of tolls had been collected to pay the cost of that construction, excluding maintenance, then the bridge shall thereafter be free. That is the substance of the amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly.

Mr. DOWELL. Has the gentleman concluded?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not quite.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman should continue with his

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is one more point to explain; an inducing cause why we agreed to this amendment. After the passage of the original highway act, in which was contained section 9 that I just read, the Congress passed another act. In that act it provided that Federal aid could be extended to a road with a toll bridge, if the Government contributed anything to its construction. Therefore, it is now the law that if a State and the Federal Government construct a toll bridge, the State paying half of it and the Federal Government paying half of it, they can receive Federal aid on the public highway. In other words, it was just an ommission in the law, so that if the Federal Government contributes one cent to the construction of a bridge on which tolls are charged, then they can extend Federal aid to all highways leading to that bridge. But if the Federal Government does not contribute to it, then the expenditure of Federal-aid money on the highways leading to that bridge is absolutely prohibited.

So, as the law now stands, it permits them to charge tolls on a bridge over a highway that the Federal Government contributed a few dollars to until the cost of that bridge is paid. This amendment permits them to charge tolls on a bridge on a highway where the Federal Government has contributed nothing, so long as the proceeds of those tolls apply to the payment of the cost of that bridge and then stop. That is all.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Assuming that the cost of operation is paid out of the general fund of the State, and all the tolls go to meet the obligation on the bonds with which the bridge was constructed, does the gentleman think that this amendment, referring to the cost of operation and maintenance, would be prejudicial to such a state of facts?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In other words, the fact that the cost of operation is paid out of the general fund and not out of tolls would permit the use of Federal money upon the highways where such condition existed?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think so. Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. This provision only applies to toll bridges and approaches constructed and operated by the highway department of a State?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Are we not establishing a precedent by adopting this measure wherein the Federal Government contributes to the acquisition of a toll bridge owned entirely by Mr. BUCHANAN. No; we are not. If the gentleman will read article 9-a, Federal aid to toll bridges, adopted since the organic act providing for public roads, he will see that we are not establishing a precedent. It is a long article. It allows tolls to be charged on bridges for public highways where the State has constructed one half of the bridge and the Federal Government has paid for half of the bridge. It allows tolls to be charged until the State's half of the cost of construction has been paid. That is the law now.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman will admit that we do not wish the Federal Government to establish any precedent whereby the Federal Government takes any responsibility for those toll bridges?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. I wish to make a statement.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Dowell].

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, as stated by the chairman of the subcommittee, under the law as it now stands Federal aid will not be used for toll bridges or approaches to toll bridges. This amendment makes the exception, and it shall not apply where it is publicly owned and operated by highway commissions. That is all there is in this amendment. Under the additional amendment offered by the chairman of the subcommittee, as I understand it, it further provides that the money received by the toll bridge which is operated by the highway commission shall go, after paying operating expenses, to the paying off of the indebtedness, and then it becomes a free bridge.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. This in no way would permit the same to apply to a privately owned toll bridge?

Mr. DOWELL. No.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In other words, that was the object of the old Denison bill, on which the gentleman's committee held hearings?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It would not apply to this?

Mr. DOWELL. No. This has been opposed by the entire committee and which, I think, is opposed by the House.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL, Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. How does this amendment affect the privately owned and privately operated toll bridge connecting two Federal-aid highways?

Mr. DOWELL. It does not affect it at all.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They can continue charging tolls indefinitely?

Mr. DOWELL. The ones that have already been established.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. How about the new ones?

Mr. DOWELL. This affects only those bridges operated by the highway commission and it affects no other bridge whatsoever.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. In other words, the publicly owned, publicly operated bridge must eventually become a free bridge? Mr. DOWELL. That is it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. But the privately owned bridge can continue to charge tolls.

Mr. DOWELL. That is true.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That is wrong.

Mr. DOWELL. There is a provision, however, in the law that Federal aid can not be used on any road or approach to a toll bridge.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. It is done every day.

Mr. DOWELL. The law clearly provides that Federal aid can not be used on toll roads, and the Comptroller has construed that approaches to toll bridges are toll roads.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman tell me how it is, then, that we have something like 15 bills granting franchises or permits to build toll bridges connecting Federal-

Mr. DOWELL. Those bills should not pass the House.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I hope the gentleman will stay here and help me. I can not overcome the prejudice.

Mr. DOWELL. This law has been in force ever since

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield.

Mr. DYER. It does not apply to bridges owned by municipalities, does it?

Mr. DOWELL. This amendment applies only to bridges operated by highway commissions.

Mr. DYER. Not by the city.

Mr. DOWELL. Not by the city, for a good reason. The city may operate a toll bridge permanently without making any attempt to pay off the indebtedness and use the returns for other purposes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The amendment was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 15: Page 67, after line 18, insert the following: "That paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 301 of title 3 of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 is amended by striking out the date 'July 1, 1933,' where it appears in said paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the date 'January 1, 1934.'"

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, this does not change the appropriation in any way whatsoever, it just extends for six months the time within which the States may avail themselves of the appro-

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is all.

Mr. SNELL. How much is available at the present time?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not recall now.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The original appropriation was $120.-000,000, and it could be used only for work actually performed. How much remains unexpended?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am informed there will be about $5,000,000 left.

Mr. DOWELL. The bureau advised me a few days ago that there is now $10,000,000 unexpended under this law: that is, not under contract, but that will be allocated to the several States.

Mr. BUCHANAN. My information from the bureau is that, unless the time is extended, approximately $5,000,000 will remain unearned, as provided by the emergency relief act, on the 1st of July and will revert to the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Buchanan, a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

(Mr. BUCHANAN asked and received permission to revise and extend his remarks and to include a statement showing the bill as it finally passed compared with the appropriations for 1933 and the Budget estimates for 1934.)

RELIEF OF WATER USERS ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 393, providing for the consideration of the bill (S. 5417). The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the considera-of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the considera-tion of S. 5417, an act to extend the operation of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law," approved April 1, 1932.

That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we are entitled to know a few minutes in advance which resolution from the Committee on Rules is to be

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from New York will consult with the Republican membership of the Committee on Rules, they will undoubtedly advise him what rules have been reported from the Rules Committee.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; but we do not know anything about when a particular rule is coming up, and I think we are entitled to know.

The SPEAKER. Nor does the Chair know exactly when they are to be called up if Members are not in the House to respond when the Chair recognizes them.

Mr. SNELL. Let me say to the Chair, with all respect, that we want to cooperate in passing legislation the balance of the session, but we are entitled to know a few minutes in advance what business is before the House. If the Chair will give us this information, we will cooperate with him as far as possible.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will try to accommodate the gentleman from New York. The Chair called the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Davis] upon the Shipping Board bill which the gentleman from New York was advised about this morning, and the Chair is sure the gentleman is acquainted with the bill of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] concerning the purchase of some land for | one of the National Guard camps out in his State. The Chair did not find either of the gentlemen present.

The Chair understands that the present resolution was unanimously reported by the Rules Committee and the bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. The Chair thought this was about as inoffensive a bill as could come to the attention of the House at this time.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I think we should know what this bill is about. I am a member of the Rules Committee and voted against the reporting of the bill. The vote was not unanimous.

This is an important matter affecting irrigation. It is to bring more land into cultivation and keep other land under cultivation. There is an appreciable number of Members in this body who are opposed to doing anything that will bring more land under cultivation at this time.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. I feel sure the gentleman is in error with regard to bringing more land under cultivation. There is nothing in the bill providing for that. The provision relating to Grand Valley relates only to lands which are under cultivation but which have become water-logged.

Mr. MICHENER. The land is under cultivation, but it is water-logged, and it is land that you are not able to use at this time. You want this legislation so that construction work may be finished and the payment therefor deferred.

Mr. COLTON. I understand this bill simply provides a moratorium for the payment of construction charges.

Mr. TABER. No; this bill provides more than that.

Mr. MICHENER. May I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to state to the House just what this bill does?

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to make explanation of the bill.

On the 1st day of April of last year the House passed a bill for the relief of water users on irrigation projects. As you know, these projects are located in the arid sections of the West. We all know the conditions that have obtained in recent years, making it so difficult for farmers everywhere to meet the demands upon them. As a consequence, the water users on the irrigation projects of the West have been unable to meet the annual charges levied under the provisions of the irrigation act creating such districts.

Now, in order to provide for the retention of these people on the irrigated lands, it became necessary that an extension should be made of the annual charges for the water that goes to this property to enable these people to produce crops.

There is no use disguising from ourselves the fact that when you withhold water from the people who have located and established homes on these arid lands, you drive them away from their property, because water is the life of their land, and the life of their land means a livelihood for the people on the property.

Without regard to what may be done in the future with respect to these charges, the withholding of this relief from these occupants means they will leave the property, and we can not afford to drive them from the lands, because of the fact there is some doubt about the payment of the small amounts inuring to the Government by reason of the investment we have already made.

Let me call your attention to the fact that if we drive the people from the property there can not be any charges paid on the investment that we have made and we lose the value, secure no benefit, and drive the people from property that is at least yielding them a livelihood.

In my opinion there is only one thing that we can reasonably do, and that is to give them a chance, because it costs no more, the investment is already there, and if we do not get any return from it, we are not out of money.

these sections. It is already developed and people are on the property and we are undertaking to relieve those now using the water. We are not holding out an invitation to others to enter upon such property and develop additional acreage.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. SNELL. What proportion of the people on these projects are able to pay?

Mr. DRIVER. Possibly 60 per cent.

Mr. SNELL. Under the provisions of the bill that you propose will the 60 per cent be obliged to pay or not?

Mr. DRIVER. No; they will not be obliged to pay, and I will say to the gentleman from New York that my information is that possibly this same percentage will not obtain as to this additional 18 months.

Mr. SNELL. Of course this is an invitation for them not to pay.

Mr. DRIVER. There is no doubt about that.
Mr. SNELL. Because they can get the benefit of this relief and pay only 3 per cent, whereas in other instances they have to pay 6 per cent.

Mr. DRIVER. Of course we are decreasing our interest rates generally with respect to other matters.

Mr. SNELL. But we have not reduced the interest rate anything like this, so far, by law.

Mr. DRIVER. I think, in view of the financing we can obtain on such basis, we should not charge these people who are not able to pay their annual charges more than the interest we are paying ourselves.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman does not expect that any great number of them will pay anything during the period of this extension?

Mr. DRIVER. Of course we know we can not possibly pass a bill without making it general in its provisions. We know the selfish nature of men, and, possibly, those who are able to pay will take advantage of this opportunity. I could not state to the contrary because you gentlemen can estimate that just as well as myself.

Mr. SNELL. Last year when we had this matter up we went over it more or less carefully, and one reason the Secretary of the Interior said we ought to charge 6 per cent was because it would then be an invitation for them to pay, instead of letting the charges accumulate.

Mr. DRIVER. I may say to the gentleman that the difference in interest rate will not make a material difference in the ability to pay.

Mr. SNELL. If a man could pay, he would pay quicker if he was paying 6 per cent interest than he would if he was paying 3 per cent.

Mr. DRIVER. I doubt if that would be true to any material extent. In fact, I will say to the gentleman that I think the conditions are such that we can not afford to make a heavier charge of interest.

Mr. THOMASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. Will the gentleman yield to me to read a letter from Doctor Mead, Commissioner of Reclamation, to the gentleman from New Mexico, Mr. CHAVEZ, which answers the whole question?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield. Mr. THOMASON (reading):

United States Department of the Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, Office of the Commissioner, Washington, February 23, 1933.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ.

House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAVEZ: This is in response to your inquiry of to-day concerning what the conditions on the various projects will be should the bill now pending in the House for temporary relief of water users fail to pass during the present session of

The reclamation law prohibits the delivery of water to any water do not get any return from it, we are not out of money.

My friend from Michigan made the statement that at this time we should not develop additional farm property. Of course we should not, but this measure does not do that. We are not developing one acre of additional acreage in and 1933, these charges being deferred. Reports received from the various projects indicate that the water users will be unable to pay the construction charges and the operation and maintenance charges. It is only with the greatest difficulty that the necessary funds for paying the operation and maintenance charges can be raised by the water users. Therefore, unless the construction charges are deferred, thereby reducing to this extent the total charges payable, the water users will be unable to make the necessary. sary payments and thereby become ineligible for water service. This would be a very serious situation and one which I hope may

On some of the projects, particularly those in the Southwest, including the Carisbad and Rio Grande in your own State, water is now required for irrigation and the projects are urging adjustment at the earliest possible date. I therefore hope that S. 5417, now pending in the House, will receive favorable consideration during the present session, and at the earliest possible date. Sincerely yours, ELWOOD MEAD, Commissioner.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is not a word in this letter about the several points of objection which have been raised to this bill by the Bureau of the Budget. The Bureau of the Budget recommends that repayments shall begin July 1, 1935, and secondly, that the 3 per cent interest provision be eliminated. It is true the legislation may be urgent, but this provision in relation to interest, as said by the gentleman from New York, is an inducement to evade payment.

Mr. DRIVER. I do not believe that we can acquit ourselves of the charge of discrimination as long as we loan the Federal credit to other interests and refuse to men who to-day are struggling to make a livelihood.

And further, I want to say to the gentleman from New York that under the set-up of the irrigation districts this is a joint enterprise of the people of the districts. They are unable to pay at present, and the benefit must be extended so that they may work it out as an entity.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will yield further, I feel this way: We are working in a circle every day. One day we are appropriating money, providing for an increase of agricultural products, and the very next day we are bringing in a bill for the Government to take care of that surplus. That is working in a vicious circle. This bill provides for an additional surplus in agricultural products that we ought not to have at this time.

Mr. DRIVER. If we are in the attitude where we stop people from making a living on their farm lands and drive them from their property, we are not in the attitude of doing what we ought to do.

Mr. SNELL. Have I not stated the fact, that we are one day providing for agricultural products and the next day trying to do away with the surplus products?

Mr. DRIVER. Possibly that may be true.

Mr. SNELL. In other words, we are working in a vicious

Mr. DRIVER. I imagine that we are obliged to do it and find justification in the emergency which exists in an eco-

It is true to-day that if we could withhold from the farmers of this country the crop-production loans, we would reduce the surplus of products that we are making on the farms of this Nation, but when we do it we drive the people who are able to make their living and pay back to the Government the amount of the loan into the army of unemployed which is threatening the very foundation of the structures of government, and because we might make a surplus is no reason in the face of these conditions, in my opinion, why we should withhold that aid, because possibly it may reduce the value of wheat 5 cents a bushel or the value of cotton 1 cent a pound and the other products in like proportion.

Mr. SNELL. My position is that we should make the people pay who are able to pay, and then we will take care of those unable to pay in a separate provision.

Mr. DRIVER. I agree with the gentleman from New York, and if we could do that under the irrigation structure we could afford to do so, but we can not do that.

Mr. SNELL. If we charge them 6 per cent interest, that would be one incentive to those people who can pay to pay.

Mr. DRIVER. But they could not do that under their joint obligation and still meet the demand on their districts where it is a joint obligation rather than a separate and independent entity on each of the water users.

Mr. SNELL. The ones who paid would get the water.

Mr. DRIVER. But you would not meet the demand of the joint obligation.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DRIVER. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. I think if the gentleman from New York [Mr. Snell] will study the situation carefully, he will find this will not increase the agriculture surplus to any appreciable extent. A very large per cent of the products raised on irrigration projects do not come in competition with those crops of which we produce a surplus.

Mr. SNELL. When you increase the general supply of agricultural products, you increase the supply all along the

Mr. COLTON. In a large measure that does not enter into the picture at all.

Mr. SNELL. It can not help but do so.

Mr. COLTON. These projects in the West produce sugar beets, alfalfa, and crops of that kind and they do not enter into competition with the surplus crops.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, alfalfa enters into competition right here in the State of New York.

Mr. COLTON. If you increase the rate of interest you simply drive out those who can not pay at all.

Mr. SNELL. I do not want to drive them off, but I still insist that those who can pay ought to pay.

Mr. COLTON. I am not disagreeing with the gentleman about that.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I shall be forced to refuse to yield further.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DRIVER. I have made this statement frankly to the House. There is going to be an explanation made by those directly involved. This matter is of sufficient importance to justify the House in affording an opportunity for the presentation of the claims of these people and my duty is to ask consideration at your hands. I want the privilege of presenting the resolution so that those gentlemen who are directly interested may make a very thorough explanation.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DRIVER. Yes.

Mr. RICH. If you do not change the rate of interest and grant a moratorium to those unable to pay, then the individual who can pay is going to support the Government to that extent, and we are not going to grant moratoriums to everybody who is able to pay his just debts.

Mr. DRIVER. In my opinion, to start with, the difference in the interest rate will not be material. When these gentlemen who are actually familiar with the situation in the irrigation districts explain to the gentleman the joint obligation under which they are operating those properties, that fear in the gentleman's mind will be entirely removed, as it has been from mine. So that the matter may be presented to the House more thoroughly, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, we want some time on the resolution.

Mr. DRIVER. I withdraw the motion and yield the gentleman from Michigan 20 minutes.

How much time has been consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas has used 40 minutes. He still has 20 minutes left.

Mr. DRIVER. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, were it not for the fact that last year when this act was under consideration I was delegated by some Members of the House who were opposed to the moratorium to represent them at a conference before the Secretary of the Interior, I would not rise at this time to discuss this proposal.

That act provided the granting of a moratorium on construction charges for the year 1931 and the first half of 1932, subject to an interest rate that would be determined by the Secretary of the Interior. It was my unfortunate lot to appear before Commissioner Mead to present what I thought was an impartial view, in opposition to those like the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Taylor] and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. Smith], who wanted a low rate of interest. It was the opinion of Commissioner Mead that we should not charge less than 5 per cent. For what reason? Because there should be no inducement to the persons who were able to pay to have this moratorium granted in the way of construction charges postponed for a period of 40 years.

There were many, many districts, 60 per cent, who were able to pay, and to-day those who availed themselves of the moratorium are paying an interest rate of 5 per cent. The policy had the full approval of the Secretary of the Interior, including Commissioner Mead. Now, having adopted that policy, what is proposed here? It is asked to pass retroactive legislation in this last proviso, cutting the interest rate from 5 per cent to 3 per cent. What will be the effect of it? That will be an inducement to all, whether they are able to pay or not, to postpone the charges for 40 years; not to have it paid until 40 years from now. The Commissioner of Reclamation is of the opinion that this will defer the payment of $2,000,000; it will take that much money out of the reclamation fund that is used for construction purposes, and will defer the use of that money for proper development and construction purposes.

In his testimony before the Senate committee Commissioner Mead stated there was only about $500,000 available for this purpose at present; that there will have to be further demands on the Treasury if this law is passed. I want it understood that I am sympathetic with the idea of postponing the charges for the last half of 1932 and 1933, but it is an outrage upon the Treasury of the United States for you to cut down the interest rate which was determined by the Secretary of the Interior, from 5 per cent to 3 per cent, and really make an inducement to everyone, whether he is in a position to pay or not, to defer these payments. Sixty per cent are in a position to pay.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, the bill for which we are asking the pending rule provides that a moratorium be granted to settlers upon reclamation projects in the matter of payment of certain operation and maintenance and construction charges for one-half the year 1932 and the full charge for 1933. The problem is whether or not an orderly way may be provided that settlers upon reclamation projects may meet the obligation they have assumed under the reclamation law. It is not a question of whether or not the Government should have undertaken reclamation as a national policy. That proposition was determined more than 30 years ago. It is not a proposition of whether or not new projects should be begun. Members from the West generally concede that now is not the time for commencement of new projects. The proposition is simply whether or not at this time we are going to recognize that the same crisis exists upon reclamation projects that exists in every other line of activity-agriculture, banking, railroad administration, and other industrial activities—throughout the United States, and give to settlers upon reclamation projects consideration similar to that which has been given or is being extended to other interests to which I have referred.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. In just a moment.

Throughout the West—in fact, throughout the United States—the holders of mortgages upon land are granting to debtors an extension of time, adjustment of rates of interest, modification of conditions under which payments of principal and interest may be made. That is being done by insurance companies who own mortgages; it is being done by banks and trust companies; it is being done by individuals who have loaned money.

The problem that confronts us here is whether or not the Federal Government shall do the same thing by settlers upon reclamation projects, who contracted their obligations under a plan that was worked out years ago when times were good, when prices of crops netted profits to farmers upon all lands, whether reclaimed by reclamation or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman was present last year at a conference with Commissioner Mead. At that time the question was the rate of interest. He was contending, and I was supporting him, for a rate of interest of 5 per cent. Now, does the gentleman propose to have retroactive legislation, changing that rate from 5 per cent to 3 per cent, making an inducement to everyone to have these payments deferred, regardless of their ability to pay? That is the issue in this matter. I am in favor of the moratorium, but I am in favor of the rate of interest now charged by the Secretary of the Interior, 5 per cent, rather than a low percentage rate of 3 per cent, which will be an inducement to all to take advantage, and have deferred the payment of construction charges in some instances for 40 years.

Mr. FRENCH. Let us consider the interest factor when we shall reach the bill itself.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was the gentleman present at that interview?

Mr. FRENCH. I was present.

Mr. STAFFORD. And we agreed to leave it to the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior under the present act to determine.

Mr. FRENCH. That was the compromise a year ago. Let me continue further with the broad reasons for the pending bill.

Conditions to-day are not better. Indeed, they are more serious than they were a year ago. Last summer and fall many farmers upon reclamation lands did not harvest their fruits or potatoes or other crops because they could not receive enough to justify the expenses of harvesting them. Many farmers invited those who were in need to come and help themselves without cost or upon the basis of a nominal charge. Most settlers upon reclamation projects are not able to meet the obligations that they have assumed; they simply can not meet them now. Most of these settlers will be forced to default in their payments.

I submit the Government has nothing to gain if the settlers are crowded off the lands and the lands turned over to others. A mortgage holder under similar circumstances believes his best chance lies with the one who has been on the land, who owes the mortgage, and who, if given an opportunity, can eventually meet his obligations.

There is another factor that we must not overlook: Under the reclamation policy the Government holds the first lien upon the land. The settler is not in position to borrow money. Most of the land is not patented. He could give no security other than that upon chattels; he may not turn to the Federal farm-loan banks for relief; he is separated from other farmers throughout the United States by these two conditions. He is not able to give adequate security to a private money lender or to obtain a Government loan.

CONSTRUCTION CHARGES

The irrigation farmers throughout the West have paid back to the reclamation fund more than $45,000,000 for construction charges besides about $27,000,000 for operation and maintenance. The Government has a vast investment that remains unpaid—about $180,000,000. I believe that most or all of this will be repaid. For the protection of this investment, from the standpoint of the Government, this moratorium should be granted, for, generally speaking, the Government's chance of recovering ultimately the money that it has invested in reclamation will be better through present settlers who understand how to farm by irrigation, who are familiar with crops, climatic conditions, the use of water, than it will have if present settlers be dispossessed of their lands and new settlers this year or during the next several years be invited to take their places.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to a moratorium if these people will go along on the rate of interest that I understood was agreed to a year ago. I was involved in that situation, and as I remember the rate it was to be 5 per cent, or such rate as the Secretary might fix.

Beyond the moratorium there is another feature in this bill. There is an extension of time as to a certain portion of the Uncompangre and Grand Valley reclamation projects. I understand that so far these projects have been total failures. There is proposed an extension of time within which construction work can be begun. No extension of time should be granted for construction work on reclamation projects. They should be allowed to lapse. The theory that we must go on and create more land to produce more crops to run down the value of the crops our folks are producing on land they own and for the irrigation of which they themselves provide, is absolutely ridiculous. It ought to stop right now.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Taylor]. He has not asked for this time but I yield it to him in order that he may explain this Uncompangre project to us.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the House to listen for two minutes. Every one of you gentlemen sometimes has something come up for consideration and you like to have the House pay attention to it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Does this bill provide for the beginning of construction on this project?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why, no. This Uncompanger project is the oldest project in the United States. It was the first one started. What the Government reclamation officials should have done when they built the project was to build proper drainage ditches to prevent the land from going to seep. The Government did not do it. Some of the land there now is water-logged. Two years ago I secured the passage of an act of Congress allowing the settlers on this project to spend the money they would otherwise pay to the Government on the original construction charges for the building of a drainage system for a period of five years and requiring them to spend at least $85,000 a year in that drainage work.

It will cost probably about $500,000 to build a proper drainage system. The Reclamation Service was not, and is not now, willing to do that drainage work or expend that money on it. But they are willing to let the water users do it. And that act of Congress referred to authorized the water users to pay no more money on construction charges for five years and to use all that money on their drainage work. Now, in this bill I am asking permission of Congress to give those water users on that project another year to commence the surveys and construction work on that drainage system. They want to redeem that water-logged land. We call it land that has gone to seep. It is not new land, and it is not costing the Government one dollar.

Mr. MICHENER. No, as I said; and the land on this project is water-logged.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes. A part of it is waterlogged, and much more of it will be water-logged if it is not drained.

Mr. MICHENER. It is on the project?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. It is water-logged now?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Some of it is; yes.

Mr. MICHENER. And Congress-

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I did not yield for a speech. The gentleman is misinformed.

Mr. MICHENER. I yielded to the gentleman from Colorado for the specific purpose of having him answer some questions.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Proceed with your question. Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact this is an old, water-logged project. This legislation provides for the rehabilitation of a project which is now out of commission. If passed it will, therefore, bring into use new land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. This project is not out of commission by any means. There are some 8,000 people now living within the boundaries of that project. Only part of it has become water-logged, and the Government not only permits but is anxious to have them drain that part of it. It is a going concern, but the people are poor. They can not sell their crops. They can not possibly pay for the cost of annual operations and maintenance and pay high taxes and do this drainage work this year. They have to pay some $3, or $4 an acre for the annual operation expenses. They have got to pay that, but they can not repay the Government the original cost of this project at the present time, and this bill simply gives them a moratorium on that drainage work this year. That is all there is to it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 5417) to extend the operation of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law," approved April 1, 1932.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 5417, with Mr. MEAD in the chair.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That in the administration of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projconstructed and operated under the reclamation proved April 1, 1932, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to extend the provisions of such act relating to certain directed to extend the provisions of such act relating to certain charges coming due for 1931 and to one-half of certain charges due for 1932, in like manner to the remaining one-half of such charges coming due for 1932 and to all of similar charges to become due for 1933, and to extend the provisions of section 3 of such act, (1) so far as they relate to the extension of time for beginning construction of a drainage system upon the Uncompander reclamation project, to one year from and after January 1, 1933, and (2) so far as they relate to certain charges upon or for the Uncompander and Grand Valley reclamation projects in the the Uncompangre and Grand Valley reclamation projects in the State of Colorado due and payable for the year 1932, in like manner to all similar charges due and payable for the year 1933: Provided, That the deferred charges shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum for the years specified in the act approved April 1, 1932, and as amended herein, which interest shall be paid at the same time the principal deferred herein is paid at the same time the principal deferred herein is paid.

SEC. 2. That the last line of section 10 of said act is amended by substituting "1936" for "1934."

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Under the rule, as I understand it, there are to be 30 minutes of general debate, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the acting chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT].

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I wish the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITTI would yield time first, if he cares to.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes. I begin by presenting this question from the standpoint of two of the great farm organizations. I have here a letter from the American Farm Bureau Federation. It is addressed to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Thomason]:

FEBRUARY 22, 1933.

Hon. R. E. THOMASON,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
DEAR MR. THOMASON: The American Farm Bureau Federation has followed with interest the hearings on S. 5417, providing for temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law. Our attitude, as hereto-fore expressed in the hearings, is favorable to such legislation on the ground that the relief petitioned for is necessary in view of the widespread distress occasioned mainly by the low price of agricultural commodities produced on the reclamation projects and the limited market therefor.

Since the United States is the creditor of the reclamation proj ects in this instance, it is but natural that the farmers should turn to Congress for relief which, in our opinion, should be granted with the same spirit of consideration that private creditors are now in many instances demonstrating.

Very truly yours,

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION, CHESTER H. GRAY, Washington Representative.

I want the House to notice particularly the statement contained in the second paragraph of this letter.

To enlarge upon the thought just for a moment, we are receiving from the Senate another bill to grant relief on all farm mortgages, and here is a class of people who do not owe these obligations to mortgage companies or to banks, but who owe them to the United States. In order to secure the same sort of relief we are all agreed must be given to farmers generally, they must turn to their creditor, who is the United States.

I have here a letter from another one of the great farm organizations, the National Grange, and signed by Fred Brenckman:

As representative of the National Grange I am deeply interested in the proposed legislation granting temporary relief to water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law, as set forth in S. 5417.

The farmers on reclamation projects, in common with all other farmers in the country, are facing a crisis which demands the utmost consideration from their respective creditors. Under the circumstances our organization sympathizes with this request for relief, and it is our hope that the legislation may be speedily expected.

You have already listened to the reading of a letter written by the Director of the Reclamation Service during the discussion of the rule by Mr. Thomason. That letter outlines what would happen to these people if this legislation is not passed. I recall to your attention just one thing in that letter, and that is that a law passed by this Congress would make it impossible for water to be delivered to many of these people to enable them to remain on their farms and maintain their homes, unless this extension of time is granted or they make payment of money they do not have.

With the United States of America the creditor in this case, and with the necessity recognized everywhere in the country that there must be relief to the farmers from the burden of mortgages at this time, surely the way for us to set the example to the great mortgage companies and to the banks is to do this thing which only we can do, because the Government is here the creditor. We in this way will be setting the pace. I should not say that exactly, because on all these reclamation projects evidence before the committee shows that farm-mortgage companies and local banks and others who are creditors are already granting such relief as is outlined in this bill. Instead of really leading, we are only following when we do this for the benefit of the people on these reclamation projects.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. RICH. I think the House is in sympathy with granting a moratorium; but if we cut the interest rate to 3 per cent, does not the gentleman believe that 60 per cent of the people on these projects will not pay anything to the Government, and the Government then is granting this relief whether they need it or not, because of their desire to get everything for nothing?

Mr. LEAVITT. Of course, they do not have any desire to get everything for nothing, to begin with; but, as to the rate of interest, the tendency with regard to all legislation to-day having to do with farm mortgages is to recognize that the existing interest rates have been too high. This is one of the difficulties that face the farmers at this time. so far as digging out of the present unfortunate situation is concerned. Here again is a time when our Congress, acting as the creditor of these people, can set the right example and give them a lower rate of interest, and in this way help bring about a readjustment of interest charges in many other cases.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact that the construction charges that are deferred will be deferred until the end of the contract period, which in some instances are as long as 40 years?

Mr. LEAVITT. They pay interest at the end of that

Mr. STAFFORD. They pay 5 per cent interest on deferred charges under existing law.

Mr. LEAVITT. That is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the rate determined by the Secretary of the Interior under existing law as a reasonable charge and now you are granting a premium by making it 3 per cent, so as to induce everybody to take advantage of this lower rate. Who would not take money to-day at 3 per cent? I would, you would, and everyone else would, if we could get it, take money at 3 per cent.

Mr. LEAVITT. The question is asked with respect to the statement that some can pay and some can not. That must be answered in this way. The Government requires a joint obligation under these contracts. For years the Government dealt with individuals on the reclamation projects but found that this was impracticable and almost impossible, and the Congress enacted laws which require all the people on a reclamation project to enter into a joint contract with a joint obligation. Thus it is impossible, under the law that was passed by this Congress, to segregate people individually on the various projects. There is no way this can be done without completely changing existing law.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are some of these projects where they have not availed themselves of this extension, because they are in good circumstances. You are now really offering them an inducement to take this favor from the Government when the Government is not in a position to grant such a favor to everyone at an interest rate of 3 per cent.

Mr. LEAVITT. My judgment is that some of them will not take advantage of this if they find themselves in a position where they do not have to do it, but most of them must have this relief.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. This bill does not carry any appropriation. It does not lessen the security of the Government. It has the admission of the Secretary of the Interior that the people on these projects will be without water unless further relief is granted.

The only thing that this bill does is to extend the law passed last year for another year and a half. The Government does not weaken its security, and it is only doing for the farmers in the reclamation sections of the country what we have already done or undertaken to do in the way of relief legislation for farmers in other sections of the country.

I have been much impressed with the forcible argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia], as I am with nearly everything he says, that the only hope for the farmers and the debtors of this country is a reduction of interest charges.

We have assisted the Federal land banks and propose to help them more in order that they may extend their loans to farmers. Vast loans have been made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to renew and extend commercial loans. In this case the Government is the creditor and it, of all people, ought to be fair, just, and lenient.

Mr. RICH. I would like to ask the gentleman if this will not induce people who are able to pay to withhold payment to the Government for the service?

Mr. THOMASON. Probably so; but the gentleman must remember that this is a community rather than an individual affair in its operations. If the Government could pick out an individual farmer who was in need and grant him relief, all well and good, but the trouble is when you have a big reservoir from which you are furnishing water everybody has to be treated alike. There will be no economy in refusing aid to these people and forcing them to abandon their homes.

Mr. RICH. As the gentleman knows, everybody has his hand out for something from the Federal Government. We have got to stop that and only provide for those who are in need of relief.

Mr. THOMASON. I undertake to say that there are 95 per cent of the people in the reclamation districts who can not pay their construction charges. They have much higher charges and taxes than the farmers who live in nonirrigated sections. They can get no relief from any other source. The Government is amply secured. Interest rates must be reduced, and this is a fine opportunity for the Government to make a start in that direction. This is a just bill, and I am sure will be passed with little opposition.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Lea].

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, the first feature of this bill that should have the attention of Members of the House is that it does not propose to cancel one cent of obligation due the Federal Government. In the second place, the moratorium on charges due the Government is for construction charges only and not for maintenance and operation.

The third point is that the interest imposed covers the period of delay. It is true it does not cover the whole period the principal is to run. As all of you know, the funds expended for reclamation are without interest to the Federal Government.

This bill proposes to impose interest not for the whole period but simply for the period of delay provided for in the bill.

I regard this measure as important to these reclamation projects. Under the present circumstances I believe it is for the best interest of the Government to provide for this extension of time for payment.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. What does the gentleman say about the Uncompangre provision?

Mr. LEA. I am not in possession of the details necessary to inform you as to that project.

Mr. MICHENER. I want to say that if the Government goes into that, it might as well furnish fertilizer to make land productive.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It would take five years to bring that under cultivation, and cost $500,000.

Practically every member knows that the average farm in the United States in the last two years has not been able to pay the expense of operation. That is true of these farms on reclamation projects. The farms do not afford a source of income to pay these charges under the average conditions of their owners. Most of these owners are not so favorably financed as to be able to pay such charges from outside income. Therefore, failure to pass this bill does not mean the charges will be paid; it would, in most cases, mean default.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Eaton].

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be such a dispute as to the source of the funds from which these projects are made, that I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein certain citations from the official records to show the source of the funds going to these projects.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I wish to remind you that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] last Tuesday designated as "conventional fictions and unsound claims" the statement that the money used in the reclamation fund came out of the lands and revenues produced from the very States in which reclamation projects are found. He argues that—Reclamation States are no more entitled to that sum than is the city of New York or the State of New York entitled to the customs receipts that are paid at the port of New York.

It is almost futile to attempt to answer such an argument, for on its face it shows that the speaker was not accurately using available facts. I must therefore remind the gentleman that the reclamation of arid lands in the West is but a part of the forest and other conservation policies which were started 30 years ago. Settlement of lands in the national forests was curtailed, and among other things it was, and still is, insisted that these reclamation projects would be much more beneficial to the entire country than to permit further clearing of forest lands for homesteads.

After all these years, practically every prophecy of excessive cost, necessity for further Federal aid in times of money stringency and of oversuperintendence by Federal employees has come true, and to-day we hear gentlemen from the State of New York resisting this bill which arises solely out of the financial necessity which has caused the reclamation farmers to request that a moratorium be given for the ensuing crop season, and that they have water furnished them, notwithstanding they are in arrears on previously required payments for construction, maintenance, and operation.

The relation of irrigation development in the arid States carried on by the Reclamation Bureau to the irrigation carried on by private enterprise with no relation to the bureau is not understood in the East. Because of that there are several implications in the speech of Congressman Culkins that give a wrong impression of what has taken place. For example, Congressman Culkins holds that the Reclamation Bureau is largely responsible for all the irrigation development. He evidently does not realize how much had taken place before the reclamation act was passed in 1902. All of the Spanish irrigation development in the Southwest, the irrigation development of the Mormons in Utah, the important irrigation development in eastern Colorado were largely carried out before the Federal reclamation act was passed.

When Federal reclamation came on the scene, its place was supposed to be that of doing things that private enterprise could not do. Now it is realized that its important function is to conserve the water supply so that irrigation districts already established can continue to exist and be prosperous. One reason for this is the fact that in the early development the cheapest way to bring lands under irrigation was to ignore reservoirs and depend on the unregulated flow of the stream. In that way a great deal more land has been brought under irrigation and a great many more homes are on that land than the unregulated water of the river will provide for.

What those highly developed districts now need is the conservation of the flood waters to give them late water, and Federal reclamation is now confining its attention to that problem.

Take, for example, the last reservoir completed on the Weber River in Utah. That reservoir is to hold the floods of the Weber that used to go to waste. It supplies country settled by the Mormons, some of it 70 years ago. In those 70 years the kind of farming has changed, and that change has made a new requirement. That country used to be a wheat country requiring early irrigation; now it is largely a vegetable and beet country that requires water for late irrigation, and that change makes the reservoirs which could once be ignored indispensable to the prosperity of those homes. All the work in Utah is building reservoirs to furnish late water to farms whose average age will be nearly 50 years. The destruction of those homes will be ruinous to the West and equally disastrous to the East.

To call activities of this kind a crime can only be done where the actual situation is not realized. The crime would be to ignore the distress that now exists and to put a stop to this beneficent scheme of rescue work now being carried on.

Coming to administrative matters, it is a mistake to say that expenditures are being made without the approval of Congress. That was only true in the earlier years of the operation of the Bureau of Reclamation. For 17 years every dollar from the reclamation fund spent on construction or operation of works has had to be submitted to the Budget and has to be included in appropriation bills passed by both Houses of Congress. No control could be more complete than that required in section 16 of the act of August 13, 1914. All new work undertaken since 1926 requires a certificate from the Secretary of the Interior that the work is feasible and will probably return the money expended, and that certificate has to be approved by the President before the work can be undertaken.

The amount of money expended is also less than that stated by Congressman Culkin. From the beginning of the operation of this act in 1902 up to June 30, 1932, a period of 30 years, accretions to the reclamation fund from the States are $153,659,346, as shown in the table given below. To this has been added $44,500,000, representing money repaid by the water users into the construction fund, and in addition $15,000,000 borrowed from the Treasury of the United States.

Twenty-five million dollars was borrowed but $10,000,000 has been repaid, and the loan requires the repayment of the entire sum. This $15,000,000 is, therefore, the only sum contributed directly from the Treasury. The remainder of the money spent in this development has come either from payments of water users or accretions to the fund from the sales of public lands or leases, oil royalties, and income from Federal water-power plants.

When it is considered that this expenditure has rescued many communities from ruinous conditions and so enabled them to maintain their homes and live on the land, and its relation to the betterment of life, cheapening the cost of living to those who operate the mines, the mills, the railroads of that country, no one who knows the facts can help to recognize that Federal reclamation has been one of the stabilizing influences whose benefits have been worth many times its cost.

The table appearing on page 4756 of the Congressional RECORD, for repaying the cost of the irrigation works to the reclamation fund, needs an explanation. The longest definite period recognized by the Reclamation Bureau is 40 years; but there are a limited number of projects that in 1926 were given the privilege of electing to repay the money due the Government by a percentage of the value of the crops grown, that being 5 per cent of the gross crop value. Because crops are almost unsalable now, because the prices are so low, the period of repayment on these projects is in all cases more than 40 years; but if crop prices should improve, the period of repayment will be shortened, so that the table, wherein the period is given as more than 40 years. represents the longest period for returning the money to the fund that can be reasonably anticipated. In the case of the Vale, Owyhee, and Baker projects the water users have executed contracts which provide for the payment of the construction charges in 40 years.

There is a widespread mistaken belief that crops grown on these reclamation projects compete with the crops of the entire country. Nothing could be more mistaken. In the northern part of the arid region the most dependable and satisfactory crop is the sugar beet; and since we have to import sugar, increasing that crop will not be injurious to the farmers in any other part of the country. All it does is to save us from sending money abroad.

The same is true of the cotton. The irrigated areas are the only places in this country where long-staple cotton is now commercially grown. The staple on all the cotton produced on these irrigation projects is an inch or more in length, whereas over three-fourths of the cotton produced in the United States is less than 1 inch in length. The irrigated country does not produce all the long-staple cotton we need. What we do grow simply lessens the amount of money we have to send to Egypt.

The criticism of the Reclamation Era could only be made by one who does not understand the life on the farms of these widely separated oases. The people on the farms are tied together by their common tie of dependency on the water supply furnished, by their common interest in the operation of the irrigation works which they are under contract to pay for, and by their common need to improve their methods and practices in a form of agriculture which to many of them was a strange and new method when they began. The Reclamation Era is, in the best sense, a family magazine which brings to the people living in these remote and widely separated sections contact with each other in an understanding of what has taken place not only on their own project but on other projects, and is the most effective possible means of educating them into better modes of living and farming. Its cost is insignificant; its value is hard to properly estimate.

Failure to recognize these things is an injustice to an organization that has won the recognition of all irrigated countries in the world for its leadership in methods of construction, and which is entitled to the grateful appreciation of the entire country. The fact that during the 30 years of its existence there has been no dishonesty; that, on the contrary, the most scrupulous integrity in construction and fidelity to the Nation's interest in the operation of these works is one of the outstanding evidences of the ability of the Government to serve the people in their everyday affairs.

In conclusion I wish to refer again to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] first referred to. (See p. 4756 and following of the Congressional Rec-ORD of February 22.) His implication was that $300,-000,000 had been poured into reclamation by the Government, and if there had been no reclamation activity, this money would have gone into the United States Treasury. Instead of this being true, by the following statement it will be seen that up to June 30, 1932, $98,612,943.08 has been paid by water users and others, a creation of reclamation, and instead of being charged should be credited. Had there been no reclamation there would have been no payments by water users. Instead of $300,000,000, the amount set aside for the permanent use of reclamation is $153,659,346.20. This amount plus $15,000,000, the unpaid loan from the Federal Treasury, is the most that can be regarded as the Government's participation, and that sum is all to be repaid as the years go by.

Congress has recognized for many years the interest of the States in its disposal of public lands within those States and endowed States with land and money for schools, roads, and other public purposes. The contribution to the reclamation fund is a recognition of the immense obstacles to settlement and development that result from the desert condition of these lands and the need for their irrigation. Even this does not adequately recognize the obstacles in the development which the arid States have to surmount. What Mr. Culkin terms as a fiction is an attempt to deal with the serious reality by continuing the policy followed by Congress for many years.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, when my time was interrupted by the gavel of the Speaker a short time ago I was about to call attention to the fact that it is from the payment of these construction charges that the Reclamation Service gets millions of dollars to complete the work of construction on the other uncompleted reclamation projects, and that the testimony before the Senate committee was that if the payment of these reconstruction charges is deferred it will require an appropriation of something like $2,000,000 annually to continue the necessary work of completing construction on these uncompleted reclamation projects. When the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez] introduced his bill he left out the provision about this lower rate of interest. They were then willing to have the present law declaring construction charges for 1931 and the first half of 1932 remain as it is so far as interest charges are concerned. Under existing law the Secretary of the Interior was privileged to charge a rate of interest which in his judgment was best for the service generally. He fixed that at 5 per cent. Now, we find these grabbers coming in and getting their nose under the tent and wanting to make it retroactive, so that it will require an appropriation of $2,000,000 annually. They want to cut down the rate of interest from 5 per cent to 3 per cent and continue that rate, so that it will be a premium on well-managed irrigation projects that are able to pay to defer these charges. Where is there any project or individual in the country who will not defer the payment of his debts if he can get money at 3 per cent?

At the conference that I had in company with those who were in favor of this legislation a year ago, that was the crux of the matter—whether we should leave it to the Secretary of the Interior to determine a rate that would not be an inducement, or whether it would be wise to charge such a low rate that it would be an inducement, and the Secretary put it at 5 per cent. Even then there was fear that there would be many who would avail themselves of it. If you leave in this proviso, which I shall move to strike out, you will offer an inducement to every irrigation-water user to defer construction charges until the end of the program-40 years in some instances. If you have any regard at all for the interest of the Treasury, you will not reduce the interest from 5 per cent to 3 per cent. We are not insisting to-day that they do more than pay a reasonable rate, so that it will not be an inducement for those in a position to pay to postpone their payments. Where is the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] with his project going to get the money to continue the construction work when the $2,000,000 expected annually to be received from these construction charges is not paid. He will have to provide for such an appropriation in the Interior Department appropriation bill and vote the money. The reclamation fund now is virtually depleted, as there is only about $600,000 remaining, I believe. With this provision it will be still further depleted, so that there will not be any money at all.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman ought to be willing to pay a reasonable interest charge. This has worked equitably in every instance. We are not trying to deny these irrigation districts deferment of their construction charges, but we do not want them to play the whole hog at the expense of the taxpayers of the country. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The taxpayers of the country have nothing to do with the reclamation fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. They will have to appropriate $2,000,600 a year if this matter goes through, and the gentleman knows it. The gentleman knows that it is highly probable none of this money will ever be paid by the irrigation districts. Their policy has been consistent, to defer and extend the payments, so that easy Uncle Sam will remit the payments entirely, as Congress last session did as to the projects on Indian reservations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Fulmer].

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, while I have no irrigation | projects in my State or in the South, I am absolutely in favor of the passage of this bill. I am surprised at the statement of my friend from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] that we are now proposing under this bill to bring in for the purpose of increasing production additional land. In connection with these projects the Government has spent millions of dollars in reclaiming these lands, and the purpose of this bill is to extend to these farmers living on these projects the same line of relief that we are to-day extending to every line of business-railroads and other corporations.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. FULMER. No; I refuse to yield. We are now attempting to render assistance to farmers who are trying to retain their homes. These farmers are not asking for a dole or a gift at the hands of their Government, but just a little time in which to make payments due to the Government. Why, my friends, there is a bill now pending before this Congress proposing to appropriate millions of dollars for the purpose of taking back to the farm people who are unemployed in the large industrial centers of the country.

The very people who are opposing this type of legislation on the grounds that it would increase production are the people who are sponsoring the legislation referred to a minute ago. That is, the moving back to the farm of the unemployed, which certainly would mean the increasing of production and at the expense of farmers who are now struggling to carry on and retain their homes.

Some days ago I introduced a bill proposing to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act for the purpose of refunding and refinancing obligations of drainage, irrigation, and levee districts. Many of these districts, where we have some of the best farm lands in the country and where we have some of the best farmers to be found, especially in the South, are to-day facing bankruptcy. In other words, if we are unable to get relief along the lines suggested in my bill, either in this session of Congress or the extra session, many of these districts will pass into the hands of receivers and thousands of the very best farmers that we have in the South will be placed in tenant homes and in the already large lines of the unemployed.

These projects are distributed in 34 States in the Union, and the relief asked for under my bill concerns 5,000,000 farmers. This legislation, along with refinancing of land mortgage indebtedness, extending payments over a long period of years, and reducing interest rates, to my mind, will do more to rehabilitate agriculture and bring about normal prosperity than anything that we can do here in Congress in the way of relief.

I find that it is an easy matter to pass almost any type of bill in the interest of well-organized groups, for instance, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which has been pouring millions into the pockets of special interests, corporations, and railroads; but when it comes to farm legis-lation, in the interest of that great mass of people that are unorganized and who are unable to lobby around Congress, or have paid lobbyists, we find it almost impossible to get consideration upon the same.

I note with a great deal of interest the opposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] to the reduction of interest rates as carried in this bill from 5 to 3 per cent. I think it is getting high time that Members of Congress recognize the fact that Congress should lead the way in reducing interest rates on the agricultural interests, which will, no doubt, be an inducement on the part of banks and others doing business with farmers to reduce interest rates.

I am hoping that this bill will pass, and pass without being amended, because, knowing the problems of these people, which are absolutely in line with the problems of my farmers in the South, who are living in these drainage districts, it is absolutely necessary to grant this relief.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina expires.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to insert in the RECORD a bill introduced by me January 3, 1933, proposing to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, for the purpose of giving relief to drainage districts.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There were no objections.

The bill referred to follows:

H. R. 13996

A bill authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to aid in refunding or refinancing obligations of drainage, irrigation, and levee districts

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 201 of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and" and by adding after paragraph (5) a new paragraph, as follows:

"(6) To make loans to drainage districts, irrigation districts,

"(6) To make loans to drainage districts, irrigation districts, and levee districts, to aid in refunding or refinancing their obligations, through the purchase and retirement of such obligations or otherwise, if such obligations were issued in connection with self-liquidating projects of such districts."

SEC. 2. Paragraph (g) of such section is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That loans made under paragraph (6) of subsection (a) may be made for a period not exceeding 50 years and the corporation is authorized to permit not exceeding 50 years and the corporation is authorized to permit payments on any such loan to begin at any time not to exceed five years after such loan is made."

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to ask why it is that certain people on the floor of this House, who evidence considerable concern about the farmers generally, undertake, every time the word "reclamation" is written before a farmer's name, to pick on those farmers. I am wondering if it is not that the reclamation farmer is located in relatively few congressional districts. There is nothing different between the financing of a reclamation farm and the financing of any other farm. They are selling their produce at a loss. They have interest to meet; they have taxes to meet; they have families to educate; they are operating farms. They are not asking to produce more crops. They are asking to be permitted to live on their farms and produce the crops such as they have been producing. They are not asking anything other than this administration and the incoming administration have promised farmers generally. So in the two minutes I have I want to point out to the House that this bill does for the reclamation farmers that which private creditors have been asked to do for their debtors. We have placed the credit of the Government behind movement after movement to extend credit to the farmer who does not deal directly with the Government. Here the Government is being asked to deal lightly with one of its debtors, as private creditors are being asked all over the United States to do. Do not pick on the reclamation farmer. Take the word "reclamation" from in front of his name and do the same with him as we do with every other farmer that comes before us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Simmons] has expired.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to say something in favor of this bill. I want to speak especially to my colleagues from the far South and those from the cities. I express the hope that if this measure affected the people of my section of the country as it does the people of the West, all of our southern Members would be supporting the bill.

I am supporting it for two reasons. One is I feel at this time that the farming class of people must have the same kind of moratorium to help them over the crisis which they face at this time with their mortgages, that other interests have received. The second reason I am supporting it at this time is because it is an emergency matter and can not wait for the new administration. I wish some of the people who have not had an opportunity to do so, could go out into the far West and see the importance of this to the farmers of that section of the country. This takes no money directly out of the Treasury, and yet it extends to the farmers far less help than some of the legislation that has been passed here extends aid to big business. Of course, I do not take credit for supporting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but I hope that every Member of this House who supported the Reconstruction Finance Corporation measure, as I say I did not, will support this measure and extend this needed relief to the farmers of the far West. Mr. Chairman, I feel that those of us here when we face a question like this, if we really understand the need of such legislation, would support it and support it whole-heartedly. Whenever some section of our country is in the distress that that Western section is now in on account of the condition of these irrigation projects at this time, faced with the proposition of losing their all, it should have legislation of this kind, and should be supported by every Member of this House. I hope that every Member will support it. This will not only be a life-saver to these people, but will save the Government also of dispossessing those people and having this property on the hands of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Patterson] has expired.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield one and one-half minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Martin].

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I want to say I can speak on this matter in a disinterested way, because I come from a city district. I sat as a member of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and listened to all the testimony given on this bill, and I shall take the brief time that I have to tell you about the 3 per cent interest charge.

We all realize that if these farmers are to meet their obligations their interest rates must be reduced. Now, this is a good place to make a beginning. The information came to our Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation that the 5 and 6 per cent that was placed in the present bill was put there on the insistence of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford]. Now the gentleman tries to put it onto the Treasury Department. It was not there at all. The Treasury Department originally wanted to put this interest rate down to 2 or 3 per cent, but it was on account of the objection of this House that is was run up to 5 or 6 per cent. These farmers are now so loaded with charges that they can not meet heavy interest charges and survive. It would be disastrous to the irrigation States like Colorado and Idaho to drive the farmers off of those projects. If that were so, the country would go back to the coyotes and sagebrush.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time, one and one-half minutes, to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. Colton].

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be no particular objection on the part of the Members of the House to the granting of the moratorium that is provided for in this bill. The debate seems to center around the rate of interest. May I say that in one sense the reclamation farmers are worse off than any other class of farmers, because they have the construction charges and the maintenance charges of these reclamation projects to pay. It therefore follows that a farmer who has this additional burden is worse off than the one who has his farm unencumbered, if there are any such. He does have a great burden in these times of low prices.

The matter of the interest rate is only a matter for a year or two, and, it seems to me, with agriculture in its present deplorable and regrettable condition, that it is not exactly in keeping with the dignity of Congress to quibble over the question of a 2 per cent difference in the rate of interest to be charged farmers in distress. No man who can afford to pay his construction charges will refrain from doing it because of the reduced rate of interest. He is too anxious to pay his debts. On the contrary, he will try to keep up his payments. This is a bad time for the farmer to get in debt, and no one realizes that more than the farmer himself.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COLTON. I yield.

Mr. FINLEY. What rate of interest do our foreign debtors pay?

Mr. COLTON. One and one-half per cent, in most instances. Certainly not more than 3 per cent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CHAVEZ. It is not only the farmer in the reclamation district who is interested in this legislation. The Government itself is interested. If you do not pass this bill you will place the Government in the position of having invested millions of dollars in these irrigation projects and then not giving the farmers an opportunity to meet their obligations to the Government. Would it not pay the Government to defer the payments and keep stable citizens, the farmers, there who will eventually pay, than it would to have them default and let the investment go to waste?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no disposition anywhere on the floor of the House not to defer the construction charges. The whole fight is centering upon the interest rate.

Mr. CHAVEZ. All right; with reference to interest: When the reclamation policy was first initiated it was intended that the construction charges would be paid within 10 years. An extension of time to 20 years without interest was given, due to economic conditions. So, this is nothing new. Later on the time was extended to 27 years, and in some of the districts to 40 years without interest. Now that the farmers of those districts are in worse condition than ever before, it is suggested that they be required to pay 5 per cent interest for three years.

Both committees of the Senate and the House in joint session came to the conclusion that inasmuch as the districts have never heretofore paid any interest 3 per cent interest would be sufficient on deferred payment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law," approved April 1, 1932, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to extend the provisions of such act relating to certain charges coming due for 1931 and to one-half of certain charges due for 1932, in like manner to the remaining one-half of such charges coming due for 1932 and to all of similar charges to become due for 1933, and to extend the provisions of section 3 of such act, (1) so far as they relate to the extension of time for beginning construction of a drainage system upon the Uncompahare reclamation project, to one year from and after January 1, 1933, and (2) so far as they relate to certain charges upon or for the Uncompahare and Grand Valley reclamation projects in the State of Colorado due and payable for the year 1932, in like manner to all similar charges due and payable for the year 1933: Provided, That the deferred charges shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum for the years specified in the act approved April 1, 1932, and as amended herein, which interest shall be paid at the same time the principal deferred herein is paid.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill. My only regret is that we have not passed more legislation of this kind during the present session of Congress. To my mind, if we are to relieve the country from the present awful depression, we must grant relief to the farmers, not only of the irrigation districts of the West, but of the agricultural sections of the East and South.

Many farms are now being bought in by long-term loan companies and are going to wreck and ruin. The houses are going to pieces. The fences are being destroyed and the farms are growing up in weeds. If the farmers are to be saved, it will be necessary for the next Congress to put over a reclamation project, not only for the farms of the West but for the farms of the entire country. This kind of a program should have been adopted two or three years ago. A most serious situation is arising throughout the entire Nation. The farmers of the West have the same kind of problems we have in the South.

A nation-wide catastrophe is upon us. It is time to adopt the most heroic farm-relief policy if we are to save the farmers and save our Nation.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I do not believe there is anyone in the House opposed to helping those who are in need, at least I have not heard anyone voice opposition; but does the gentleman believe we ought to grant a privilege to those who are able to pay the tolls that are required of them by the Federal Government when they can afford to do so? That is the only question before the House at this time, it seems to me.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. The present depression is so widespread I think we should put over a program to give relief to all farmers, including even those who are able to pay off their indebtedness at the present time. The depressed condition is so general and so serious that we must work out some program by which these farmers can pay off their indebtedness and, if possible, we must find a way to reduce not only the principal of their indebtedness but also their interest rate.

For my part I would be glad were it possible to work out at once a program whereby they could obtain money through a proper monetization of farm products and farm lands without the payment of interest, much like the national banks of the country issue money at the present time. I have heretofore discussed this proposition rather fully and shall refer to it again in a few minutes.

We are not approaching this question in the proper manner. We should do all we can for such relief as is provided in this bill and go much further and find the real cause of the depression and remove the cause.

To my mind, the real cause is most apparent and its removal will to a very large extent solve our economic problems.

Mr. Chairman, I can not, for the life of me, see how anyone with any reasoning power who has at all studied the proposition can have any doubt on earth as to the real, outstanding, dominating, all-powerful cause of the present depression. Neither can I see how anyone can honestly believe that the depression can in any way be solved without removing the chief cause of the depression.

For years and years I have urged with all my God-given faculties that the overcentralization of financial and political power in our Nation is an awful menace to our free institutions. To-day this menace has become an all-consuming, powerful, destructive force, more powerful and dangerous to our people than all the armies of all the world, and will destroy our people to the last living man, woman, and child and wreck our Government unless stopped by the most immediate, determined, and drastic opposition. And yet the men of our Nation who constitute this juggernaut of destruction are not relenting or becoming gorged with the awful plunder and carnage of their hands, but are using every possible strategy to augment their power and to make more certain and final their destruction of the last vestige of human liberty and free government.

Can anyone question the awful power of the big banking institutions of the Nation? Listen to this-it is admitted on every hand that two banks in New York City have a strangle hold on the financial and economic life of the Nation, touching either directly or indirectly every man, woman, and child, not only of our country but practically of the whole world. Here are only a part of the facts. Members of the board of directors of the Chase National Bank hold directorships in other institutions to the following extent: 18 banks, 12 insurance companies, 32 manufacturing corporations, 17 railroad companies, 19 public utilities, and 21 miscellaneous corporations. In turn these banks in which the Chase National Bank has one or more directors have one or more directors in 104 other banks, 142 insurance companies, 360 manufacturing corporations, 234 transportation corporations, which includes also street railways, steamship, and aviation corporations, 266 public utilities, and 569 miscellaneous corporations.

The board of directors of the National City Bank of New York City have one or more of their members as directors in 7 aviation companies, 41 other banks, 44 insurance companies, 102 manufacturing corporations, 29 transportation companies, 115 public-utility corporations, and 104 miscellaneous corporations. Now, these banks in which the National City Bank has one or more directors, have one or more directors in 4,019 other banks, public utilities, insurance companies, transportation companies, manufacturing corporations, and miscellaneous corporations.

On the 25th of this month, in a radio address, Mr. John A. Simpson, president of the National Farmers Union, after detailing the facts just mentioned by me, further said:

Investigation reveals these interlocking directorates, both in banking and industry, extend into foreign countries. It further reveals that it extends to every automobile concern with the exception of Ford. It shows it includes practically every railroad, ship company, and aviation company in the United States. It includes practically every public utility in the United States. It includes a majority of the insurance companies of the United States. It includes every line of manufacturing. It reveals there is scarcely such a thing as an independent concern in the United States. Just a few big bankers completely control commerce, industry, and transportation.

And yet this is only a glimpse behind the curtain. It only discloses in a small way the strangle hold of big finance on the very throats of our people. It requires no superior wisdom to see how these two banks alone can destroy any bank or corporation or other business that is not subservient to their will and which seeks to operate on an independent basis.

Are these banks parties to a traitorous design to wreck all banks in the Nation except such as they wish to exist and then by a branch-banking scheme take over the whole banking business and along with it the ownership of all property in our country—farm lands included—which they wish and thus enslave the American people to the last man, woman, and child? It looks this way and the awful danger of the situation is that the majority of Congress seems to approve this kind of thing. This is a hard statement and I hesitate before I use it. I hope I am mistaken, but I can not see how I can be, in view of the failure here to remedy these matters. I certainly hope that the new Congress will have enough men here, who have the interest of their country, and only their country, at heart to save our Nation and restore our Government to our people.

This financial group either have or are seeking the control of all the big newspapers, and the smaller ones, along with all radio communications, and endeavoring to get into our schools and teach our children to be subservient as slaves to the autocratic power of these monarchs of finance. They are now using the radio in every way possible. Before the days of the radio, these big corporations reached our people in every way possible and employed lecturers who sought every opportunity to obtain audiences in the schools, on the lecture platforms, and otherwise, and thus spread the propaganda of the big financial interest.

Let me relate an incident which impressed this on my mind more fully than ever before. During the latter part of the summer of 1927, my colleague, Congressman Swing, of California, and myself were sitting together on a Southern Pacific railway train en route from Klamath Falls, Oreg., to San Francisco, and two men occupying the seat just back of us began to tell how they were paid to influence the people in behalf of the big public utilities corporations. They talked so they could be easily heard by us and seemed glad of their work, in this respect, in the schools, and on the lecture platforms.

This powerful corporate group, if not stopped, will, in a little while, have the complete control of the newspapers, almost without exception, all the radio communications, all the literature that goes into our homes and schools, all the motion pictures; will own or control every vestige of the land and other property in the country, and the heads of these institutions will be the most autocratic monarchs that ever controlled a subjugated people. By the way of parenthesis let me say this is the reason why these corporations and their subsidized press are so bitterly opposed to all efforts to keep the radio as the mouthpiece of the common people, to inform them of the real facts concerning their government. This is why it is so hard to get the real truth to the people through the big dailies and smaller papers of the country. This is exactly why it is apparently impossible to get the motion picture out from under the influence and absolute control of the big corporations. And this is why the press and the big corporations wish it was impossible for the poor man in Congress, who will not be subservient to them, to have the right to reach his people through the Congressional Record and the free mailing privilege.

This big group of bankers, as a part and parcel of their nefarious schemes, are now determined to relieve themselves of all income taxes, all inheritance taxes, all estate taxes, all corporation taxes, and all other taxes of any consequence, and force the average individual citizen and the poor of the country to bear the entire Federal tax burden under the euphoneous name of the manufacturers' sales tax.

This same group of big bankers and their allied interest look at every proposition from their own cold-blooded standpoint, and never fail to do what they believe will help them accumulate more money and secure more political power, regardless of the consequences to the average individual citizen. This is why most of them favor the return of the open saloon. It will enable them to make more money and will become a powerful additional political agency in their hands to be used by them in their further efforts to get complete control of all local, State, and Federal government. This is why most of them have opposed all appropriations to enforce the prohibition laws and why they have in every way possible helped to heroize criminals and lead our children so far as possible to become strong-drink addicts. This is why they have done all within their power to bring the prohibition law into disrepute and hold law-enforcement officials up to ridicule and contempt. They want the prohibition laws to become a failure so they can secure the return of the saloon. And this is the reason why these same men, if the saloon should return, will be the strongest supporters of large appropriations to be used in the capture and severe punishment of all who seek to make home-brew or other intoxicating drinks for home use or for sale in opposition to the saloon. These men who now claim to be the friends of those who violate the law and who have pictured them in the papers and the motion picture and over the radio as an oppressed people, who are being pursued by vicious enforcement officials using appropriations that ought not to be made, will at once turn about face and ask for the most rigid enforcement of the law against all who interfere with their business. If anyone after the return of the saloon wants their favor and wants to engage in the illicit liquor business, it will be necessary to help the big, selfish interest try to break down some prohibition law of a dry State or county so they can enter with the saloon or go in partnership with this interest in their liquor business. The legalized liquor traffic will rise up in great indignation against anyone who dares to interfere with their desire to use the saloon as the means of adding to their political and financial prestige. They will feel that anyone that dares to oppose them should be hunted down like an awful wild beast and that those who try to get a few dollars in this way for the support of their wives and children should be shot down like rats.

These big bankers are now holding up their hands and saying: "We want sound money." The trouble is that they now have sound money; they have all the sound money that is in existence. And, the trouble with the rest of us is that we also want sound money and do not have it and can not get it. It is just as necessary that all the people have sound money as it is for the big bankers to have it.

It is not the soundness of the money that I object to, but my complaint is against the control of the currency being in the hands of the big bankers. There is the rub. This control enables the big bankers of the Nation, at their own will, to make or break the people of the country, just when and where it suits them in furtherance of their own selfish financial program. Congress has abdicated its powers in the favor of the big banking interests and made them much more powerful than Congress, the President, and all the other citizens of the United States in or out of office. The big bankers have the power to destroy the people and their property and their rights by deflating the amount of the currency in actual circulation and thus inflating its value and at the same time take from the people all of this very life blood of commerce and of the Nation. Not only has Congress voted this all-powerful privilege to the big bankers of the Nation but in addition is taxing the people white to raise money to pay the bankers an enormous bounty to exercise this special privilege.

In support of this, let me quote further from Mr. Simpson's radio address as follows:

The national bank act provides that national banks may loan to the United States, receiving for such loan a Government interest-bearing bond. The Government will then print for the national bank an equal amount of blank national bank notes, the bank leaving the Government bond as a guaranty that the bank shall stay open ready to redeem such currency on demand. The officers of such banks make money out of these blank national bank notes by simply signing each bill at the place indicated. Under this act, the national bank, after lending the Government, has just as much money to lend out to its customers upon which it draws high rates of interest and at the same time the Government sends them interest quarterly on a like amount of money.

To make this plain I give you my own experiences. I was president of the First National Bank of Weatherford, Okla., some 20 years ago. One day I lent $25,000 of that bank's money to the Government in Washington. The Government issued a $25,000 bond, its note to my bank. I left the bond with the Government and received $25,000 in blank national bank notes which I signed and returned to the vaults of the First National Bank of Weatherford. I had just as much money to lend in and around Weatherford to farmers and business men as I had before I lent the Government that $25,000, and received interest every three months on the Government bond left with the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as from the bank's customers. I want you listening in to know that when the last coupon on that Government bond has been paid to the First National Bank of Weatherford, Okla., the taxpayers of this Nation will have paid more than $25,000 in interest to the bank for me signing and making some money for the people to use.

This powerful privilege has been used and is now being used to the destruction of our people. This is the cause of the depression and the cure for the depression is in the return of this power to the people and to their Congress to be exercised in behalf of all the people.

It is urged every day that there is plenty of money. This may be true, but it is also true that there is not enough money in actual circulation. If there was an hundred times as much money in the United States as there is and if it was all locked up in the vaults of the big banks, our people would be suffering just as much and even more than at present, for the interest that is now being paid on the bonds which form the security for the present currency would be many times as great and the cry for a balanced Budget would be a hundred times as strong as it is at present. The people are dying for the lack of a medium of circulation which represents the commodities of the people and which the people can use in handling of their commodities, products, property, and labor. I ofttimes wish that Congress would let the big bankers have all the gold as the medium of their money and let them eat it, drink it, wear it, and look at it and lock it up in their safes and give the people a currency just as sound and as safe based on property other than gold, so that the people could be freed from this the awful slavery of these gold worshipers. This should be done if the big bankers still insist on having the complete control of all money based on the gold basis. But by all means and in all events Congress should cease taxing the people to balance the Budget which pays these bankers quarterly interest on these millions of money locked in their

Just think of the idea of a sales tax on the poorest of the poor to raise money to pay interest to the big bankers on money which they have locked in their vaults. Congress is making the people pay these robbers for the robbery and murder of the people. It does not sound like this could possibly be so, but it is.

Not only are the big bankers and their allied interest, including the daily press and many of the small weekly newspapers of the country, putting over these economic outrages, destroying our people and sacrificing their property; but they are skillfully covering their tracks and leading many people to believe that they are innocent of all wrong. For many months they have been flooding the country with propaganda in a more or less successful attempt to cause the public to believe that the whole trouble is not one of crooked finance and banking by the big interests but is merely one of balancing the Budget by cutting the salaries of the most humble employees, increasing postage rates, and the adjustment of other most minor matters, which are but grains of sand as compared to the mountains upon top of mountains of high-handed robbery of the American people by those who as big bankers control the inflation and deflation of our currency.

In their mad rush to cover their own criminal and outrageous conduct they have abused Congress by twisting and distorting the law in reference to mileage and various other most insignificant matters, all of which each year is not one millionth part of the amount these financial bandits sandbag out of the public every hour.

The big banks should not be allowed to exercise the function of issuing our currency. By this means they have plundered our people into the greatest depression of all time, and by it they are preventing the solution of our economic problems. Congress should not permit this high-handed robbery, within the law, to continue. The blame for the entire situation is clearly at the door of Congress. This blame should have been removed long ago. I certainly hope it is removed the first thing at the next session of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, the banks have usurped the power of expanding and contracting the volume of the currency on which the business of the world is done. In this manner the banks hold the world in chains. They shrink the volume of money and prices fall. They expand the volume of money and prices rise.

In May, 1920, the international bankers, through the Federal reserve banks, forced the small banks of the country to pay their obligations to the Federal reserve banks. As the result of these demands in a year and a half nearly $3,000,000,000 was called in and canceled. Thus, this much money was not only taken out of circulation but was actually destroyed. The currency was deflated to this amount in volume, but that which was left was inflated in value. What else happened? When this deflation started cotton was selling on the cotton exchange of New Orleans at between 30 and 40 cents a pound, and within less than a year was selling at 7 cents a pound. This money which was then destroyed has never been put back into circulation and the prices of farm products have never gone back to where they were, but have really gone lower. Can anyone have any doubt as to what is the cause of the depression, and can anyone have any doubt as to what would absolutely cure the depression in so far as it is possible to cure it at this time? It is said that Voltaire, in one of his letters to a friend. explaining how he, residing at Ferney, on the borders of Switzerland, could so readily make money in Paris, wrote:

A friend of mine who is a director in the Bank of France lets me know in advance when they desire to lower the prices by decreasing the amount of money, and then I sell; he also lets me know in advance when they decide to raise prices by increasing the supply of money, and then I buy.

I am not opposed to the gold standard. I have heretofore demonstrated that without going off the gold standard our currency could be very easily inflated so as to not only bring back prosperity but also enable the farmers to save their homes by settling their present obligations at a great discount with money obtained for a long period of time without any interest and with no payment of principal until the loan becomes due, and with a renewal privilege at maturity.

I am free to confess, though, that I am bitterly opposed to our being a slave to the gold standard. Why should we be worshipers of this golden image? It is only a token or image of value. If all the gold of the world was lost forever, in a little while we would readjust ourselves and there would not be near so much danger of a panic or depression brought on solely and only for and by the big bankers of the Nation.

Very few people, other than bankers and a few Members of Congress, realize just how powerful is this grip of the big bankers and how completely the people are controlled by the manipulators of our present monetary system. The power of the big bankers is absolute and despotic in the extreme. The Supreme Court can set aside a law if it determines that it is unconstitutional, but the big bankers, if they wish, can and do make null and void the laws of Congress at will and without any regard to the Constitution or anything else except that they, the bankers, do not want to obey the mandate of the Congress and of the people. Of course Congress can strip these bankers of this autocratic power, and that is what I am pleading with Congress to do at the earliest possible moment.

But at present let us see what these bankers do with a law permitting them to increase the volume of our currency. They simply refuse to exercise the permit or privilege. But Congress requires and forces them to increase the volume of the currency and then they increase it but lock it up and do not put it into circulation, and we are no better off than we were before the law was passed. Suppose Congress should buy all the gold in the world and deliver it to these bankers, no good would be accomplished unless the bankers wanted to put more money in circulation; they would simply lock up the gold and we would only be out the money that was taxed out of the people to buy the gold.

When England paid us the interest on their obligation a little whole ago no real money was sent over here. No more money was put into circulation over here. What did happen was this: A few sacks of gold was moved a few feet from the gold kept by the English Government and was tagged "Property of the United States." This all happened in England. Suppose it had been sent here in gold and put in the vaults of the United States Treasury, this would not increase our circulation or help solve the present difficulties unless additional currency was issued and actually put into circulation as the result of this gold becoming the property of the United States. Suppose all the foreign debtors paid us all they owe and the gold was simply earmarked "Property of the United States," but left over there or put in the Treasury here, we would be just where we are now unless as the result of this gold becoming ours we increased our circulation of currency both in velocity and amount.

I sometimes feel that if we had a currency base of commodities, such as farm products, farm lands, and so on, we would be better off. There certainly would not be any danger of a ship sinking and our losing a large part of the base of our currency; neither would there be so much danger of the base of our currency all being shipped abroad or stolen or cornered by the big bankers.

But it is urged that neither the Congress nor an agency acting for the people can be entrusted to handle this matter of increasing and diminishing the currency. Would it not be as safe to trust this control to the Congress, selected by the people, as to intrust it to the big bankers?

If we must submit to the Government on questions of property, of liberty, and of life, shall it be said we must not submit to it on questions of finance?

Can not the Government as safely say how much money we shall have as it can say how much bonds we shall issue, how many troops shall compose the Army, how many post offices shall distribute the mail, how many officeholders shall collect the revenues, how much tax we shall pay, and how much money we shall spend every two years?

The people need sound money and honest money and need honest people with sound ideas in control of the issuance of their money. This function of government should not be exercised by the big bankers and for the big bankers, but should be exercised by the Congress for all the people.

PUBLICITY OF INCOME-TAX RETURNS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

invite attention to a subject that is closely related to the appropriation of money.

THE PEOPLE DEFRAUDED

I believe in the publicity of income-tax returns. Secrecy is a badge of fraud. During the last few days we have had an example of what secrecy means and what secrecy in Government will do. All collections for the Government should be made subject to public supervision and all expenditures should be subject to public inspection. It has been disclosed before a Senate committee that the chairman of the board of the second largest bank in the United States evaded the payment of his income tax that was, as a matter of right, due the Government in 1929 by merely transferring certain stocks and securities from himself to one of his close relatives at the end of the year. In this manner he cheated the people out of a large sum of money. The stocks and securities were later transferred back to Mr. Mitchell by this close relative. The Mellons, Morgans, and Mitchells pay no attention to the law. They only believe in law and order when they can make the law and give the order. They use the credit of our Nation free of charge and run rough shod over our laws and Constitution. I do not know whether he made the transfer to his wife, to his daughter, or to his son, but he did admittedly make a transfer of this stock to a close relative in order to evade payment of his income tax for that year. We do not know how many more such cases there are in the United States. The records are secret.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOSS. Under the rule, debate is to be confined to the bill. The gentleman is not proceeding in order. The gentleman did not obtain unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. PATMAN. I shall be glad to proceed in order. In order to make this payment which will have to be made the money will have to be raised from some source, from some one.

In order to raise the money to advance the $2,000,000, the best way to do it is to have publicity of income-tax returns; and whenever you have publicity of tax returns, you will get plenty of money to advance this $2,000,000 for the farmers. I doubt that we would have a deficit in the United States Treasury to-day if all income-tax returns in the past had been subject to public inspection.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the pending amendment has nothing to do with the payment of income taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. GOSS. I shall ask for a ruling if the gentleman persists.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is correct in his position, and the gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. PATMAN. I assure the Chairman I am proceeding in order. I am talking about the raising of this $2,000,000 which it will be necessary to advance in order to help the farmers to be benefited in this bill.

Mr. GOSS. There is no money appropriated in this bill whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that the last word is "paid," and it pertains to reclamation projects.

LOW INTEREST RATES DESIRED

Mr. PATMAN. Now, in regard to the interest rate in this bill, I am anxious to see the 3 per cent rate prevail. I want a small interest rate in order that the Government may take the lead in lowering all interest rates. There is no reason why anyone should be forced to pay more than 3 per cent interest for any loan for any purpose. The people owe $203,000,000,000 in debts. They can not pay these debts and the high interest rates now required. I believe the day is coming in this country when the banking system will | Members on this side of the aisle-and I could speak more

Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time in order to | be operated in cooperation with the Government in a way that no one will be required to pay more than 3 per cent interest. For instance, on a savings account, where you deposit $1, the bank can lend $331/3, and not only does it get interest on the $1 that it has loaned out that you placed in the savings account, but the bank gets interest on $331/3. The issuance of money is a function that should be exercised by the Government. Under the present arrangement it is farmed out to a few bankers. The Government should get out of private business, and the bankers should be forced to get out of the Government's business.

Under such a set-up or arrangement as we have now people should not be required to pay more than 3 per cent interest for any purpose. Furthermore, the Government is getting money from the people at a rate of interest as low as one-fifth of 1 per cent, and this is an annual rate of interest, too; and let it be remembered that the steamship companies that have subsidies from our Government, aggregating as much as $20,000,000 a year, are receiving money from the Government and paying therefor a small annual interest charge, which is as low as one-fourth of 1 per cent. The brokers who use money for speculation are paying 1 per cent annual interest. It is only the farmers and working people who are required to pay a high interest rate. It is not right. I wish the people knew more about the monetary system of this Nation; many changes would be made.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Just for a question.

Mr. LEAVITT. I wish to call attention to the fact that in this case this money comes from a special fund established through the sale of public land and mineral leases, and there is no interest that the Government has to pay on this money at all. The fund is set aside for this purpose.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, and in conclusion I simply want to say that one of the best reasons we should have publicity of income-tax returns is because Mr. Mitchell evaded the payment of his income tax in 1929.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, in line 11, strike out the proviso.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stafford: Beginning on page 2, in line 11, after "1933," strike out the proviso ending in line 15.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would not take the responsibility of offering a preferential motion to increase the rate of interest as carried in the proviso from 3 to 5 per cent. I want to leave the rate to be charged to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, as under the existing act, when we for the first time deferred these construction charges for the year 1931 and the first half of 1932.

There is not one scintilla of evidence, the distinguished retired gentleman of the Army from Oregon to the contrary notwithstanding, that the Commissioner of Reclamation advocated the reduction of interest to the extent of from 5 to 3 per cent on the charges that have been deferred under the existing act for 1931 and for the first half of 1932.

In connection with the House bill that was under consideration before the House committee-and the gentleman was present at the hearings-there was no provision whatsoever for reducing the interest rate. This was an afterthought of the gentlemen of that committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. As I have referred to the distinguished retired gentleman, I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. What I said to the gentleman was that in the joint committee of the House and Senate the charge was lodged against the gentleman that he was responsible for the rate of 6 per cent interest.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not 6 per cent, but 5 per cent.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Yes; 5 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is true that I was delegated by the the other side of the aisle, because now he is in favor of raiding the Treasury and I am not. I was delegated to go down there to represent such gentlemen as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], and others to safeguard the interests of the Treasury against the raiders from the reclamation districts of the West, and that is the question we have here. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] was there, and the gentleman knows I did not fight his project. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] and the other gentleman from Idaho [Mr. Burton French] were there. It was an unpleasant position for me to be in, but I had the backing and support of the Secretary of the Interior in the position I was taking, and now what do these gentlemen propose to do under the reflections cast by the gratuitous remark of the gentleman from South Carolina that I am representing corporations?

Every loan that has been advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to railroad corporations or to banks bears interest at the rate of at least 5 per cent. In not one instance have we lowered it.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman declined to yield to me, and I will extend similar courtesy to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Now, I am leaving it entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the interest rate as he may see fit. If he determines that it shall be 3 per cent or 4 per cent, well and good. But I am unalterably opposed to remitting in this case 2 per cent, as the bill provides, for the construction charges deferred by last year's act for the year 1931 and the first half of 1932.

If we make the rate too low, every irrigation district, whether it is in a position to pay or not, will seek the benefit of the act

Now, how much was involved last year? Four and a half million dollars, and four and a half million dollars will be involved this year.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this bill is not indorsed by the Reclamation Bureau?

Mr. STAFFORD. They are not in favor of making it

Mr. CHAVEZ. On February 23, a few days ago, Doctor Mead, commissioner, said:

Therefore I hope the bill S. 5417, now pending in the House, will receive favorable consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. The position I take to-day is leaving it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the interest rate. The proviso makes it retroactive. I am opposed to that feature; and also believe Congress should permit the Secretary to determine the rate of interest on future deferred payments.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for one minute out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is peculiarly appropriate, with Chairman Mead occupying the Speaker's chair, that I should present to the Congress of the United Sates the resolution of the councilmen of the city of Binghamton, introduced by its former mayor and splendid citizen, John Irving, of thanks to the Congress of the United States for the passage of the bill transferring the post office site to Henry Street, in response to the sentiment of the city.

In accomplishment of this effort Chairman Mead and the members of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee, through their long tiresome trip to Binghamton, in order to ascertain the facts, have been an invaluable aid. Not politics, just facts, was what they wanted, and then on their return that committee, with their report, has had the coop-graciously of the gentleman if he would take his seat on eration of Chairman Lanham and his Committee on Public the other side of the aisle, because now he is in favor of Buildings and Grounds.

As the Congressman representing Binghamton I felt it my duty to do everything possible to the accomplishment of the belated expression, but nevertheless majority sentiment of the city, as expressed in all walks of life. That was my duty, then it was a labor of love in seeing to it that my old college mate who had captained the baseball team I had played on for four years had protection, for he had obtained the contract for the building of that building. I refer to George Walbridge, and above all I doff my hat to Chairmen Mead and Lanham for the extra consideration and extra time they gave to the accomplishment of the transfer of the post office site, so the bill was speedily passed by the House.

The Senate, too, has done its bit, so the Lord bless everyone.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This House does not dare vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin. I need not state what would happen if this House goes on record by striking out from this relief bill the interest rate of 3 per cent in the face of what is going on in the country to-day.

I do not believe that many Members on the floor take that position to-day. This is not 1890, it is not 1925 or 1926—it is 1933. Everything is different. The day of the high interest is over. Why, the day of 6 per cent interest is gone. We are in the midst of a complete financial collapse; we are approaching a new economic era.

The people of this country have received a very liberal though costly and disastrous education on the power of

I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I am sure he will recall that when the International Mercantile Marine Co. and the Roosevelt Line and the Dollar Line merged they went to the Shipping Board on their loans and the interest was reduced from 4 and 3 per cent to one-quarter of 1 per cent. That is a matter of record, and not only that, but they were the beneficiaries of postal contracts, besides the loans, from which they received revenue to pay the interest and loan.

The Federal reserve banks of this country are the depositories of Federal funds. Every morning in my city they meet or they contact each other by telephone and fix the rate of interest at 1 per cent per annum for the stock gamblers. It was done this morning. It was done Saturday, and it was done Friday, and here we have citizens who are in real distress asking for the opportunity of deferring payments, and while we are facing a disastrous collapse we lose time in discussing 5 per cent interest on $2,000,000 deferred payment while the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is shoveling out dollars by the millions on dead or moribund securities at 5 per cent, yes; but on paper, and that is as far as it will ever go. Suppose we do not pass this law, suppose these men default on their payments. Do you suppose the water is going to be turned off? Not in 1933, because as soon as it is turned off these farmers will turn it on again. Just bear that in mind. These farmers are decent, clean, honest citizens. They are not crooks like some of our so-called big bankers. That is the age that we are living in to-day, and you can not any more cling to 6 per cent interest or 8 per cent or 10 per cent that the home owners and farmers of the country are bearing than you can establish a postal pony express between New York and San Francisco in competition with air mail. The hours of this Congress are limited, and we have very important work to do. We ought to dispose of this amendment and vote it down overwhelmingly, and take every opportunity that we can to go on record that it is the sense of the Representatives of the American people that no money is worth more than 3 per cent, for that is what we are going to establish, and that is one of the thingsone of the changes-that will come out of this terrible disaster. [Applause.]

offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Taber: Page 2, line 3, strike out all of line 3, down to and including 1933 in line 11.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides for cutting out of this bill the extension of time for the beginning of the Uncompangre drainage project and some items relating to the Grand Valley reclamation project. It is my understanding that these projects are water-logged and can not operate at all. A bill was passed permitting the construction of certain drainage on those projects. If that is done, it simply brings more land under cultivation to compete with the products of the farms in your district and in my district. When conditions are such that we have an overproduction of agriculture, then the situation arises where we ought to stop trying to bring more land under cultivation that is not now under cultivation. To me it is a ridiculous thing for us to do anything that will encourage the opening for cultivation of more land than is now under cultivation. I do not know how many of you had the pleasure of hearing the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] the other day on the reclamation question, but it appears from those remarks that tremendous crops are produced on some of those projects, and they do come into competition with the crops that are produced on land operated under the capital of those who own their own farms. It takes only 3 or 4 per cent, sometimes as low as 2 per cent, surplus to break the market, and as a result of that sort of performance the market is broken all the time. It seems to me we ought to call a halt on that sort of thing and adopt this amendment and strike out the further development of these projects.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This amendment attacks a project in my own home part of the State of Colorado. The Uncompangre project is one that is in an adjoining county to the one in which I live. I have known that project intimately for 25 years. It is wonderfully rich land. It has a splendid climate. It has a good water right. The lay of the land is exceptionally good. There are some eight or ten thousand as good and industrious people as there are anywhere under our flag who are dependent upon and whose homes are upon that project. But the Government did not construct the proper and necessary drainage ditches when the project was constructed. The reclamation engineers on all of its recent projects has built drainage canals and ditches to prevent lands from going to seep or becoming water-logged. The Government did not do that in this case. It really was an obligation which the Reclamation Service should have undertaken. But that was 25 or 30 years ago and no one knew as much about irrigation then as we know now. I think the bureau would undertake it now if it were not for the depleted condition of the irrigation reclamation fund which is a fund set apart for the express purpose of these irrigation reclamation projects. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation fully realize the necessity of this work and that that seep land must be drained.

Of course, we are not bringing in any new land under cultivation as the gentleman from New York said. That land has been under cultivation for many years, and it is a part of this project, but many of the farms have become so seeped that they have become unprofitable, and the water users have decided to construct those drainage works themselves. That law I secured the passage of two years ago expressly authorized them to do so so. This whole matter has the hearty approval of the Interior Department, and we are now preparing as fast and as best we can to do that drainage work, but it is an enormous task, and it requires vast preparation, and those people have not got the money up to the present time to get started. The provision of this bill that this amendment attempts to strike out is simply

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment | bringing this project under the same condition and giving it the same relief as all the rest. We are asking for one year's deferment of the time in which we shall commence that drainage work. That is all there is to it. It is not costing the Government a dollar. It is not affecting the general reclamation policy. Some one said it is costing the Government $2,000,000. That is nonsense. This whole bill will not cost the Government $2,000,000.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No: I will not.

Furthermore, this extension of time is only for one year. and we fixed it at 3 per cent. They say, "Why not let those pay who can pay?" Practically speaking, there is nobody on these projects who can pay to-day. They are all in this desperate condition. Why should Congress single out and attack farmers on these Government projects and refuse them any relief? Uncle Sam holds a first mortgage on all those lands and irrigation works, and Uncle Sam is the only one interested. We are trying to make it possible for the people on those projects to save their homes instead of having them driven off of there.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Government have a contract to do this drainage? Is it a part of your contract?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. As a matter of fact, the Government has not entered into a contract to do it, but they authorized us to go ahead and do it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I mean it is a standing agreement with the Government?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes. It is the law to-day. We have the right to go ahead and do this work.

Mr. SIMMONS. Would it be a repudiation of a part of that law then if it were not done?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. In a way it would be a repudiation of a law which I introduced and had passed two years ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I vield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Is it not a fact that the gentleman from Colorado did not originate this, but it was brought to his attention by the Reclamation Service?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is true. The Secretary of the Interior wrote me a letter saying that this provision ought to be in this bill, that otherwise this project would get no relief, and I put it in. Both the House and the Senate committees agreed to it unanimously.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. The farmers in New York State do their own reclamation and irrigation. Why is that not a fair

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. You live right near the best markets in the world. We are 2,000 miles away from the market that you have, with the highest freight rates on earth, as a handicap against us. We can not and do not compete with you at all.

Mr. CULKIN. You could not survive then without Government help. Is that the fact?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; it is not. That is not the question. Owing to the present appalling conditions and our utter inability to sell our crops we can not meet the annual payments to the reclamation fund and we are asking for a year's moratorium.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] has expired.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This proposition of reclamation is the fatal policy that has brought agriculture to its knees in America. In the last year 11 per cent of agricultural products were grown on reclaimed lands, on lands reclaimed by the Government and by private enterprise. This is simply a continuation of this policy. In New York State when a farmer wants to reclaim land he does it himself.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. LEAVITT. What percentage is raised on Govern-

Mr. CULKIN. The percentage raised on Government projects is approximately 1.1 per cent.

Mr. LEAVITT. It is about one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. CULKIN. One and one-tenth is the amount; but the other 10 per cent has been raised under the stimulus and propaganda of the Reclamation Bureau. I take the viewpoint of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. I contend that there is no more fatal policy in the history of civilization than the policy of reclamation as carried on in the United States. Every bit of this 11 per cent of production has been brought about by the propaganda of the Reclamation Bureau of the Department of the Interior. This is a continuation of that policy. More overproduction. I am sympathetic with the people who are on this land. I have no desire to destroy them, but when this measure opens the way directly for more reclamation, I say to this House definitely, now is the time to call a halt. To continue this policy against which the Grange, against which the Federation of Farm Bureaus, against which every agricultural body in the United States is opposed, is a defiance of the laws of production. I say to you in conclusion that this policy and this measure which contains the provision for added drainage, is a policy that has brought destruction to agriculture in the United States. I very much hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], in the interest of orderly farm production in the United States, and in the interest of suffering agriculture will obtain and will be carried by this House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

No nation was ever built by the expression of such statesmanship as that in the mind of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin]. Reclamation projects are built as the result of a policy growing out of the tremendous leadership and statesmanship of Theodore Roosevelt. [Applause.] Theodore Roosevelt came into the western country and he learned the situation there. When he became President of the United States he laid down as one of the four great movements necessary to round out and build the Nation, not for local communities, such as that which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] evidently comes from, with restricted vision and without an idea of what is required to build a great nation and balance it in its entire development, the establishment of reclamation projects. It is one of the monuments to Theodore Roosevelt. These reclamation projects mean the possibility of development to great areas of the western part of the United States.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Not now. Mr. CULKIN. Well, the gentleman has referred to me. It seems to me it is only courtesy that the gentleman should yield to me.

Mr. LEAVITT. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. It may be a monument to Theodore Roosevelt, but is it not the tombstone of the American farmer?

Mr. LEAVITT. Oh, no. I will take the gentleman's figures, although they are incorrect, but I will say 1.1 per cent of the crops on the farms are raised on Government irrigation projects. The great percentage of what is raised on reclamation projects is of a character that does not compete with the ordinary farm products of this country. When the gentleman speaks about the opposition of the farm organizations, their opposition is not to putting water on land and making it productive, but it is against the opening up of new reclamation projects, going further than we have already gone.

Now, coming to the point with regard to this one reclamation project in the State of Colorado, this was one of the first reclamation projects constructed under the reclamation act of 1902. When this Government embarked on the policy of reclaiming arid lands and making homes in that semiarid country it did not have behind it the background of experience it has now. On many of those first projects proper provision was not then made for the drainage of the land which, as the years went by, came to be understood to be just as necessary for the success of many of those projects as the putting on the land of the water to begin with.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. LEAVITT. I yield.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is not the cause of a great deal of the trouble we are in, the water which has been put not upon the land, but by some of the people in my State into industry and stocks and bonds? [Applause.]

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the section and all amendments thereto do

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken and on a division (demanded by Mr. Taber), there were—ayes 22, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee rises.

The committee rose; and Mr. Bankhead having assumed the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MEAD, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill Senate 5417, for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law, pursuant to House Resolution 391, reported the bill back to the House without amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is ordered under the rule.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Schafer) there were—ayes 113, noes 24.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. Chavez, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to make an announcement: At the direction of the Speaker, the Chair desires to announce that after the conclusion of a bill which will presently be called up under suspension of the rules, the Unanimous Consent Calendar will be called.

The Chair gives this notice in order that those in charge of the Consent Calendar may govern themselves accord-

Mr. SNELL. Can the Chair advise the House as to whether the Unanimous Consent Calendar will occupy the balance of the afternoon?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the Chair is unable to state that to the gentleman from New York. He will be advised later.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the present occupant of the Chair advise the House as to whether there will be any further suspensions?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. So far as the present occupant of the Chair is advised there will be no further suspensions this afternoon.

AMENDMENT OF THE SHIPPING ACT, 1916

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4491) amending the shipping act, 1916, as amended, for the purpose of further regulating common carriers by water in interstate commerce of the United States engaged in transportation by way of the Panama Canal, as amended.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act-

The term "common carrier by water in intercoastal commerce" for the purposes of this act shall include every common and contract carrier by water engaged in the transportation for hire of passengers or property between one State of the United States and any other State of the United States by way of the

Sec. 2. That every common carrier by water in intercoastal commerce shall file with the United States Shipping Board and keep open to public inspection schedules showing all the rates, keep open to public inspection schedules showing all the rates, fares, and charges for or in connection with transportation between intercoastal points on its own route; and if a through route has been established, all the rates, fares, and charges for or in connection with transportation between intercoastal points on its own route and points on the route of any other carrier by water. The schedules filed and kept open to public inspection as aforesaid by any such carrier shall plainly show the places between which passengers and/or freight will be carried, and shall contain the classification of freight and of passenger accommodations in force, and shall also state separately each terminal or other charge, privilege, or facility granted or allowed, and any rules or regulations which in anywise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such aforesaid rates, fares, or charges, or the value of the service rendered to the passenger, consignor, or consignee. Such carriers in establishing and fixing rates, fares, or charges may make equal rates, fares, or charges for similar or consignee. Such carriers in establishing and fixing rates, fares, or charges may make equal rates, fares, or charges for similar service between all ports of origin and all ports of destination, and it shall be unlawful for any such carrier, either directly or indirectly, through the medium of any agreement, conference, association, understanding, or otherwise, to prevent or attempt to prevent any such carrier from extending service to any publicly owned terminal located on any improvement project authorized by the Congress at the same rates which it charges at its nearest regular port of call. Such schedules shall be plainly printed, and copies shall be kept posted in a public and conspicuous place at every wharf, dock, and office of such carrier where passengers or freight are received for transportation, in such manner that they shall be readily accessible to the public and can be conveniently inspected.

shall be readily accessible to the public and can be conveniently inspected.

No change shall be made in the rates, rares, or charges, or classifications, rules, or regulations, which have been filed and posted as required by this section, except by the publication, filing, and posting as aforesaid of a new schedule or schedules which shall become effective not earlier than 30 days after date of posting and filing thereof with the board, and such schedule or schedules shall plainly show the changes proposed to be made in the schedule or schedules then in force and the time when the rates, target charges classifications rules or regulations as changed schedule or schedules then in force and the time when the rates, fares, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations as changed are to become effective: Provided, That the board may, in its discretion and for good cause, allow changes upon less than the period of 30 days herein specified: And provided further, That schedules or changes which provide for extension of actual service to additional ports at rates of said carrier already in effect for similar service at the nearest port of call to said additional ports shall become effective immediately upon notice to the board.

From and after 90 days following enactment hereof no person

From and after 90 days following enactment hereof no person shall engage in transportation as a common carrier by water in intercoastal commerce unless and until its schedules as provided by this section have been duly and properly filed and posted; nor shall any common carrier by water in intercoastal commerce and section of the sect by this section have been duly and properly filed and posted; nor shall any common carrier by water in intercoastal commerce charge or demand or collect or receive a greater or less or different compensation for the transportation of passengers or property or for any service in connection therewith than the rates, fares, and/or charges which are specified in its schedules filed with the board and duly posted and in effect at the time; nor shall any such carrier refund or remit in any manner or by any device any portion of the rates, fares, or charges so specified, nor extend or deny to any person any privilege or facility, except in accordance with such schedules.

The board shall by regulations prescribe the form and manner in which the schedules required by this section shall be published, filed, and posted; and the board is authorized to reject any schedule filed with it which is not in consonance with this section and with such regulations. Any schedule so rejected by the board shall be void and its use shall be unlawful.

Any violation of any provision of this section by a common carrier by water in intercoastal commerce shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000 for each act of violation and/or for each day such violation continues, to be recovered by the United States in a civil action.

SEC. 3. Whenever there shall be filed with the board any schedule stating a new individual or joint rate, fare, or charge, or any new individual or joint classification, or any new individual or joint regulation or practice affecting any rate, fare, or charge, the board shall have, and it is hereby given authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, and if it so orders without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon a

Pending such hearing and the decision thereon the board, upon filing with such schedule and delivering to the carrier or carriers affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may from time to time suspend the operation of such schedule and defer the use of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, but not for a longer period than four months beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after full hearing, whether completed before or after the rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice goes into effect, the board may make such order with reference thereto as would be proper in a proceeding initiated after it had become effective. be proper in a proceeding initiated after it had become effective. If the proceeding has not been concluded and an order made within the period of suspension, the proposed change of rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall go into effect at the end of such period. The board shall give preference to the hearing and decision of such questions and decide the same as speedily as possible. Nothing contained herein shall be construed table purposes.

Sec. 5. That the provisions of the shipping act, 1916, and as amended prior to this act, shall in all respects, except as amended by this act, continue to be applicable to common carriers by water in intercoastal commerce.

SEC. 6. That this act may be cited as the intercoastal shipping act. 1933.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). Is a second demanded?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am not opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill, and I demand a second.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that all carriers engaged in intercoastal trade passing through the Panama Canal shall file with the Shipping Board a schedule of the rates which they propose to charge in that service. When such schedule of rates is filed and published the rates therein then become the legal rates, and that carrier can not deviate from those rates unless upon 30 days' notice he changes his rates in the manner he originally filed his schedule of rates. He can not grant rebates, and he can not grant a different rate to one shipper from that which he grants to another.

In other words, the purpose of the bill is, in the interest of fairness, to prevent secret rebates and to prevent discrimination, and in order that all the carriers engaged in this trade and all the shippers and the public generally may know exactly what rates are proposed to be charged by any carrier in this service.

The bill does not authorize the Shipping Board to fix rates, either minimum or any other kind. As the bill passed the Senate section 4 authorized the Shipping Board under certain conditions to fix minimum rates; and there was considerable opposition to that section, but it was eliminated from the bill by the House committee, and it will be noted that there is in the bill a House committee amendment striking out that section.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. In the case of a contract carrier operating a line through the Panama Canal and also operating a line hauling coal, for instance, from Hampton Roads to some New England port, would the portion of his business between Hampton Roads and New England be affected by this bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No. That very question arose in committee, and there seemed to be some question about it. In order to clarify the language and to make it clear that it did not apply to any shipment, even though a carrier engaged in intercoastal service, except an intercoastal shipment or transportation, in lines 5 and 6 on page 2 we have proposed committee amendments inserting the word "inter-

Mr. GOSS. As I understand it then-

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I can not yield further, as there are many other matters to be explained.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman may cause me to be in favor of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That matter is clarified, and the bill speaks for itself in that respect.

There is another committee amendment designed to protect secondary ports, and there is also an amendment proposed by the chief coordinator, similar to a provision in the present interstate commerce act, which permits any coastal carrier to make special rates to the Government or to any branch of the Government, and that this shall not be in violation of law.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does this apply entirely to domestic companies using the canal, or does it apply equally to foreign-controlled companies that may be so operating; in other words, does it compel foreign lines to file their rates?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. So far as that is concerned, a foreign ship can not engage in intercoastal trade. In other words, under the coastwise law foreign vessels can not carry a passenger or a pound of freight from one American port to another.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not vest in the Shipping Board any right to specify any rates. It merely provides that the steamship carriers, when they have determined upon a rate, shall make that rate public and stick to it and treat all the shippers fairly and on the same basis. It prevents rebating, it prevents secret trade practices to the detriment of less-favored shippers by those who are favored by the carriers. It is asked for not only by the reputable shipping concerns, but it is generally demanded by the shippers who have to avail themselves of this service both on the Pacific and on the Atlantic coasts. They infinitely prefer a situation where they know what they have got to pay and what their competitors have got to pay to competing in the dark with those who secure unjustifiable

If there is anything in the bill that anyone desires to seek enlightenment upon, I shall be very pleased to answer any questions, but this is the sum and substance of the bill and is all that it provides.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. LEHLBACH. I will be pleased to yield to the gentle-

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Might it not have been well if the Interstate Commerce Commission, in connection with this legislation, had been given power to coordinate these water rates with railroad rates so that there would not be such destructive competition between the two as there is at the present time.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Inasmuch as under existing law the Interstate Commerce Commission has no jurisdiction over water-borne traffic and the Shipping Board has, the bill now under consideration could not very well go so far. I hope, eventually, such a situation will be brought about, and I think the gentleman's suggestion is an excellent one.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. At the present time it is almost impossible for firms in the interior to do business in competition with these all-water rates through the Panama Canal.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Wis-

Mr. SCHAFER. Under this bill, after these rates have been filed by the water carriers, will they be in position to reduce the rates or will they be in the same position that a railroad is now under the regulations of the Interstate Com-

coastal." so that it will apply only between intercoastal | merce Commission? In order to increase business and keep its rolling stock employed, a railroad carrier can not reduce the rates, for instance, on coal. Would the same ruling apply to these shipments?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It would not. Any shipping operator may reduce his rates upon 30 days' notice at any time and the bill goes further and says:

Provided, That the board may, in its discretion and for good cause, allow changes upon less than the period of 30 days herein specified.

So that a shipping concern has it entirely within its power to reduce the rates. The only thing it must do is to give all the customers equal notice and give them equal opportunity to avail themselves of the new rates.

Mr. SCHAFER. Can an intercoastal shipper file new rates with the Shipping Board and then reduce its own rates or does it have to wait for the Shipping Board to take judicial action, the same as a railroad carrier that desires to reduce its rate on a certain commodity? A railroad can not make such a reduction until it has made application to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The Interstate Commerce Commission has such jurisdiction over railroad rates. We were very careful not to give such jurisdiction to the Shipping Board over water-borne freight.

Mr. SCHAFER. Perhaps I have not made myself clear. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield the gentleman five minutes more. The gentleman knows that now a railroad carrier can not reduce its rates, for instance, on coal, until the Interstate Commerce Commission approves them. If this bill is enacted into law, will one of these water carriers be able to reduce its rates or will it have to wait for a judicial determination by the Shipping Board, the same as a railroad company has to wait for the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve such a reduction?

Mr. LEHLBACH. They will not have to wait for any action by the Shipping Board. They have this entirely within their own control and can reduce rates to any point they wish without asking the permission of the Shipping Board. All they must do is to give everybody equal opportunity and reduce rates to all shippers alike.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. What was the occasion for treating contract carriers as common carriers?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The reason is this: There are operated in the intercoastal trade certain what are known as industrial ships, certain ships owned by commercial companies that are not primarily engaged in shipping. They are in the lumber business, the automobile-accessories business, and the steel business.

Now, these parties at times carry their own goods, and at other times they operate as common carriers in competition with those common carriers who only carry goods for shippers. It would be unfair to allow the contract carriers, the industrial vessels, to make, alter, and shift their rates from customer to customer without subjecting them to the same rule of uniformity as applies to common carriers.

Mr. HOCH. If a carrier is simply a contract carrier, does that compel him to make the same publication of rates?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think it would.

Mr. HOCH. Is not that a radical departure in Government regulation?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is fundamental in all transportation that all ships should have the same advantage.

Mr. HOCH. There is a plain distinction between a common carrier and a contract carrier. It strikes me as a radical departure from anything the Government is attempting to do, to assert jurisdiction over contract carriers.

Mr. LEHLBACH. In relieving such a situation the Government and Congress has gone further to bring about the same results-that preventing the railroads from carrying their own goods.

Mr. HOCH. But there are no contract carrier railroads.

the situation and practice are different in water-borne transportation and railroad transportation.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. The purpose of the bill is to prevent the carrier from charging one person a different rate from

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is precisely it.

Mr. DOWELL. Heretofore there have been different prices and different rates to different persons.

Mr. LEHLBACH. There have been rate wars, resulting in disorder and loss to shippers as well as transportation

Mr. DOWELL. And this is to prevent conditions that have existed, and charge all persons the same rate.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is the purpose.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the bill in any manner affect the

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; no danger of that whatever, that there will be any rise in rates.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take up all the five minutes. The gentlemen who have preceded me have fully explained the bill. The benefit to trade is in the stabilization of rates; the benefit is in letting them know what those rates are and what they have to deal with in making their contract for transportation. The Shipping Board has no power to fix the rate, but the bill compels the carrier to fix the rates and publish them, so that they shall not be changed overnight. These being the purposes of the bill, I do not see how there can be any objection to it.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Washington. An intercoastal shipping company can change its rates on 30 days' notice.

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Washington. What kind of a notice is required, and how is it given?

Mr. BLAND. It is filed with the Shipping Board, as I recollect. The gentleman will find the language in section 3 in respect to the filing of their rates with the Shipping Board and giving notice of those new rates.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Then the Shipping Board publishes the rates so that everybody has knowledge of them?

Mr. BLAND. They must be published so that everybody has notice. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I trust that every friend of the merchant marine will vote for this bill. It should have been the law a long time ago. There has been nothing to prevent constant warfare between intercoastal shipping, and it has been a detriment not only to the shippers, but it has been destructive of the shipping interests of the country. What prevails with reference to our intercoastal shipping is likewise true to the detriment of the American merchant marine in our overocean shipping. They have tried for years through conferences to agree on rates, and have agreed on them at different times, only to violate them, so that these conference agreements have become a farce. Now they are proposing by law, when rates are fixed, that they shall remain fixed so that the public and all the world can know what they are and so that they shall be applied to every shipper and that there can be no rebate. Big shippers have been given a great advantage over small shippers by reason of secret agreements for rebates after the shipping is over. The small shipper, not shipping in such large quantities, can not get the benefit of those rebates. The small shipper, if this becomes a law, will have the same rights, the same privilege, the same protection that the large shipper has. I think there is no objection to this bill, and there is every reason why it should become a law,

Mr. LEHLBACH. We have not a precise analogy, because | not only in the interest of the shipper but in the interest of the shipping industry of the country.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Of course the gentleman is aware that by the use of water there is a destructive competition with the transcontinental railroads. Does not the gentleman think some authority ought to be vested somewhere so that the rates between the water carriers and the rail carriers may be coordinated?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think the gentleman is right, and I think the time is not far distant when for the protection of the railroads of this country and for the protection of the water-shipping interests there must be some law that will protect one against the other, so that destructive competition can not exist between them. We all know that water shipping is cheaper than rail, and we all know that the railroads have been competing in many instances to their own detriment; but a law should regulate that thing, and through proper legislation it is bound to come.

Mr. SCHAFER. And will the passage of this bill cause an additional expense out of the people's Treasury, with another large staff of Federal employees running around the country?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It will not necessitate the employment of a single additional person.

Mr. SCHAFER. I am glad to hear that, and I withdraw my opposition to the bill in view of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Briggs].

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, this measure has been rather fully explained by the preceding speakers. The bill in substance requires the filing and publishing of intercoastal steamship rates by lines operating through the intercoastal canal. It will prohibit and eliminate rebates and remove discriminations, but does not prevent carriers from reducing their rates. Such carriers, however, give 30 days' notice, except in specified instances, so that the legislation will protect the shipping public and the carriers themselves against unlawful rebates. Practices have arisen which have a tendency not only to demoralize intercoastal service and injure shippers but to jeopardize the investment the United States Government has in many of the vessels operating in such service, running up into many millions of dollars. The safety of the balance loaned for construction and owing for purchase money of ships to the United States Government is very seriously threatened by these rebates and secret practices, and this bill, through the publicity section and requirements, will have a tendency to correct the situation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BRIGGS. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I notice that nearly everyone who has spoken in favor of this bill regrets the fact that the bill is innocuous and that it has not any teeth in it. Conditions and practices are bad. What are we doing here? Playing solitaire?

Mr. BRIGGS. It was stated before our committee by those advocating this measure that if they could get this publicity section in the bill, requiring intercoastal shipping companies, both common and contract carriers, to file and publish their rates, with 30 days' notice of any change, except in emergencies, and fixing penalties for variation from those rates, the legislation would correct 80 per cent of the existing trouble and practices which ought to be corrected.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. And now, to correct the other 20 per cent, may I leave this one impression with the committee, because my days are numbered: See to it that intercoastal trade is not subsidized, so that shipping lines that are engaged in coastwise trade do not have to meet competition with favored shipping companies who are receiving subsidies on the fiction that they are touching at a foreign port because they go through the Panama Canal.

Mr. BRIGGS. I think the Merchant Marine Committee is thoroughly in sympathy with the suggestion made, for it was never the purpose that anything of that kind should follow from any of the legislation enacted, but any such situation that may have developed has been due to the construction placed upon it by the executive branch.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself one minute. After obtaining all the information in the debate, and after finding that our distinguished colleague, Doctor SIROVICH, has carefully considered this bill and reported it out, I shall withdraw my opposition and not use the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill as amended be passed?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

SILVER AND GOLD-EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, many things have been tried as a remedy to restore prosperity and each has failed. Four billion dollars of debt has been created in experiments and it has helped but little if any at all, and this indebtedness must be raised by taxation in future years.

We are now in no better condition than when the depression started; in fact, we are not all as well off as we were then.

The President of the United States, as a relief measure, advocated a moratorium for all European nations. This moratorium at that time had not been asked by any debtor nation. Enough of the Members of Congress indorsed his request for this authority to give him the authority to grant it. I wired the President within five minutes after I received his wire, asking my indorsement of the moratorium, that I thought it was unwise and that it should not be granted. I thought then he was wrong, and now time has revealed that it was a great mistake. It was the beginning of our trouble, and $252,000,000 that they owed was not paid when due.

The next proposition proposed by him was to create a great corporation, giving it the power to issue bonds bearing interest and sell them to get money to loan to big business, such as railroads, insurance companies, trust companies, banks, and building and loan associations, in the hope that some of it would trickle through and help the fellow below, that creates wealth and gives employment to labor.

The bonds and paper of the above-named institutions was largely held by the large central bank and trust companies. The most of it was held by Wall Street bankers, and when the bonds were refinanced it simply changed the location of the bonds. They were properly classed by the President as "frozen assets." We gave them cold cash for frozen assets. The bonds issued for this purpose must be paid by the taxpayers of the United States.

Concentration of all the wealth in the hands of a few persons is dangerous for any Government. They can bring on a money panic at their will, as they have recently done.

Our country has been drained of its money in the sale of foreign securities in the last three years to an amount of between thirty and forty billions of dollars.

Sixty per cent of the money of the United States is hidden away and not in use, and so far as the good it is doing it might as well never have been coined. You can not carry on business without a medium of exchange. Under present conditions we have no adequate medium of exchange.

Just two things alone would bring back prosperity in this country. One is to lower the tariff and give us trade relations with all the world. We can not prosper with a wall built around us like the tariff wall and no one need expect it. If our new President does not advocate that in the call session of Congress in April, I shall be disappointed. We should at least have reciprocal trade relations established as was provided for in the bill we passed last session, and which was vetoed by the President, Mr. Hoover.

The next thing we should have is to provide for an adequate medium of exchange.

My judgment is we should go back to our Constitution and establish a bimetallic standard of both gold and silver as our money. You do not have to go off the gold standard to do this. You would let gold remain as the standard of money, as it is now, and we need it in our foreign trade with countries that are now on a gold standard, and we need silver money for the same reason, to trade with foreign countries that are on a silver basis. Only one-fifth of the nations of the world now use gold and four-fifths use the single silver standard. In other words, we need about four times as much silver as we do gold, to carry on our trade with the world.

The two metals, gold and silver, should be linked together as is provided for in a bill I introduced and as is provided for in the Cross bill now on the calendar.

This bill, the Cross bill, was reported out by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The title of the bill is as follows:

To restore confidence by raising commodity prices through expanding the currency by using silver to broaden the metallic monetary base while preserving the gold standard.

Section 1 of this bill reads as follows:

SECTION 1. That to expand the currency to restore confidence, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to purchase silver bullion, at the market price, whenever 371.25 grains of fine silver is less in value than 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, and to pay for same by issuing to the seller or sellers silver certificates in denominations of $1, $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100, payable to bear an admand payable to bearer on demand.

Section 2 provides for the ratio between the two metals to be used. The section provides that the silver certificates issued under the act shall be good legal tender for all debts, both public and private.

Section 3 provides as follows:

That there shall be engraved on one side of each silver certificate issued, "This certifies that there is on deposit in the Treasury of the United States silver bullion equivalent, when valued in gold, to the face value of this certificate," and on the reverse side, "This certificate is legal tender for all debts, both public and private.'

This section ties the two metals together and is as good as the other.

Section 5 reads as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized and directed to issue additional certificates against said silver bullion so acquired and deposited in the Treasury under this act: Provided, That the amount of silver bullion so acquired and on deposit in the Treasury as aforesaid exceeds by 10 per cent in value all certificates issued against same, including the additional certificates when valued in gold. The additional certificates so sued shall be put in circulation by discharging current obligations of the Government.

This provision will keep the two metals in a comparative parity or balance. The silver in a silver dollar now is worth about 25 cents. When it is remonetized it will bring its value back to 100 per cent.

A gold dollar when measured in farm products is now worth $2.02. As silver comes up gold will go down until it reaches a level with silver. This will bring commodity prices up and then the man who produces can live.

Section 6 reads as follows:

That should at any time the amount of silver bullion acquired and deposited in the Treasury under this act become in value less than 10 per cent in excess of the face value of all certificates outstanding against same, the Secretary of the Treasury shall at once proceed to purchase a sufficient amount of silver bullion and deposit same in the Treasury until the amount on deposit in the Treasury shall exceed by 10 per cent in value the total face value of all certificates issued and outstanding against same, and the sum of $100,000,000 is hereby appropriated to be used for that purpose if necessary.

Section 7 of the bill further ties the two metals together and no man can say that one is not just as good as the other.

Other nations who are on the gold standard, like France, are now putting in use more silver money than they have ever had. The Constitution of the United States gives to Congress the power to coin money and to regulate value thereof. Congress several years ago turned this power by act of Congress over to Federal reserve.

The law provides that a reserve of 40 per cent of gold shall be kept in the Treasury for the redemption of gold certificates. There is not enough gold in the world to carry on the business of the world. We only have $11,000,000,000 of gold in the world. The United States has nearly five billion of that and France about four billion, leaving only two billion for the rest of the world. The world can not carry on business and prosper on a single gold standard. There is just about the same amount of silver in the world as there is gold. and if every ounce of gold and silver in the world was coined into money we would not have any too much of it.

To illustrate what I have tried to say, let me say this: When you use the two metals you establish a scale of justice to weigh the two metals in. When justice is done the scales would be in even balance. If one of the metals went high, and the other low, all you have to do is to use one that is low and the one that is high will come down to a balance with the other.

To further illustrate, let me use this crude illustration. Suppose we only had two meats, pork and beef. Then let us suppose that Congress had the power by legislation to say which one of the two should be used by the 120,000,000 people. If they said you should all use beef it would be high and pork would be low, or if the act said you should eat pork it would go high and beef low. But if you have the right to use both, when one goes high you can use the other, and by that means you will keep them on a parity one with the other.

If we go to a double standard of money the same will be true. Give us a low tariff and a medium of exchange to carry on business and prosperity will come from around the

REGULATIONS GOVERNING VESSELS IN HARBORS, RIVERS, AND INLAND WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 4008, to amend article 5 of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1897, relating to the approval of regulations for preventing collisons upon certain harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like some explanation of this matter.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that this bill was recommended by the Department of Commerce. There was no objection from any source except one company that operated a large number of scows, and apprehended that it might not include scows, and with the consent of the Department of Commerce, because I consulted with them, it was amended, and that is the committee amendment. With that amendment it meets the approval of everybody as far as I know. I will state it is simply to make the international rules and our own law conform on the regulation with respect to those lights.

Mr. JENKINS. I might state to the gentleman that from my reading of the bill and the report, it must be a very satisfactory and necessary bill, although I raised the point with reference to it just so the gentleman might explain it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That article 5 of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1897, be amended by striking out the word "or" after the word "way" and preceding the word "being" in the first line thereof, and adding the words "and any vessel" after the word "way" and before the word "being" hereinabove referred to; and that the article be further amended by inserting a comma and the words "except barges and canal boats, when in tow of steam vessels," between the words "towed" and "shall," so that the article as amended shall read as follows:

"Art. 5. A sailing vessel under way and any vessel being towed, except barges and canal boats, when in tow of steam vessels, shall carry the same lights as are prescribed in article 2 for a steam vessel under way, with the exception of the white lights mentioned therein, which they shall never carry."

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 9, strike out the words "barges and canal boats" and insert "barges, canal boats, scows, and other vessels of nondescript type"; page 2, line 6, strike out the words "barges and canal boats" and insert "barges, canal boats, scows, and other vessels of nondescript type."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SELECTION OF CERTAIN LAND FOR CALIFORNIA STATE PARK SYSTEM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14534, to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State park system.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, there are 189,940 acres of public land involved in this bill. I doubt the wisdom of passing a bill of this magnitude in the closing hours of Congress, in the closing session of Congress, under unanimous consent. Since, however, the gentleman from California [Mr. Swing] desires to make a statement, he may do so, if the Members are willing to give him the time, and I will reserve the objection, but ultimately I shall object.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I want to read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior to the Senate Committee on Public Lands, which explains exactly why this proposal is before the House. The report reads as follows:

The Nation is fortunate to have this opportunity to pre some of the remains of the great palm forests formerly existing in southern California, such as are found in this area. Its outin southern Cainornia, such as are found in this area. Its outstanding qualities are of countrywide interest. The State of California has sensed its responsibility in preserving this unique area which can not be duplicated elsewhere. The State of California has already purchased 5,000 acres of strategic privately owned lands, interspersing the public lands, and stands ready to bear all the expense of building the necessary roads, and developing protecting and maintaining this proposed State park for the ing, protecting, and maintaining this proposed State park for the people.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. Yes. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If this bill becomes a law, will the Government have to pay taxes to the State of California as we have to do in Oregon?

Mr. SWING. This bill will cost the United States Government absolutely nothing.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is what they told us when we passed that bill for Oregon.

Mr. SWING. The State of California will bear all of the expenses, both of the establishment, the maintenance and operation, and the protection of the area as a State park.

Let me say that the Land Office has made a field survey of this land. I wish the gentleman from Texas would note the statement appearing on page 4 in the report to this

It appears from a report made by the field service of this office (General Land Office) that the public lands withdrawn July 18,

And those are ones covered by the bill-are nonmineral, contain no commercial timber, and are, with the exception of a small portion in the valley proper without value for agricultural purposes.

The area is desert in character, but the rare specimens of cacti and other desert flora are being raided by selfish people, who carry them away to their homes and plant them in their yards. This flora ought to be preserved for the benefit of all the people of this generation and future generations also. The State of California is willing to preserve them at its own expense for the benefit of the people of the Nation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SWING. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. These are now public lands, are they

Mr. SWING. They are and subject to be entered under our public land laws.

Mr. BLANTON. These are now public lands, are they

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. They belong to the people of the United States?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. They are subject to entry by the people of the United States?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does my friend, the gentleman from California, get as many applications from his constituents as we who live elsewhere get from ours for information and data respecting public lands that may be entered?

Mr. SWING. I get inquiries.

Mr. BLANTON. I wrote letters to-day to the Commissioner of the General Land Office asking that he send out this information. People want to take up these public lands. They want to enter them. We must give them a chance.

Mr. SWING. It would be an injury to settlers to permit them to take this land up because it is not agricultural land. There is not enough water to raise a crop on any of it.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to remind the gentleman from California of the fact that in the State of Texas the public lands were distributed to the counties for school purposes. Each of the 254 counties in Texas was allotted certain school lands, but half of those counties have let their lands get away from them through improvident acts of the officials who had it in charge.

Mr. SWING. If any part of this land was agricultural land I would not favor setting it aside as a park.

Mr. BLANTON. We Representatives here in Congress are the custodians for the people of the public lands of the United States, and as one custodian I am here to see that these lands are not frittered away.

Mr. SWING. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that it would be an injustice to the people themselves to encourage them to go on this kind of land where there is poor soil, no water, no rainfall, and no possibility of raising crops. The only things there of value are the unusual desert fauna and flora, and they must be preserved for the many, not allowed to be destroyed by the few. The county of San Diego would be the first one to oppose this withdrawal from sale to the public, in the interest of its own right to tax private lands, if it could be sold to private people, but as there is no sale for it to individuals, the county of San Diego favors its use for State park purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. When our friend comes back here two years from now we will then see about his bill, but now we object.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS NEW YORK BAY BETWEEN BROOKLYN AND STATEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14631, authorizing the Interboro Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across New York Bay between Brooklyn and Staten Island.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object I notice that the Bureau of Roads of the Department of Agriculture says that this appears to be a matter which concerns chiefly the city of New York and for that reason the department does not feel that it should interpose any objection. I am going to relieve the department of that, because I expect to object.

The city of New York has the Brooklyn Bridge, the Manhattan Bridge, the Williamsburg Bridge, and the port of Albany has built the George Washington Bridge. We have about 100 bridges in New York City, and as long as I am here we are not going to peddle out franchises for bridges across the Bay of New York.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. I am very much interested in the position the gentleman from New York has taken. Unfortunately the gentleman is not going to be with us in the next Congress. Lately he has developed a very strong antipathy, apparently, to certain bridge bills, just like the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I am following the policy of the Road Bureau.

Mr. JENKINS. I do not find fault with it, but I wish the gentleman would take 5 or 10 minutes to give us the benefit of his research and the reason why he has taken this position on all these bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DEGREE-CONFERRING INSTITUTIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 100, to amend section 586c of the act entitled "An act to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions," approved March 2, 1929.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the universities' bill? I do not see the necessity for calling up this bill now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a minute?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I withhold it a moment.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman from New York in favor of every little two-bit, so-called correspondence school in Washington's conferring B. A. and other degrees?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That is why I am objecting.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not this the bill designed to stop that very practice?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Oh, it does not. This is a bill to break down the law prohibiting that and extending the privilege to a so-called American university in a foreign country.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought that it was the other bill, which had a favorable committee report, which would break up this diploma mill in Washington.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This would let down the bars, and I do not want to let down the bars.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TRANSFER OF LAND TO HAWAII

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 13042, to authorize the transfer of land from the War Department to the Territory of Hawaii.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to transfer to the Territory of Hawaii all the right, title, and interest of the United States in such portion of the land at the base of the east breakwater at Kahului, county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, as is not required for the maintenance of said breakwater, on such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War may determine.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "determine," insert "Provided, That the conveyance shall be upon the express condition and with a reservation reserving the right to resume and occupy said tract of land whenever in the judgment of the President an emergency exists that requires the use and appropriation of the same for public defense, and also with the further reservation as to that portion of said tract of land other than that known as Pier No. I and the land immediately adjacent thereto that it shall be used for park purposes, and that in case it is not so used it shall revert to the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TAX ON FURS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14532, to amend section 604 of the revenue act of 1932, relating to the tax on

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This is simply to carry out the intent of Congress on the original section. When this section was put in the revenue bill. I personally asked the gentleman

Mr. GOSS. I am familiar with that debate of the gentleman with Mr. Crisp in trying to correct this; but I may say to the gentleman I do not think that the consideration of the Consent Calendar is a good time to open up the question of the tariff, when there are several gentlemen present on the floor with amendments to the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am simply telling the gentleman what this does.

Mr. GOSS. I am in sympathy with that part of it, but there are gentlemen sitting around here who would be glad to have considered general provisions of the tariff bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman reserve his objection until I can explain the nature of the bill?

Mr. GOSS. I withhold it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This bill amends section 604 of the revenue act of 1932, taxing furs. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] has said, at the time of its debate in the House it was not clear what was the real intent of the committee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. La-Guardial and myself engaged in a colloquy with members of the Ways and Means Committee, particularly Mr. CRISP, the acting chairman. This is the situation that has arisen. Section 604 taxed furs or the material to which they were attached whenever the fur was the component material of chief value. The latter language led to the trouble. The tax was intended to be on furs, we felt, but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue ruled so they took a coat, for instance, and if the fur was the most valuable thing on the coat, they taxed the whole coat. This was not so bad, but when the Commissioner of Internal Revenue issued his regulations in reference to the matter, instead of taking the whole coat in contrast to the fur to find out which was the more valuable, he broke down the coat into certain parts, cloth, lining, and findings, so in every event he could find that the fur was the most valuable material in the coat.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. He excluded labor, and then when he taxed it he taxed the whole thing, including labor.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Exactly; so his regulation was contrary to the real intent of Congress when it passed the revenue act.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am in favor of doing what this bill seeks to accomplish, but I think the best thing for the gentleman to do, if, as he says, the Treasury has violated the intent of Congress, is to get the new Secretary to make a change. I would like to know why the Committee on Ways and Means brings in a bill like this and keeps in its pigeonhole the bills to eliminate the tax on checks and the bill to restore first-class postage to a rate of 2 cents. They are very important measures.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, I am not responsible for that.

Mr. GOSS. That is my point, Mr. Speaker. I object.

SALARY RATES OF CERTAIN CIVIL-SERVICE POSITIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14410, to amend section 3 of the act of May 28, 1928, relating to salary rates of certain civil-service positions.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman desires to be heard, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to object?

Mr. BLANTON. Eventually, yes.

Mr. JEFFERS. Would the gentleman be at all open to an explanation of this measure?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to allow a bill to pass by unanimous consent which in any way enlarges the present

Mr. JEFFERS. This is simply a bill to make corrections in the maladministration of the law enacted by the Congress of the United States when the original classification act was passed.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFERS. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that I now have before the committee my House Joint Resolution 344 to repeal that act of 1923 and readjust all of the maladministration matters that have come from it. We ought not to do that by piecemeal. In my judgment, if we do not repeal that act in toto, we will not have done the thing that would help bring the Government back to normalcy quicker than anything else.

Mr. JEFFERS. In this case deserving people who are not responsible will be penalized.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there are lots of deserving people penalized by that act. There are many hard-working employees in the Government who are working for starvation wages, while some numerous pets at the top are getting enormous wages, with their salaries doubled and trebled since 1923.

Mr. JEFFERS. This is for the relief of employees. Mr. BLANTON. But for only a few of them. We ought not to do it by piecemeal; we ought to go to the root of the whole thing. I object.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES TO WIDOWS OF PERSONS WHO SERVED IN INDIAN WARS

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 2654, to allow credit in connection with homestead entries to widows of persons who served in certain Indian wars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire whether we granted the same privilege to the children who are minors in case of death of the widow of veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Civil War, and the World War? I did not have time to examine the statute.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I can not tell the gentleman from Wisconsin, but I am sure it must have contained a provision for the young children of widows.

Mr. STAFFORD. Assuming that a widow dies leaving a child 4 or 5 years of age, is it proposed to grant the child a patent?

Mr. CHAVEZ. If the mother has applied for a homestead prior to that time, yes. Of course, it would be under the jurisdiction of the probate court.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House the number of persons that would be benefited by this gratuity?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Oh, there could not be many; the Indian wars took place a long time ago.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

the provisions of such act, if such widow is unmarried and otherwise qualified to make entry of public lands under the provisions of the homestead laws of the United States and has heretofore made or shall hereafter make such entry: Provided, That in the event of the death of any such widow prior to perfection of title, leaving only a minor child or children, patent shall issue to the said minor child or children upon proof of death, and of the minority of the child or children, without further showing or compilers with law. compliance with law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Has the bill been amended as recommended by the commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. CHAVEZ. It has been so amended.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that this is in the identic form that meets his approval?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS, ETC.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill, S. 5233, to provide for the protection of national military parks, national parks, battlefield sites, national monuments, and miscellaneous memorials under the control of the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. There are two things that I desire to inquire about. First, what publication, if any, is provided for the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War by reason of the provisions of this bill; and, second, whether these regulations are uniform? It seems to me that, if we are going to constitute a crime for the violation of any regulation made by the Secretary of War and the regulations are not published and a caretaker can arrest on account of a violation, we are going too far.

Mr. McSWAIN. So far as the regulations' being uniform is concerned, there will be no question about that.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. How can the public have knowledge of

Mr. McSWAIN. There can be no knowledge of a constructive nature so far as I know, except I should think that common sense would dictate that copies of the regulations be posted at each of the reservations or military parks.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And also let us hope that the regulations would be the result of common sense.

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; that the regulations be uniform and practical. The reason behind this bill is this: It is not an effort to aggrandize power, but complaints have come up from a great many communities that these reservations in these days of automobiles have become a sort of legal no man's land, and to prevent immoralities or indecencies of a certain sort in these parks it is desirable that these guards and caretakers have police powers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We are granting authority here to the Secretary of War to make certain regulations. Then we provide that any person who violates any such regulation is guilty of a misdemeanor, and we provide further he is subject to a maximum fine of $100 or imprisonment for three months. It seems to me that is a little severe.

Mr. McSWAIN. I see much in the gentleman's point, that the regulations should be promulgated and published so that any person who contemplates a violation may know what would be the penalty and what practices are prohibited.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman accept an amendment on line 9, page 1, to insert, after the word "who," the words "knowingly and," so that it would read "and any person who knowingly and willfully violates any such regulation," and so forth?

Mr. PATTERSON. What is the regulation?
Mr. LaGUARDIA. We do not know.
Mr. PATTERSON. I think it is important to have some idea of that.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. You can not be presumed to know regulations. Every one is presumed to know the law.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that with reference to most of these national military parks and monuments, the bills authorizing them carry this authority, and the Secretary of War to-day has the authority to make these regulations, and a violation of the regulations constitutes a crime along the same line as is provided for in this bill. There are a few of these monuments and parks where the police guarding them do not have any such authority. Therefore this bill is offered to take care of the situation where there is no authority.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is that all it does?

Mr. McSWAIN. Not only is the power already in existence to promulgate regulations, but this proposes to give them power to enforce the regulations.

Mr. PATTERSON. And they do not have power now to enforce them?

Mr. McSWAIN. No.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am very much in sympathy with the purpose of the bill, but I am wondering if this power will not be abused in some instances.

Mr. McSWAIN. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from New York would prevent the abuse of the power, because a man can not wilfully and knowingly violate a regulation unless he has a chance to know what the regulation is.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I think so.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] has brought out the fact that somebody is liable to be fined or sent to jail for three months. What court would have jurisdiction over that?

Mr. McSWAIN. The Federal court.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the legislation, you are merely giving to the Secretary of War the same authority now carried in law so far as national parks are concerned, which is vested in the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. McSWAIN. That is my information; and also the same power that is given the Secretary of Agriculture with regard to certain lands in the prevention of tick fever and things of that kind.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The Secretary of the Interior has this authority with reference to national parks. It would come under the Interior Department. There is nothing new about this legislation. There are plenty of precedents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe such regulations as he deems necessary for the proper government and protection of, and maintenance of good order in, national military parks, national parks, battlefield sites, national monuments, and miscellaneous memorials as are now or hereafter may be under the control of the War Department; and any person who willfully violates any such regulation shall be any person who willfully violates any such regulation shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 2. That the commissioners, superintendents, caretakers, officers, or guards of such national military parks, national parks, battlefield sites, national monuments, and miscellaneous memorials, or any of them, are authorized to make arrests for violations of any of the regulations prescribed pursuant to this act, and to bring the offenders before the nearest commissioner, judge, or court of the United States having jurisdiction in the premises.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LaGuardia: On page 1, line 4, after the word prescribe," insert "and publish," and in line 9, after the word who," insert "knowingly and."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MORRISTOWN NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 5469) to provide for the creation of the Morristown National Historical Park in the State of New Jersey, and for other purposes, with amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when title to all the lands, structures, and other property in the military camp-ground areas and other areas of Revolutionary War interest at and in the vicinity of Morristown, N. J., as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of his discretion, as necessary or desirable for national-park purposes, shall have been vested in the United States, such areas shall be, and they are hereby, established, dedicated, and set apart as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, and shall be known as the Morristown National Historical Park: Provided, That the United States shall not purchase by appropriation of public moneys any lands within the aforesaid areas, but such lands shall be secured by the United States only by public or private donation: And by the United States only by public or private donation: And provided further, That such areas shall include, at least, Jockey Hollow camp site, now owned by Lloyd W. Smith and the town of Morristown; Fort Nonsense, now owned by the town of Morristown; and the George Washington headquarters, known as the Ford House, with its museum and other personal effects and its grounds, now owned by the Washington Association of New Jersey.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept donations of land, interest in land, buildings, structures, and other property within the boundaries of said park as determined and fixed hereunder and donations of funds for the purchase and/or maintenance thereof, the title and evidence of title to lands purchased to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States other lands, easements, and buildings of Revolutionary War interest in Morris and adjacent counties in New Jersey as may be donated for the extension of the Morristown National Historical donated for the extension of the Morristown National Historical such museum and library shall forever be maintained as a part of said Morristown National Historical Park.

Sec. 4. The Washington Association of New Jersey, Lloyd W. Smith and the town of Morristown having, by their patriotic and active interest in conserving for posterity these important historical areas and objects, the board of trustees and the executive committee of the said association, together with Mrs. Willard W. Cutler, its curator, and Clyde Potts, at present mayor of Morristown, shall hereafter act as a board of advisers in the maintenance of said park. The said association shall have the right to hold its meetings in said Ford House.

Sec. 6. The administration, protection, and development of aforesaid National Historial Park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes," as amended (U. S. C., title 16, secs. 1-4): Provided, That no appropriation of Federal funds for administration, protection, and maintenance of said park in excess of $7,500 annually shall be made for the fiscal years 1934, 1935, and 1936.

Sec. 7. Nothing in this act shall be held to deprive the State of New Jersey, or any political subdivision thereof, of its civil and criminal jurisdiction in and over the area included in said National Historical Park, nor shall this act in any way impair or affect the rights of citizenship of any resident therein; and save and except as the consent of the State of New Jersey may be hereafter given, the legislative authority of said State in and over all areas included within such National Historical Park shall not be diminished or affected by the creation of said park, nor by any terms and provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MICHENER. I am, Mr. Speaker. Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be notified when I have consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the creation of a national historical park by setting aside certain areas at and in the vicinity of Morristown, N. J. Mr. Lloyd W. Smith proposes to donate to the Federal Government approximately 1,000 acres of land, and the city of Morristown has, by a referendum of its citizens, voted to turn over about 300 acres of land to the Federal Government. These two gifts comprise the camp ground occupied by the Revolutionary Army during the winters of 1779 and 1780, and the Revolutionary cemetery. In addition, the Washington Association of New Jersey proposed to donate the famous Ford House, used by General Washington and his staff as headquarters during the time the Army was in camp at Morristown. This donation is to include also the many priceless relics which have been collected by the Washington Association.

As a matter of historical interest, General Washington and his army spent approximately one-eighth of the entire Revolutionary period at Morristown. Among the generals on duty with the Army during the encampment at Morristown were Greene, DeKalb, Knox, Von Steuben, Lafayette, St. Clair, Howe, Stirling, Stark, Clinton, Maxwell, Hand, Irvine, Smallwood, Gist, and Huntington. During the winter and spring the Revolution Army was camped at Morristown, General Baron von Steuben, that great German soldier of the army of Frederick the Great, was in charge of the drilling and disciplining of the Revolutionary Army, and at the beginning of the spring campaign of 1780 remarked that the Revolutionary Army was the best drilled army in the world. It was at this camp that the French minister and a committee from Congress brought the news that France was to come to the assistance of the Colonies.

Much of the powder used by the Continental Army was made in a powder mill located in the rear of Washington's headquarters, and is to be included in the park area. The location of this powder mill and iron works, which were making shot and munitions, gave Morristown a peculiar importance in the minds of the British. A number of attempts were made by the British to reach Morristown to destroy these works, but no British soldier ever set foot in Morristown, except as a prisoner of war.

The entire area has been marked by patriotic societies, replicas of the log huts have been reconstructed, and the entire area, including the famous Jockey Hollow camp ground and Fort Nonsense are now in practically the same condition as they were at the time of the Revolutionary War. The Ford mansion, which is now known as Washington's headquarters, has been preserved by the Washington Association and is considered to be the finest Washington museum in the country. It contains an original Stuart portrait of Washington, an original Houdon bust, and Washington's original commission as Commander in Chief of the Army, signed by John Hancock; also the uniform in which he attended the inaugural ball. It also contains most of the original furniture used by General and Mrs. Washington and many of their personal belongings.

Governor Randolph, at the dedication of Washington's headquarters in 1875, said, "Under this roof have gathered more characters known to the military history of our Revolution than under any other roof in America.'

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized by this bill to accept donations of land, interests in land, building structures, and other property; and we are reliably advised that if this bill becomes a law, there will be turned over additional lands and property of great historical and monetary value. It is estimated that the areas now included are valued in excess of $1,000,000.

It must be remembered that New Jersey was in reality the battleground of the Revolutionary War. On 10 separate occasions Washington with his army traversed the State. The important and decisive battles of Princeton, Trenton, Monmouth Courthouse, Red Bank, Springfield, and innumerable engagements were fought in New Jersey.

The establishment of a national historical park in this location so close to the great metropolitan districts and less than 25 miles from the city of New York will be of inestimable value in recalling to the present generation the privations, suffering, patriotism, and final victory of the American Colonies from which has grown this great Republic.

I trust that there will not be a vote in opposition to accepting this splendid and patriotic gift. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEWART. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. There is now in this Ford House mentioned a museum, is there not, which visitors attend?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And there is a charge made for admission?

Mr. STEWART. I am not sure about the charge.

Mr. BLANTON. Formerly there was an admission charge. Is there not a charge made now?

Mr. STEWART. I think not.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is a place of historical interest, to which many people go now, from all parts of the United States?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; that is true.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. From a reading of the bill I judge it is the intent to make this park somewhat like our military park at Gettysburg and the one at Chickamauga commemorating the great military feats of the Revolutionary Army?

Mr. STEWART. There were no battles fought at Morristown proper.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Were there any battles fought on this particular ground?

Mr. STEWART. No. This is the great encampment and drill ground. It was practically the Government of the United States during the Revolutionary period, because Congress was in constant touch with Washington at that particular location.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Washington had his headquarters there?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is more in the nature of an historical museum than anything else?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but it involves 1,300 acres. It is more than a museum.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The reason I asked the question I wondered if, in preparing the bill, the gentleman considered whether this park should be under the Secretary of War or whether it should be under the Department of the Interior; and, if so, what reasons actuated the gentleman?

Mr. STEWART. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Fuller] at this point, and he can explain the entire viewpoint of the committee. Of course, I do not know what their deliberations were.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STEWART. I yield.
Mr. WATSON. Morristown is so closely allied with Washington when he was on the west side of the Delaware River and when Washington crossed the Delaware River and attacked Trenton and there established our Nation that we should not turn down the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. STEWART. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WATSON. It is said that Washington's Farewell Address was never delivered, but it was printed in a Philadelphia paper. That original address was bought and is now in one of the historical societies of Washington. The Congress failed to appropriate $2,000 for that very important paper. I think we as Members of Congress and that this great Nation should not turn down the gentleman's proposition, which is an historical one for those who come after us.

Mr. STEWART. I thank the gentleman. I can not yield further. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is probably wholesome. There is not any question about the historic value of this site. There is not any question but that there is a splendid museum there. There is not any question but that it is owned by wealthy people—that it is available to the public. But there is a question as to whether or not the Federal Government at this time should accept any more parks which are to be developed, maintained, and protected under the National Park Service. If this bill becomes a law, it must be remembered that we will have authorized all appropriations necessary in the future for the development, for the maintenance, and for the care of this particular park, and will have removed from the tax rolls all of this property.

It is true the bill provides for an appropriation of only $7,500 per annum for three years, but at the end of this period without further legislation it will be possible for the Committee on Appropriations to allow such money as it may see fit for any purpose authorized under the National Park Service Act.

We have a number of parks of this particular nature now rapping at the door of Congress for consideration. I heard one Member from another State say on the floor this afternoon, that he had a park up there where there were some historic monuments that he had contemplated and does contemplate asking the Federal Government to take over and maintain in the future. Why? Not because the State is not maintaining it but because the State and those who own the museums desire to-day to shift from their backs the burden of maintenance in the future.

In prosperous times, possibly, it is all right for the Federal Government to indulge in activities of this kind; but with men out of work, with everybody borne down by the burden of taxation, I think Congress can little afford to embark upon further park development. When people are crying for bread I am surprised that a bill of this nature should be brought before the House. Oh, yes, it calls for but $7,500 a year for the next three years, but tell me what is going to happen after three years? Even though the $7,500 be a mere pittance it is one of the little things which added together make up the big things that make the taxes we must raise to-day. This is the place to begin with economy legislation.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. As a matter of fact, this is about the first bill that has been introduced which gives the Government something for nothing. The Government is being given property worth $1,000,000 for only $7,500 a year for maintenance.

Mr. MICHENER. I yield no further. There is another bill pending providing for the taking over of the Everglades in Florida. Some people call it the alligator park bill. It is along the same lines this bill is. The Government is to get something for nothing. If we pass one bill both should be passed, for the reason that in the other case land onlythe Everglades—are given to the Federal Government. All we have to do is to maintain them, keep them, develop them, and protect them in the future. That is just what we are asked to do under the present bill. It is true that is a natural park. It is the Everglades. They want to preserve rare species of alligators, snakes, and fish.

In this bill now before us we are asked to lift from the wealthy constituents of the gentleman from New Jersey the burden of caring for this park at this time. Some day we may want to do this, but, Mr. Speaker, now is not the time. The American people have placed their stamp of disapproval upon anything along this line, and this House can ill afford to adopt a bill of this kind.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Do I understand the gist of the argument of the gentleman from Michigan is that the holy and sacred ground occupied by Washington and the fathers of this Republic is on a level with the alligators and the snakes of the Everglades?

Mr. MICHENER. Oh, the gentleman's question is so facetious that it ill becomes his intelligence to ask it on the floor of the House. He knows better. He knows my comparison was not that. They are both parks. Each has its virtue. There is just as much virtue in developing the Everglades Park as there is in turning over this one which has already been developed.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. But this park in New Jersey has to do with stirring events in our national life. It has nothing to do with alligators or snakes.

Mr. TABER. The virtue is that the Government pays the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under ordinary conditions, if we were in a state of normalcy, I would have no objection to this bill provided there were eliminated from it twothirds of the last section, section 7.

I am not in favor of the Government of the United States ! accepting any gift that has strings all over it. Whenever the Government of the United States accepts 1,300 acres of land I want it to be within the control of the Government of the United States and not within the control of a State legislature.

Notice this language from section 7:

Nor shall this act in any way impair or affect the rights of citizenship of any resident therein; and save and except as the consent of the State of New Jersey may be hereafter given, the legislative authority of said State in and over all areas included within such national historical park shall not be diminished or affected by the creation of said park, nor by any terms and provisions of this act.

It leaves absolute control in the hands of the New Jersey Legislature, and Congress does not have a word to say about it. I am not willing for the Government of the United States to take over an area of 1,300 acres of land to develop, care for, and protect throughout the years, and allowing New Jersey, through its legislature, full control of it, to say what shall be done with this or with that concerning the park.

Now, it is true we can not spend more than $7,500 annually for the next three years on this park, but after that what is contemplated, and after the three years what is in mind? It is that after this 3-year period is up, the Government then will commence to develop and protect this 1,300-acre park subject to whatever provision the Legislature of New Jersey may see fit from time to time to inflict by law upon the management of the park, and it may cost us eventually several hundred thousands of dollars.

Talk about the shrine of the great Father of our Country. I will tell you where the real shrine is. It is down at Mount Vernon, where Washington spent much of his married life. The first thing I want to see done about a Washington national shrine is to remove the admission charge that must be paid by every American boy and girl who goes to Mount Vernon—the shrine of the Father of his Country. There are several thousand people in Washington to-day who have never been to Mount Vernon. They can not afford the time. Some of them are poor people and can not afford to pay the admission charge. If you would take off the admission charge at Mount Vernon, every school child in Washington could go there and every school child in Washington ought to go there. There is nothing about Mount Vernon that is connected with war or bloodshed. It is a real shrine. It is something that uplifts every American. We ought not to pass this bill now, and when we do pass the bill we ought to take off these strings tied to it. If we could amend the bill and take the provisions with respect to control by the State Legislature of New Jersey out of it, I would vote for it; but as long as you put the control of this 1,300-acre tract of land in the hands of the State legislature, I am opposed to it. I want to see the strings taken off before we pass a measure of this kind.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the Public Lands Committee it received its unanimous indorsement. The Republican members of the committee from the West, I think, are better qualified with respect to matters of this kind than any group in the House, and many of them went to New Jersey and inspected this proposed park.

There is no comparison between this park and the proposed Everglades Park. There is not the slightest resemblance between the two.

We had a special rule for the consideration of this measure, but we did not bring it up. This means something for our Government.

It happened that a certain man some time ago purchased what is called "Jockey Hollow," consisting of 1,000 acres, where for seven years the American Revolutionary forces camped every year. This place is now improved in every way, and the Government does not need to spend anything upon it. The old houses have been restored, and this man is now getting old and has agreed that if we will take this offer up at once he will donate this entire tract worth $500,000. The city has had a referendum and is turning over to us a park of about 350 acres. They are also turning over to us the Ford House, with about 5 or 6 acres of land in connection with it. There is a museum in this house, and this is selfsustaining right now. It does not cost $3,000 a year now to operate it, and if the Government through the Interior Department wants to do so it can go ahead and charge fees and make this self-sustaining.

This is a matter where we are getting much over $1,000,000 in actual value, and we are saving something of great historic value for posterity.

The last two books on the life of Washington that have come to us were written in the Ford House, which is on this spot.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If this proposition can be made self-supporting, why is the Government asked to pay for its maintenance? Why do not those who have it now keep it?

Mr. FULLER. They will if we do not accept this offer. They are wealthy and willing the Government should have it for a much-needed historical park.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think they should keep it at this time?

Mr. FULLER. No; no one else has ever come here and offered us anything like this since I have been on the committee. This is a patriotic movement started by the citizens of this town and fostered by the legislature and the governor

Now, as to section 7, this section we have inserted for the purpose of preventing the Government from being required to go into the court and take care of criminal prosecutions.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Why, not five minutes ago we had up a bill under which we had to extend the jurisdiction and power of the Secretary of War in order to provide for the protection and policing of some park, and this section is for the purpose of avoiding that responsibility.

Mr. FULLER. That is exactly why we did it. It was done in order to make the city and the State take care of and police this proposed park so that would not be any expense on the Government.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. There is no charge, as I understand it.

Mr. FULLER. There is no charge. Some one has said there will be a lot of improvements necessary. The improvements have already been made and the roads have been built.

This is the biggest thing we have had before our committee, and it is not like taking a piece of wild territory and making improvements upon it.

At the solicitation of our good Republican friends from the West, we have created park after park out there; and while we have also created a few in other parts of the country, you can name hardly one in the East.

The gentleman from Texas talked about the people having the right to go to Mount Vernon and see the resting place of the Father of Our Country by admission charge. not a public but private property. If they would turn Mount Vernon over to us, do you not suppose every man here would be glad to accept it on behalf of the Government?

This proposed park is only 25 miles from the heart of the greatest city in the world, New York City. The people of this city can go out there and visit this historical place and have much recreation and pleasure at a very beautiful

If you understood this bill like the members of the Committee on Public Lands, there would not be a man within the hearing of my voice who would think of being opposed

We have an amendment attached so as to bring it within the President's program and meet the wishes of the Budget, and this amendment provides that for the next four years the expense shall not exceed $7,500 a year.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART] introduced this measure in the House, where we had extensive hearings. They had a true copy introduced in the Senate. That bill has passed the Senate and is the pending measure for passage in the House. The Committee on Public Lands has refused numerous requests for public parks, but realizes this to be a most meritorious measure, meeting the approval of the Budget, Director of Public Parks, and the President. It carries no appropriation.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am acquainted with this park, it being near my home. George Washington spent one-fourth of his entire campaigning time in New Jersey, centered about Morristown as his headquarters. As for Mount Vernon being a great shrine, in the language of the gentleman from Texas, it is a great shrine because it was the home of George Washington, who in eight years of desperate struggle led our people in war to save us from a dictator. As has been well said, Morristown is the Valley Forge of New Jersey. It ought to be preserved as a sacred shrine by and for our people to the end of time.

And as for the cost, it is proposed to present to the Government of the United States a tract already developed, which is worth now under depressed conditions over $1,000,000. If the United States Government was to spend $10,000 a year for the next hundred years in support of that institution, it would then be worth more than the entire cost. I sincerely hope, in the interest of idealism in our Nation, as well as because of the fact that we are getting a great gift for nothing, the House will put this bill through. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Blanton) there were 124 ayes and 9 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present, and I object to the vote for

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that there is no quorum present. Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-two Members present, not a quorum. That results in an automatic roll call.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 234, nays 107, answered "present" 1, not voting 84, as follows:

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 5445. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex.

The message also announced that the Senate had receded from its amendments numbered 1 and 2 to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of the State of Idaho."

CAMP SITES OR RIFLE RANGES FOR NATIONAL GUARD IN SOUTH DAKOTA

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 1752, to authorize an appropriation for the purchase of land in South Dakota for use as camp sites or rifle ranges for the National Guard of said State.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a sum not to exceed $14,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of camp sites or rifle ranges in the State of South Dakota, for the use of the National Guard of said State. All purchase of land under this act shall be made by the Secretary of War pursuant to law governing the acquisition of land for the use of the National Guard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Texas opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I am; I objected to it on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to myself five

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman calls up a Senate bill, and the Senate bills are not available to Members. Does not the rule provide that bills must be available when they are called up? The same situation occurred with the previous bill—the House bill was available but the Senate bill was not. How are we to know what is being

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that ordinarily that is the rule; but the gentleman from South Dakota moves to suspend the rules and all regulations of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The Senate bill is identical with the House bill.

If I may have the attention of the House while I explain this bill, I do not think there will be any opposition to it. Originally the Government owned a camp site near Watertown, S. Dak. In the 1918 appropriation bill the Secretary of War was authorized to sell National Guard camp sites and rifle ranges where for any reason they might become unavailable for such purposes. The camp site and rifle range was close to the city of Watertown. The town grew toward the camp site until it became dangerous to use the camp site as a rifle and artillery range. Because of that fact the site Under the national defense act of 1916, the law required that in cases where camp sites were sold the proceeds should be placed to the credit of the State, Territory, or District in which the camp site was located. Some one in the Treasury Department handling the funds erroneously placed them to the credit of the general fund, and therefore they became unavailable to the State of South Dakota for use in the purchase of another camp site. The proceeds of sale have remained in the general fund since 1921, and ought to be restored to the State as provided by law. The only way that this can be done now is to authorize the reappropriation of the fund.

Mr. GARBER. To what general fund does the gentleman

Mr. WILLIAMSON. To the general fund for the arming, equipping, and training of the National Guard for the country at large. In 1909 an appropriation of $2,000,000 was made for the purpose, among other things, of buying camp sites and rifle ranges throughout the country, the fund to be distributed among the States of the Union upon the basis of their representation in Congress. Every other State in the Union has received its share of that $2,000,000. They have retained their proportionate shares of that fund until now and always will have it.

So far as I know, the only State in which a camp site has been sold and the money placed in the general fund, is the State of South Dakota. All we are asking is to have the fund credited to the State as required by law. In place of this being done, as stated, it was placed to the credit of the general fund, and therefore has not been available for the purposes intended by Congress. That is all there is to the bill. [Applause.]

This bill has the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, is very much desired by the War Department, and, in all fairness, should be passed at this session.

In 1909, as I have already indicated, there was appropriated $2,000,000 in accordance with the provisions of section 1661, Revised Statutes, as amended by the acts of June 6, 1900, and June 22, 1906, which money was to be used, among other things, for the purchase of camp sites and rifle ranges throughout the United States for the National Guard. The distribution of the money among the several States was made upon the basis of the number of Representatives and Senators in Congress as follows:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five minutes. In 1906 this Government bought 40 acres of land near Watertown, S. Dak., for a military target range. I imagine some of our western friends were instrumental in having that done. Two years later 70 acres more were purchased to add to this target range, so that in all the Government had 110 acres there, which cost the Government $10,640. Following 1918, after our good friend Royal Johnson had gotten back from over yonder and had done such valiant service for the country, it was found that this target range was useless; it was unavailable for the purposes for which it had been purchased. A bill was passed to permit the War Department to dispose of all such useless target ranges. One of two facts had to exist before they could dispose of it. Either the target range had to be "useless" or it must be "unavailable for the purposes for which it was bought." It is to be presumed, when the War Department disposed of it, that it was either useless or unavailable. All these years have run along, and our friend is now wanting the Government to spend as much as $14,000 to reacquire the target range.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment. I would rather the gentleman would use his own time. If the gentleman wants to ask me some questions and will yield me five minutes I shall answer the questions in his time, and not in mine. The question is whether we are going to expend $14,000 to buy it back, and then maintain it each year at a great cost. What is there about these 110 acres near Watertown, S. Dak., that since we sold them suddenly has made them useful or has made them available for a target range? What has happened? Not a thing except the desire of our friend to pass this bill. Why does the Government need the 110 acres for a target range out there? Oh, for the pleasure of some of the boys who want to go out and shoot. I helped to organize a rifle team in Texas, and it is a splendid rifle team and some of the best marksmen in the country are on that team. Instead of calling on the Government for a rifle range, they went several miles from home and secured for themselves a rifle range and they go out there frequently and shoot.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; if the gentleman will yield me some of his time.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I yield one minute to answer the question.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well. Mr. Speaker, I shall answer the gentleman's question in the one minute he has yielded of his time.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The gentleman's State got $70,671 out of the same appropriation, and it has the $70,000 yet.

Mr. BLANTON. I remind the gentleman that we have in Texas 254 counties, and I guarantee that in my home county, Taylor, just 1 out of the 254, we have more expert rifle shots than the gentleman has in his whole State of South Dakota. Texas is a big State. The gentleman could put his State in one corner of our State. Fort Sam Houston at San Antonio, and Fort Bliss at El Paso, and forts along the Mexican border are in Texas. That is the reason for it. I am not advocating the Government buying any rifle ranges down in Texas now. I am advocating that this Government retrench and get back on a sound financial footing. That is what we Democrats promised the people of the United States we would do, and that is what I am going to help the Democrats do, as long as I am a Member of this Congress.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. Oh, just a moment. There is no politics in this. No beer, no wort, and no extra prescriptions from physicians to prescribe beer, which the gentleman put in and which was taken out by the Senate committee to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five additional minutes.

I want to ask my friends this question: I want to ask my new leader here, whom I follow now, our distinguished colleague from the great Northwest, General Martin, of Oregon, and he is my leader now and I am following him many times, I ask you, General Martin, what are you going to do about this retrenchment? What are we going to do about taking this deficit out of the Treasury? What are we going to do to restore the confidence of the people in this Congress?

Have we not got to stop this everlasting spending? Now, if we appropriate $14,000 to buy these 110 acres out near Watertown, S. Dak., for a rifle range, do not you know that every year from then on you will have to appropriate money to take care of it? You will have to appropriate money to pay custodians. You will have to appropriate money to maintain it. I am in favor of cutting down. Now, are we just going to go along and vote for all these bills? From now until we adjourn sine die next Saturday at noon, it behooves everyone of us to sit on this floor day and night all the time and watch every single bill that comes up here under suspension, and if it seeks to take money out of the Treasury that ought not be taken out or that we can get along without taking out, we ought to vote against it. We ought to keep our pledge that we made to the people of the United States when they elected us and gave us 313 Democratic Members in the next House. They did it because they believed we would give them some economy in public business. I am one who is going to keep my pledge to them, the pledge of the Democratic Party that we would cut down expenses; that we would balance this Budget, and that we would put the Government on a sound economical basis.

Are you Republicans with us to do that? Just because my friend from South Dakota wants this little hand-out, are you going to vote with him for it? Hand-outs here and hand-outs there, "You scratch my back and I will scratch your back." Is that still going on in this Congress? There has been too much of it going on. That is why you have a deficit of a billion dollars a year. It is the aggregate of these little amounts that make this big deficit each year.

I know one Member over here, if he votes like he has been preaching, he will vote to stop this spending, and that is McGugin, of Kansas. Are his preachments sincere? Does he mean what he says? Does he want to balance the Budget? Does he want to stop this spending? If you do, McGugin, get up here and I will give you five minutes to speak against this bill. It ought to be stopped.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hill].

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply provides a rifle range for the National Guard of the State of South Dakota, just as the Federal Government has provided rifle ranges for the other States throughout the Nation.

In 1906 the Congress passed an act authorizing the appropriation of $2,000,000 for the purchase of National Guard rifle ranges in the different States. As a result of the passage of this act, a rifle range was purchased near the city of Watertown, S. Dak., for the National Guard of South Dakota. In 1918 there was a provision carried in the War Department appropriation bill authorizing the Secretary of War to sell any National Guard rifle range if, for any reason, that rifle range had become unusuable or unavailable for purposes as a range, provided that if any range be sold, the money derived from that sale be credited to the National Guard of the State in which the range was located.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes; I yield briefly.

Mr. LEAVITT. I notice the Government is paying $640 a year rent now. Would that be stopped if this bill were passed?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Why, certainly. The payment of this rent would be stopped.

Under authority of the War Department appropriation bill of 1918 the Government sold this rifle range at Watertown, S. Dak., and the money derived from the sale of this South Dakota rifle range, in the amount of about $14,000, should have been credited to the National Guard of the State of South Dakota, for the purchase of a new rifle range that was usuable and that would be available for purposes as a rifle range.

Some one in the Treasury Department made an error, and instead of crediting this sum of $14,000 to the National Guard of the State of South Dakota, it was turned into a general fund. As a consequence, the State of South Dakota lost its National Guard rifle range, and the Federal Government has had to pay each year $640 rent to provide a range for that State. All this bill would do would be to take this $14,000 which the Government derived from the sale of the Watertown, S. D., rifle range, and permit the Secretary of War to buy a new and usable range for the State of South Dakota.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. McSWAIN. Is it not a fact that in other States the Federal Government provides each of their National Guards with a range and National Guard encampment sites?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. It does.

Mr. McSWAIN. And unless this bill passes there will be a discrimination against this particular State.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. That is exactly true. There was a rifle range sold in the State of Texas that brought $70,671, and when the sale was made the Government turned this money over for the purchase of a new rifle range, and the National Guard of Texas is to-day using their new rifle range.

We had this rifle range near Watertown, S. Dak. The town grew. This made the rifle range unusable. All we are doing, Mr. Speaker, is simply providing a new range for an old one that became unusuable and had to be sold. We are not taking one dollar out of the Federal Treasury that was not put there by the sale of the old range.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. By a mistake.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Put there by a mistake, exactly. Unless this bill is passed the Government will in the future have to pay $640 a year rent and perhaps even more from year to year, or South Dakota will be the one State of the Union for whose National Guard the United States does not provide a rifle range. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, on this retrenchment policy I am in accord with the Democratic leader from Texas, Mr. Blanton, and shall vote against this appropriation; $14,000 here and $25,000 there and $100,000 some other place all add to the burden of the American taxpayers.

Of course, at all times the gentleman who so kindly yielded this time does not think about the taxpayers. I offered an amendment that would save the taxpayers $9,000,000 on the prohibition-enforcement item of the Coast Guard appropriation. The gentleman from Texas voted against that saving. We also had an amendment to reduce by about $9,000,000 the Prohibition Enforcement Bureau appropriation, and the gentleman forgot all about the taxpayers at that time.

When it came to submitting the eighteenth amendment repeal resolution—which, when ratified, will save the tax-payers hundreds of millions of dollars each year—the gentleman from Texas forgot about the taxpayers. When we look at the facts we find that during the year prior to prohibition the Federal Treasury received $483,000,000 by reason of the tax on beverages containing more than—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SCHAFER. Just a minute; let me finish this—by reason of the tax on beverages containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think it is fair, when he assured me he would use his time in speaking against this bill if I would give it to him, for him to get up now and waste time with a lot of folderol beer bunk?

Mr. SCHAFER. I am speaking against the bill, but I am going farther in the interest of the taxpayers than the gentleman ever dared to go.

Mr. BLANTON. I voted for the funds needed by our efficient Coast Guard and for funds to enforce national prohibition. My official oath "to uphold the Constitution" required that, and I have voted for every real economy proposal thus far.

Mr. SCHAFER. I am with the gentleman in his fight against this pending bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like for my friend not to double-cross me. I did not yield him time to use in double-crossing me.

Mr. SCHAFER. There is no double-crossing at all. I used a few moments to talk in the interest of the taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the President elect for appointing our colleague the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. Douglas] as Director of the Budget. [Applause.] He is an able colleague, and I at this time want to ask the Democratic brethren to support Mr. Douglas in his new undertaking. We all remember back in the last session of Congress when our colleague [Mr. Douglas] was a member of the Economy Committee and made a ringing speech on the floor of the House for economy. The Members on both sides rose and for about five minutes applauded and cheered him. Then a few weeks later the Democratic leader on the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Oliver] stood in this very well and heaped maledictions upon the head of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. Douglas], and the same Democratic brethren reversed themselves and stood up en masse and cheered that castigation. The other day you stood up and cheered and applauded extensively when Mr. Douglas entered the Chamber. I ask you to continue to support and uphold him, because he has a dirty, mean job cut out for himself to reconcile the conflicting promises that the Democratic Party has given to the country to reduce the cost of Government 25 per cent and at the same time fulfill the many other promises that would increase the cost several hundred per cent.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. I am wondering if we can depend upon support from the gentleman's side in the matter of economy?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes; the gentleman always will find plenty of support on the Republican side for real economy. I do not know whether the gentleman was a recent convert to the cause of the antiprohibitionists in their fight to repeal the eighteenth amendment, which amendment has already cost the American taxpayers many billions of dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SCHAFER. Yes; but I want to get back to this bill.
[Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman's friends back in Milwaukee were just about as ungrateful to him as he has been to me for yielding him this time. We had this bill defeated until the gentleman engaged in partisan politics.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman's friends may have been ungrateful in falling for the bunko and conflicting promises of the Democratic Party, but I assure the gentleman that I have not double-crossed him in making this little talk in behalf of substantial relief for the taxpayers. I am truly grateful to the distinguished colleague from Texas for yielding me five minutes in order that I might speak for the taxpayers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Martin].

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize the great honor this old Member of the House, my friend, the gentleman from Texas, has done me by saying he is going to follow me. Well, if he does he is going to get some mighty good legislation. I can tell him that. [Laughter.]

I agree with the gentleman from Texas on this bill. I think it is a reflection at this time, with the country in the shape it is, that Congress should be frittering and fooling away its time on such a bill as this, taking $14,000 out of the Treasury.

Do we want to bankrupt Uncle Sam? The idea of taking $14,000 away from the Treasury at this time. We are spending too much money on the National Guard anyway. Those fellows up there in South Dakota should buy their own rifile ranges the same as the boys do down in Mr. Blanton's district.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER].

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not betray my friend from Texas [Mr. Blanton], by making a speech on another question. I do not think at this serious hour when we are closing this session of Congress we ought to take up time by engaging in levity and discussing questions that are foreign to those which should be under consideration by the House.

I agree with the gentleman from Texas that in the closing hours of Congress every Member should be in his seat and should be watchful of what passes this body. My experience of four years has been that more money is wasted in the last week of Congress than is wasted in the month prior thereto.

I do not believe we ought to go out now, in this time of depression, and spend $14,000 of the Government's money in buying rifle ranges and camp sites. Why, the condition of this country is getting such that you will not have to camp but one night until you will have to move on.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GLOVER. Not just now.

Our country to-day is in absolute distress and much of the country is in want. We have 13,000,000 people to-day out of employment, and we have at least 40,000,000 who are receiving help from the National Government and the State governments under which they live; and yet we come here at this hour and want to give $14,000 to buy a site for rifle practice. I do not think a bill of this kind ought to be considered under suspension of the rules in the closing hours of the Congress.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GLOVER. I yield to my good friend and colleague [Mr. McSwain].

Mr. McSWAIN. I want to ask my distinguished friend if he knows what it costs the Government to provide Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas, as a national camp.

Mr. GLOVER. Fort Logan H. Roots is taking care of more men for the amount of money expended upon it than any place in any State of the Union.

Mr. McSWAIN. I agree with the gentleman; and why should we not let the State of South Dakota have this little rifle range?

Mr. GLOVER. Fort Logan H. Roots is taking care of men who can not take care of themselves. They are taking care of men who are demented and must be cared for by the Government. They are not doing any rifle practice out there, I will say to the gentleman. They can not practice with a rifle. They are not even permitted to go at large. They are confined because they are not able to take care of themselves.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GLOVER. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The State of Arkansas, from which the gentleman comes, got not $14,000 but $35,335.69 from this fund.

Mr. GLOVER. I do not know when they got it. They have not got it since I have been here, and they have not got it at my instance. I think the gentleman is referring to Camp Pike, where so many soldiers have been trained. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, it is my firm conviction that I am the only living man who knows all about the facts in this case, and I am going to try to divorce politics from this matter, state the facts, and I do not worry about how anyone is going to vote, not even the gentleman from Arkansas, the gentleman from Oregon, or the gentleman from Kansas, who have been referred to in this discussion.

In 1906, the year I was graduated from college, the Government appropriated $2,000,000 to buy rifle ranges in the United States. These rifle ranges were sold in every State and, except in the case of the State of South Dakota, the money was properly placed to their credit in the United States Treasury, and with the exception of South Dakota, the other States received the money to which they were entitled. In South Dakota the Government appropriated $10,-000 for the rifle range. About 1907, 1908, and 1909, I was a captain of the National Guard of that State, and those of us who were in the National Guard in those days did not get any money when we attended drills, only when we were in camp. We were just crazy, fool militarists. So we contributed one-half of our salary as officers to improve this property, and I have half of my salary tied up in this, given at a time when I was a captain of the National Guard, and so does every other National Guard officer who served during those years. This is the reason the land was sold for $13,000 instead of the $10,000 the Government paid for it. We gave the money to improve it.

When this money came back to the Treasury it was reappropriated to the States, and every other State in the United States has a range but this State. Some clerk in the War Department made a mistake and credited this money to the general fund, and South Dakota has never been able to get it.

This rifle range was set in close to the city of Watertown and things were expanding and then the World War came on. South Dakota does not have much infantry now; it has artillery, and there is no artillery range, although the State has a National Guard organization. If this money is expended, it will go into a combined rifle and artillery range, and it takes some land for that.

This will save the Government $640 a year rent for all

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Does this call for a rifle range?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes; but it is also an artillery range. It is all thrown into one, as the gentleman knows, because he knows something about war.

The gentleman from Arkansas, whom I respect very much, I know believes in economy. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Glover] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSwain], who, incidentally, is for this bill, because he knows the facts and knows about war, well remember the facts in connection with the construction of perhaps the greatest hospital in the United States in the city of Hot Springs, which was necessary at that time.

Let us take up some of the other States which have secured money out of this fund to which they were entitled.

Alabama, $43,000; Arkansas, $25,000; money that was their money, except that South Dakota guard officers paid $3,000 out of our salaries.

Texas, another great State, who had some great soldiers, $30,671; Wisconsin, $51,040.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Were those appropriations for ranges?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. For ranges, exactly as this one is, out of money appropriated, and which they secured, and the State of South Dakota could not secure, because of a mistake of a clerk in the War Department who credited it to the general fund instead of to South Dakota.

Now, this will save $640 a year.

They must have this range, and the State is entitled to the money, and $13,000 was contributed by us who were crazy enough to go into the National Guard. We did not take all of our pay but turned it back to help the Government and help ourselves to secure the services that we ought to have had.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. I am in sympathy with the gentleman, but I do not quite understand how you are going to save this $640.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The rent of the present range is $640 that we now pay.

Mr. BLANTON. But what about the interest on the $14,000? The United States will be out its $14,000. Certainly the interest on it is worth something annually.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If there was anything of interest, it ought to go to South Dakota that has lost the money for all these years, and that which we contributed ourselves. We ought to be entitled to it, although we were willing to devote it for the purpose of adequate preparation for war, which I think is the most important Government activity we could have. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think that if we could get the Senate to pass the bill we passed and sent to them guaranteeing bank deposits, which is the only measure that will ever stop wholesale bank failures, and then get the President to sign it, it would save all these banks from closing? That is far more constructive than this rifle range bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Instead of that I think if the House organization had brought out the Glass bank bill and passed it you would not have had banks breaking all over the United States.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Does not the gentleman believe that the gentleman from Texas would have more influence with the gentleman who is holding up that bill in the Senate than the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do not know that I should express any opinion concerning the other governing body.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman tell us what provision in the Glass bill he desires to be enacted?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Every one of them, commencing at the top, giving the comptroller the power he should have, control of security affiliates; and I would like to see the provisions with reference to branch banking enacted for the benefit of my State. I think the bill is based on good common sense.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired, and the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. Blanton) there were 123 ayes and 40 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. As many as are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eight members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are denied.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

QUALIFICATION OF BANKERS

Mr. GILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. GILLEN. Mr. Speaker, something was said a moment ago about bank legislation. I rise to call attention to a proposition relating to banking which has been engaging the attention of the banking fraternity for a number of years. As an outgrowth of the agitation for this legislation, a number of my banker friends in my home State have asked me to introduce a bill, it being introduced this morning, which I now call to the attention of the House and for which I ask your careful consideration. I know that can not be given at this session of Congress and that it will have to go over to the coming Congress. I refer to legislation designed to get at the qualification of bankers from the grade of cashier on up. In other words, it has been advocated and it is desired by the honest bankers of this country, if possible, to reduce to a minimum the number of unscrupulous men who are engaging in the banking business.

Recent disclosures have brought to our attention very forcibly the fact that sentences to the penitentiary come too late. If we are to have the banking industry placed in the hands of honest men, men of integrity, it seems to me the time has come when serious attention should be given to this question, to the end that qualifications may be set up and inquiry made into the integrity of these men, into their qualifications, so that in the future a proper guard may be thrown around that fraternity just as qualifications are required for the legal fraternity, for physicians, for dentists, and for other persons. [Applause.]

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE HAROLD LOUDERBACK

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary, which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and ask its immediate adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 402

Resolved, That Hatton W. Sumners, Gordon Browning, Malcolm C. Tarver, Fiorello H. LaGuardia, and Charles I. Sparks, Members of this House, be, and they are hereby, appointed managers to conduct the impeachment against Harold Louderback, United States district judge for the northern district of California; and said managers are hereby instructed to appear before the Senate of the United States and at the bar thereof in the name of the House of Representatives and of all the people of the United States to impeach the said Harold Louderback of misdemeanors in office and to exhibit to the Senate of the United States the articles of impeachment against said judge which have been agreed upon by the House; and that the said managers do demand the Senate take order for the appearance of said Harold Louderback to answer said impeachment, and demand his impeachment, conviction, and removal from office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not usual in such cases to provide for the managers on the part of the House to interrogate witnesses?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This is the usual resolution which is adopted.

Mr. BLANTON. But this resolution does embrace that power and authority?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. It is the usual resolution. Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. This House, which is about to expire, has leveled impeachment articles against a sitting judge. It is impracticable to have the trial of that judge in the expiring days of the Congress. Has the gentleman considered what the procedure will be in respect to having the trial before the Senate in the next Congress?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The Committee on the Judiciary to-day gave full consideration to all of the angles that suggested themselves to the committee for consideration, and this arrangement seems to be more in line with the precedents and to be most definitely suggested by the situation in which we find ourselves.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, I assume, from the gentleman's statement, that it is the purpose that the gentlemen named in the resolution shall represent the House in the next | Congress?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I believe not. I think it is pretty well agreed that the next Congress will probably have to appoint new managers before they may proceed. I think gentlemen on each side agree substantially with that statement as to what probably would be required.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the Constitution that would prevent Members of this Congress from serving as representatives of this House before the Senate in the next Congress, even though they be not Members of that Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I hope my friend will excuse me. for not taking the time of the House to discuss that feature of the matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is quite an important subject.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is an unsettled subject, and one we have tried to avoid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 403

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform them Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform them that this House has impeached Harold Louderback, United States district judge for the Northern District of California, for misdemeanors in office, and that the House has adopted articles of impeachment against said Harold Louderback, judge as aforesaid, which the managers on the part of the House have been directed to carry to the Senate, and that HATTON W. SUMNERS, GORDON BROWNING, MALCOLM C. TARVER, FIORELLO H. LAGUARDIA, and CHARLES I. SPARKS, Members of this House, have been appointed such managers.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF FARM LOAN ACT

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 5337) to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, to permit loans for additional purposes, to extend the powers of Federal land banks in the making of direct loans, to authorize upon certain terms the reamortization of loans by Federal and joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 5337

An act to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, to permit loans for additional purposes, to extend the powers of Federal land banks in the making of direct loans, to authorize upon certain terms the reamortization of loans by Federal and jointstock land banks, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That for a period not to exceed five years any borrower who has obtained a loan from a Federal land bank may on application to such Federal land bank and upon approval of such application to such Federal land bank and upon approval of such application by the directors of the bank postpone the payment of any unpaid installment or installments in the manner herein provided in this section. Such postponed payment shall be made by paying at the time each succeeding annual installment is due one-tenth of the amount of the postponed payment, and, in the case of semiannual installments, by paying at the time each succeeding semiannual installment is due one-twentieth of the postponed payment until the amount of such postponed payment has been paid. In any case in which the number of remaining installments due on the mortgage is less than 10, in the case of annual installments, or less than 20, in the case of semiannual installments, the amount of the postponed payment shall be distributed proportionately over the remaining number of installtributed proportionately over the remaining number of installtributed proportionately over the remaining number of installment payments.

Sec. 2. Section 7 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended (U.S. C., title 12, ch. 7, secs. 711-722), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Whenever it shall appear to the Federal Farm Loan Board that national farm-loan associations have not been formed in any locality in the continental United States, or that the farmers residing in the territory covered by the charter of a national farm-loan association are unable to apply to the Federal land bank of the district for loans on account of the inability of such association to indorse such loans, the Federal Farm Loan Board may, in its discretion, authorize said bank, at any time within five years after this paragraph takes effect, to make direct loans to borrowers, secured by first mortgages on farm lands situated within any such locality or territory. Except as herein otherwise specifically provided, all provisions of this act applicable with respect to loans made through national farm-loan associations shall, in so far as practicable, apply with respect to such direct loans, and the Federal Farm Loan Board is authorized to make such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary with respect to such direct loans, provided no such loan shall be made for more than $15,000. Each borrower who obtains a direct loan from a Federal $15,000. Each borrower who obtains a direct loan from a Federal land bank shall subscribe and pay for stock in such bank in the sum of $5 for each $100 or fraction thereof borrowed."

SEC. 3. That subsection "Ninth" of section 12 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, ch. 7, sec. 771), is amended so as to read as follows:

"Ninth. For the period of five years after the passage of this act every borrower shall pay simple interest on extended payments the same rate of interest as stipulated in the mortgage securing the loan as to payments not in default and by express covenant in his mortgage deed shall undertake to pay when due all taxes, liens, judgments, or assessments which may be lawfully assessed against the land mortgaged. Taxes, liens, judgments, or assessments not paid when due, and paid by the mortgagee, shall become a part of the mortgage debt and shall bear interest at the rate provided in the mortgage. Every borrower shall undertake to keep insured to the satisfaction of the Federal Farm Loan Board all buildings the value of which was a factor in determining the amount of loan. Insurance shall be made payable to the mortamount of loan. Insurance shall be made payable to the mort-gagee as its interest may appear at time of loss, and, at the option of the mortgagor and subject to general regulations of the Federal Farm Loan Board, sums so received may be used to pay for recon-struction of the buildings destroyed."

struction of the buildings destroyed."

Sec. 4. Subparagraph (b) of paragraph "Fourth" of section 13 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, ch. 7, sec. 781), is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "Every such bank may carry real estate as an asset, for a period of not exceeding five years, at the amount of the bank's investment therein at the time of acquirement of such real estate."

Sec. 5. Seation 12 of the section of th such real estate."

SEC. 5. Section 13 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, ch. 7, sec. 781), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Eleventh. When in the judgment of the directors conditions justify it, and with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to reamortize, in whole or in part, the aggregate amount remaining unpaid under the terms of any mortgage, and to accept payment of such aggregate amount on an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual or semiannual installments sufficient to cover the interest payable on the mortgage, and in addition of a fixed number of annual or semiannual installments sufficient to cover the interest payable on the mortgage, and in addition thereto such amounts to be applied upon the principal as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period of not more than 40 years from the date of the reamortization; to deposit such mortgages with the farm loan registrar as collateral security for farmloan bonds at an amount not exceeding the principal of the original loan remaining unpaid at the date of such amortization; and with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board to charge the borrower an amount not to exceed the actual cost incurred in connection with such reamortization."

Sec. 6. Section 14 of the Federal farm loan act (relating to express prohibitions on the exercise of powers by the Federal land press prohibitions on the exercise of powers by the Federal land banks) (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 791) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

banks) (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 791) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Sixth. To accept as security or additional security for any loan to any borrower under this act, or any installment on any such loan, any security other than first mortgages on farm real estate or Federal land-bank stock; and the transfer to any Federal land bank of any such security if it may not be accepted by the bank under this subsection shall be void: Provided, That any bank may accept an assignment of the landlord's rent to the amount of any taxes paid on such land by the bank, or any interest due."

Sec. 7. That section 19 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, ch. 7, secs. 851-856), is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph, to read as follows:

"Such farm-loan registrar shall accept as collateral security in place of mortgages withdrawn, purchase money mortgages and contracts to sell acquired real estate, for a period not to exceed five years, at the amount of the land bank's investment therein. The banks shall have power to execute all necessary conveyances, transfers, and assignments to carry out this provision."

Sec. 8. That the land banks shall use the balance of the $125,000,000 provided in the act of January 23, 1932, not heretofore so used, in carrying out the provisions of this act for extension of loans or making new loans.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. As it is at present, I am. Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the plan under which we are proceeding is to substitute in the House a bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency in the House for a bill which has passed the Senate and which is now pending in the House, the purpose being to afford an opportunity to complete the legislation in conference and, as we hope, prepare a measure that will improve on either of the original bills.

It should be understood by all who are interested in this legislation that it is not offered as a complete answer to the demands and the necessity for legislation respecting the difficulties of the farmers of the country in connection with land-bank mortgages. There are pending in the House committee and in the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency other bills of larger range and covering in a much broader way the entire land-bank mortgage situation; but some of us concluded that it was not reasonably probable we should be able, during this short session, to pass comprehensive legislation on this subject.

Pursuing that theory, the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House and the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate took up the two bills to which I have referred—the bill introduced by me in the House and the bill introduced by Senator FLETCHER of Florida in the Senate. It was our thought that we could, in the way we have undertaken, solve some of the difficulties in which the farmers are involved who have their mortgages with the Federal land banks. Only a limited number of our farmers have their mortgages with the Federal land banks. Of course it would be desirable to do anything that we might reasonably do for the relief of all farmer borrowers in the country who are embarrassed in this period of depression and distress, but we have not felt we would be able to accomplish that task in the short time afforded for consideration of such legislation. We thought it desirable to secure a limited measure of relief rather than try the largest task without results. We have reason to hope for passage of the bill before us and presidential

The bill requires the Federal land banks, when extending loans of borrowers or renewing delinquent and unpaid installments, to spread those delinquent payments over a period of 10 years, in 10 equal amounts, so that a farmer may not have his installments accumulating during a period of low prices, and at a time when the farmer finds it so hard to carry on with his operations, but to permit borrowers to extend payments, in worthy cases, in such way as to give him an opportunity to work out his problem and meet his obligation.

We do not provide in the bill that any farmer may require an extension of his loan. We preserve the discretionary powers of the officials of the land banks to pass on each particular case as in their judgment its merits warrant. But when an extension is allowed the bill requires that it be spread over a period of years, so as to give the borrower an opportunity to work out his problems and pay his debts. This difficulty has been encountered by some of the farmer borrowers under practices that have prevailed. When extensions have been granted by officials of a bank conditions were attached that robbed the action of its benefits to the borrower. It will be remembered that we passed a bill last year in which we extended aid to the Federal land banks in the form of subscriptions by the Treasury to capital stock in the amount of $125,000,000, $25,000,000 of which were required to be used in the extension of loans of borrowers. The act provided that such extensions might be made in the discretion of the bank officials and payments spread out over a period of 10 years. The record fails to disclose a single instance in which the provisions of the act passed last year were carried out by the officials of the land banks. Your committee made diligent inquiry, and we have not yet learned of an instance where any borrower had his loan or his delinquent payments extended over a period of years, as contemplated by the act of last year.

Not only that, but where extensions are made, it is the prevailing rule of the land banks to require the borrower, as a condition to the extension to be allowed, to execute chat-tel mortgages, covering his crop, his farm implements, his livestock, everything the farmer owns to secure the delinquent payments, notwithstanding the debt is already amply secured by the land conveyed in the original mortgage when the loan was made. Such a rule necessarily leaves the farmer with no opportunity to obtain advances or secure supplies to enable him to make a crop, and in conditions that exist now, he is left with no incentive to undertake to carry on or try to meet his obligations. The rule is harsh and unjust. It violates every purpose of the Federal farm loan act, if indeed it is not contrary to the technical provisions of the law. It discredits the land-bank system and every official in any way responsible for it.

Such a proceeding is, theoretically, a foreclosure, because it treats the farmer-borrower in such cases as a tenant. We have provided in this bill that no security shall be taken covering extended payments save on the real estate conveyed in the original mortgage, except to cover advances made to pay taxes on the land or interest due.

In my congressional district the Federal land bank—and I have letters in my files which were exhibited to the Committee on Banking and Currency to substantiate this statement—laid down the unvarying rule that no farmer's mortgage would be extended, no matter how long it had been running or how many payments had been met, even though the land more than amply secured the loan, unless the farmer executed a mortgage covering his chattels, his farming implements, his livestock, his cattle, his provisions, his crop, and everything to be grown on the farm during the year of the extension and for subsequent years. That was the unvarying rule that prevailed.

It is the judgment of the committee that such a practice works an undue hardship; that foreclosures under such conditions not only mean to turn farmers out of their homes, to take the shelter off their families and leave them as a charge upon the public not only such hardships upon the borrowers themselves but such a rule means the sacrifice of the securities of the banks. Members well understand that when the land banks go into an agricultural community and advertise a large number of farms for sale under present conditions, they not only turn the farmermortgagors in particular cases out of their homes and work irreparable hardship upon them; it demonstrates that in that community the other assets and securities represented by lands in the same community are without value, or at least that the banks can not realize upon their securities. Such a practice ruins both the borrowers and the banks. Such a rule is not followed by any other business institution in the land. The commercial banks uniformly refrain from such practices. Their assets are carried at fair valuation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAY. We have a land bank in Louisville, Ky. In the eastern end of the State there are 40 or 50 counties not particularly adapted to farming. Under section 2 of this bill can a farmer apply to the Federal land bank without regard to the organization of the farm-loan associations?

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman that I have just discusses one section of the bill, and that most hurriedly. Now to answer him, there is incorporated in this bill a provision authorizing loans to be made directly to individual borrowers in communities where national farm-loan associations are not in condition to offer acceptable security to the land banks.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What amount would be available for this use?

Mr. STEAGALL. The maximum amount of a direct loan is $15,000.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What amount is available in the 12 land banks?

Mr. STEAGALL. That involves an inquiry into the balance sheet of the banks. I will discuss that a little later, if I have an opportunity. That should come in connection with the last provision in the bill. The banks are now in position to grant many loans, though probably not in the amounts for which there will be demands.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would be very glad if the gentleman would tell us.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I agree with the gentleman that the bill authorizing an extension of loans requiring additional security did not work as we had hoped it would work out, because the property was all the time in the hands of the bankers. If we pass this bill to help the farmer, will the bank be willing to advance the money?

Mr. STEAGAIL. I may say to the gentleman that we have attempted, as I thought I had intimated in the outset of my remarks, to prepare a bill which Congress will pass and which will become a law. If we go further in taking away the discretion of the officials of the land banks in dealing with individual loans on their merits, we will never get the bill enacted finally because it will not be approved by the President. So we have preserved the discretion of the board. We have provided that where a loan is extended there may be no penalty interest rate charged. We thought this desirable in the present situation.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It has been our experience in Nebraska that the banks refused every time to take care of the defaulted interest unless the farmer secured them as the gentleman said.

Mr. STEAGALL. We are proceeding upon the idea that we may hope for a more liberal administration of the Federal land banks. Unless we have a more sympathetic policy in the administration of these banks, the legislation we are attempting to pass will not be of much value.

Our purpose in preparing this bill is to remove every obstacle in the machinery of the law that will interfere with a common-sense, constructive administration of the banks. But we must of necessity depend upon the officials who administer these banks, as we have to depend upon officials who administer all the various agencies set up by the Government. This is true of many departments of the Government of which complaint is made. Much of our troubles, I am sure, are due to unwise policies of administration. But I do not desire to indulge in criticism. What we desire is to secure relief as far as we may.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman from Nebraska asked a question as to why the banks could not take additional security. I desire to call attention to the fact that the average loan has been in existence seven years, and payments have been made during all that time. If the loan amounted to 50 per cent of the value of the farm, at least seven-fiftieths has been paid and there is sufficient margin there to take care of a year's interest or two years' interest in a time when there is need for it.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman is correct. He has stated the situation clearly. I must hurry on to other phases of the bill. Another provision of the bill permits the reamortization of loans over a period not to exceed 40 years. This provision will enable officials of a bank to take a solvent loan, in some instances perhaps where payments have been made for 15 years, and where the mortgagor is a good citizen, a home owner, a borrower whom they can trust to meet his obligations if given an opportunity. In a case like that this provision will save the farmer's home and prevent the sacrifice of the security of the bank by reamortizing the loan. We think this is a wholesome provision. The bill permits mortgages that have been extended to be carried as security against the bonds, and likewise real estate to the amount of the investment of the bank. Then we require finally that the banks shall use whatever funds they have remaining out of the $125,000,000 appropriated last year for making loans or for the extension of loans to borrowers. The banks have $115,000,000 in cash and bonds. Their payments received from borrowers amount to $82,000,000 annually. Their interest obligations on bonds amount to only $52,000,000 annually. The bank officials do not anticipate any difficulty in collecting half the interest maturities on their mortgages. So, it will be seen that with the funds on hand and additional privileges of borrowing of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, we make possible a liberalization of the policies of the Federal land banks that will be of substantial benefit to the farmers of the Nation. [Applause.]

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes. Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question and answer it in his time? I should like to have brought out definitely whether or not in counties where the organization is now in default and not operating, the owner of a farm located in such county can obtain a loan under the provisions of this amendment. This is the main thing in which I am interested.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is one of the purposes of the bill, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN. Is it mandatory or optional?

Mr. McFADDEN. Optional.

Mr. Speaker, I am entirely in sympathy with the main part of this measure. It is right and proper in these times of stress that every assistance that can be given to these borrowers, who are not in a position to meet their amortization payments, that they should be given this help and that they should have every opportunity to thus avoid an absolute default. I believe this to be for the best interests, not only of the farmer borrower, but also for the Federal farmloan system itself.

However, I want to direct your attention particularly to two clauses in this bill, and I refer to sections 7 and 8. I am fearful that these two sections, while intending to be helpful, may do more harm than good in destroying confidence of the investing public in the security back of the bonds.

In section 7 the language is as follows:

Such farm-loan registrar shall accept as collateral security in place of mortgages withdrawn, purchase money mortgages and contracts to sell acquired real estate, for a period not to exceed five years, * * *

This is a weakening of the security back of the bonds which are issued and sold to investors by the Federal farmloan system. It permits the substitution of real estate which has been foreclosed and thus acquired by the system, and also permits the substitution, in place of mortgages, land contracts where the land so acquired under foreclosure has been sold to new purchasers under contract, in the place of prime mortgages as now provided by law. I want to make perfectly clear to you just what this language does.

Section 8 provides that the land banks shall use the balance of the $125,000,000 provided in the act of January 23, 1932, not heretofore so used, in carrying out the provisions of this act for extension of loans or for making new loans.

This is a direction to the Federal land banks directly from Congress as to the use of the remainder of the funds amounting to $50,000,000 which were appropriated last year. "This section is an alarm signal to investors and has been particularly so to the bankers who dispose of these farmloan bonds."

Both of these provisions tend to weaken, in the mind of the investor, at least, and section 7, particularly, does weaken, the security of these Federal farm-loan bonds. Section 8 brings a doubt in the minds of the bond purchasers as to the ability of the Federal farm-loan system to carry on without Government aid in the form of further appropriations.

We must recognize that for the successful operation of this institution, the Federal farm-loan system, we must preserve the confidence of the investing public; if this is not done, there will be no one to buy their bonds. Last year we appropriated $125,000,000 and provided that $25,000,000 of it should be used to give assistance to the prior borrowers who were not able to meet their amortization payments. The Federal farm-loan system in the use of the other $100,000,000 of this fund has used it in carrying out several different functions, and the farm-loan commissioner has given me a statement showing how this fund has been disposed of and handled. It shows there is a balance of approximately $50,000,000, which remains in the Treasury not yet disposed of. While I have not sufficient time to go into this completely, I think I should give this information to the House: Uses made by Federal land banks of proceeds of $125,000,000 of capital stock subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury during 1932 under the act of Congress passed last year. The $125,000,000 of capital stock was subscribed as follows: Twenty-five million dollars for extensions in February, 1932.

This amount, together with earnings on it, has been used or is held exclusively for extensions. The 12 banks reported that through December 31, 1932, they had granted extensions to approximately 93,000 borrowers covering delinquent obligations totaling $23,419,800.46. In addition, they were carrying thousands of other delinquent borrowers.

ONE HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS GENERAL CAPITAL

Thirty-four million, seven hundred and thirty-four thousand, seventy-five dollars and sixty-three cents during February, 1932, for the purpose of strengthening the collateral position of the banks by removing unsatisfactory collateral pledged with the registrar.

Three million, five hundred and nine thousand, six hunared and sixty-four dollars and thirty-seven cents during February, 1932, for the purpose of retiring the Spokane participation certificates representing advances previously made to the Spokane bank by the other 11 banks.

Eleven million dollars during April, 1932, in nine of the Federal land banks which requested the funds in anticipation of increased demands for new loans.

Fifty million, seven hundred and fifty-six thousand, two hundred and sixty dollars during June, 1932, to increase the earnings of the banks and to provide them with reserve funds with which to meet contingencies, the need for which resulted from heavy delinquencies.

GENERAL COMMENT REGARDING USES MADE OF THE FUNDS

Of the $100,000,000 not earmarked specifically for extensions, $52,291,490, or slightly more than 50 per cent, was subscribed to stock in four banks, the Federal Land Banks of Columbia, New Orleans, St. Paul, and Spokane. Because of unusually heavy delinquency these banks were particularly in need of additional income in order to retain their solvency and to provide adequate collateral behind their bonds. Of the funds received, the four banks used $14,628,991.32 for the purchase and retirement of their own bonds, and the resulting profit of $1,964,008.68 was an important factor in the effort which was made to prevent an impairment of capital, to sustain the credit of the banks, and to preserve the equity that farmer-borrowers have in the banks through their ownership of the national farm-loan associations.

Funds used for the purpose of strengthening the collateral position of the banks generally were first invested in Government securities, which were then substituted for undesirable collateral pledged with the registrars. Funds so used, however, were available for the purpose of making loans, since when and as loans were made they could be pledged with the registrars and a corresponding amount of Government securities and/or cash released to the banks. During the year the banks closed new loans totaling $27,569,800, a part of which were made from proceeds of Government capital-stock subscriptions.

By reason of the additional capital funds which they have received the banks have been enabled to carry thousands of delinquent borrowers in addition to those to whom definite extensions have been granted and the banks' forbearance has made it necessary for ten of them to use $6,683,471.47 for the purpose of paying interest on their outstanding bonds.

Exclusive of securities and cash pledged as collateral for bonds there remained on December 31, 1932, approximately $50,000,000 from the $100,000,000 fund for future needs and contingencies. If the banks continue to carry as many bormissioner has given me a statement showing how this fund | rowers as now are being carried, these funds will shortly be has been disposed of and handled. It shows there is a required for the purpose of meeting interest on bonds.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes, briefly.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman explain why they did not use that $50,000,000 in making new loans or in extending loans?

Mr. McFADDEN. The Farm Loan Commission stated the reason this money was not used was because, in the judgment of the Board, the money should be kept as a reserve to meet emergencies of the system and, possibly, to provide for future interest payments, not knowing to what extent further delinquencies might take place. The interest on the outstanding bonds runs something like $42,000,000 a year, and we must recognize the fact that there are many delinquencies in the system and when delinquencies do occur interest and amortization payments stop; and in the management of the system they have seen fit to conserve their cash resources to meet these undisclosed conditions, among which is the question of having on hand in advance of due date the total amount of necessary money to meet the payment of interest on their bonds.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself one more minute.

I may say to the House, frankly, in this minute, that section 8 should go out of the bill. I am not sure, under the parliamentary situation that now exists, whether any amendments can be offered to the bill or not.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether or not, under the peculiar parliamentary situation now existing, amendments may be offered to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). The Chair will advise the gentleman that amendments to the bill are not in order.

Mr. McFADDEN. Then it is to be hoped that if this bill goes to conference, this particular portion of the bill will be taken out, because it may vitally affect the sale of Federal farm-loan bank bonds in the future as the mere reporting out of the committee of this bill with section 8 in it has caused a decline in the quotation of Federal farm-loan bonds in the market of several points.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock].

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I regret that I can not follow our able chairman in supporting this measure. It is true that the bill contains several sound and desirable provisions which, if fairly and sympathetically put into effect, would aid the distressed borrower. However, in view of the fact that practically the same provisions were contained in the bill reported by our committee and passed during the last session which the chairman himself admits in his argument have never been administered for the benefit of the farmer, I do not think that we should in this fashion tinker with such an important problem.

This is a moment of catastrophe. We face a national crisis calamitous in its possibilities. Fear grips the heart of every man, woman, and child in the land, and no one can predict what trouble will come on the earth to-morrow. The mortgage-debt problem is commanding nation-wide attention, and at the present price levels there is no hope that these obligations can be discharged. Although the Federal land bank system has had at its command millions of dollars since the last session, its general policy toward the borrower has not been as lenient as Congress intended that it should be when it was voted the additional $125,-000.000. As a matter of fact, less than the $25,000,000 earmarked for granting extensions has been used for that purpose; and the remaining portion, plus loans secured from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, has been used for steadying the credit structure of the banks and bolstering the bank's securities. In these times such a policy would seem to be inhuman and cruel.

This measure which is now being taken up under suspension, and without the privilege of offering an amendment, appears to me to be unworthy of the intelligence and wisdom of our committee in an effort to meet this serious debt problem, which should be attacked in a comprehensive way. Without reflecting upon anyone, I feel that this measure is a flop and a sort and unworthy of the serious attention of the House. It is true that it would prohibit the banks from taking additional security to cover delinquent installments and in certain ways enable the banks to utilize their resources more effectively during this crisis, all of which would seem to be desirable. On the other hand, why arouse false hopes at a time like this when all of us must know that a modicum of relief is extended in this measure to the thousands of worthy and deserving borrowers, who, by no fault of their own, can not even pay their taxes with com-modity prices at the present level? You may put it down in your book that commodity prices have got to be raised or debts have got to be reduced.

Though I have reached no definite conclusion with respect to the soundness or desirability of the Robinson bill or the Hull bill, I am opposed to further patchwork efforts regarding this situation. When we retrospect we are obliged to admit that Congress has failed to anticipate the depth of this depression and that all we have done under the present administration and by its leadership has been to swing onto the tail end of the depression hoping in that way to stop it. We now see, as we could not perhaps see at that time, that the only way to break the vicious circle of deflation and stop human suffering would be to go to the bottom of this situation in a courageous and heroic method. It is useless to patch the house at the top when the walls are cracking on the inside as the result of unstable foundation.

For more than three months many of us have been giving serious thought to legislation which would operate fairly to the borrowers, the banks, and the holders of the securities. Surely no person with good common sense would represent that this measure even slightly tended to solve the problem. Since no relief extension or indulgence can be granted under this measure without the approval of the Farm Board, how could any sane person, in the light of what has happened for the past 12 months, even hope that any of its benefits would be carried to the borrower? That being true, why, at this time, wreck the system, as this measure will certainly do if it is enacted into law?

Though I must confess that I am primarily interested in aiding the borrower, I would not want to be unfair to the system or the individuals and institutions which have, in good faith, invested their money in its securities. I fully believe that with careful study and thorough planning, as our committee should have been doing since the session commenced, we can solve this problem by reducing the interest rate on the bonds and the mortgages to around 2 or 3 per cent. When I think of this bill I am reminded of this oftenquoted saying: "The mountain labored and gave forth a mouse '

If you do not believe what I am telling you, just wait until we get back in the special session. Personally, I know that there is not a man in the Nation, without a single exception, who is more sincerely and intensely interested in assisting the farmers with their mortgage troubles than our chairman, but I can not understand why he should indulge in an empty gesture and vain attempt like this. He knows, as all of us do, that the President would immediately veto this bill with section 8 in it. Why should we here, during this crisis, consume our time with further legislation which merely covers up the evils instead of uprooting them? So far as I am concerned, politics may go to the winds and it shall be my purpose to support every sound measure which treats heroically and courageously the debt problem in fairness to debtor and creditor. There is no doubt in my mind but that the wages of capital must be reduced if we are to preserve this Republic and hope for any recovery in the years ahead.

The membership of this House know that I have not indulged in the discussion of matters generally, but that I have always confined my remarks to legislation which I have considered in the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Though I do not like to refer to my own efforts, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that more than six weeks ago I introduced a resolution providing for a standstill arrangement on all debts secured by mortgages or other similar instruments. I felt that since a national emergency existed equal to or greater than that of any war period. that economic patriotism and social sense, as well as a wise financial policy, warranted the passage of a resolution of this kind so as to give the millions of mortgage debtors a breathing spell during which they could get with their creditors and make some fair adjustment. The people of this great country of ours want two things-work and security; and every effort here should be directed for such an accomplishment

Though the purpose of this bill is designed unquestionably to aid the distressed borrower, in my judgment it will not only fail to do this, but it will have an immediate, unwarranted depressing effect upon the outstanding securities, which, in turn, will jeopardize the remaining credit structure of the banks. When this is done, the borrower certainly has not improved his position and others have been hurt seriously. Though great concessions must be made by the security holders, it is foolish to single even them out for unjust punishment when no one benefits by such action. The announcement of the passage of this legislation would practically mean destruction of the Federal land-bank system.

When I learned that our chairman had secured a ruling on this bill, I was preparing to offer an amendment which would enable a borrower from any Federal land bank or joint-stock land bank at any time, when he is privileged under the provisions of the Federal farm loan act to pay the entire principal of his loan, to surrender to the farm-loan registrar of that bank any farm-loan bonds with all unmatured coupons attached issued by such bank, and, if the par value of such bonds equaled the amount of the debt of the borrower to the bank, the borrower would be entitled to withdraw his note and mortgage from the registrar. This would facilitate, in a fair way, the liquidation and in a much more equitable way than now obtains. It would merely give the borrower in a limited way the same privilege which section 894 of the act gives to the banks in an unlimited way. It would be fair to the borrower and fair to the bondholder, and the banks could not justly complain that any violence had been done their rights because they did not continue to have the exclusive privilege of taking advantage of their

The number of my bill, which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, is H. R. 14618, and the report number is 2089. I am satisfied that this measure will have no chance for passage during the present session, but it is my purpose to continue every proper effort to put it into the law unless some better plan is worked out during the special session.

The chairman of our committee stated that H. R. 14689, which we are now considering, was a temporary measure and would exist as such pending the enactment of one of the comprehensive plans which have been introduced by Senator Robinson and others in the Senate.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I gladly yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman does not mean, I know, to misquote me. I had not thought of saying that this is a temporary measure. It is permanent, and I think ought to have been in it all the time.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Of course, I did not intentionally misquote the gentleman, but I maintain everything that I have heretofore said about this bill, and I regret that I misunderstood the chairman's statement. If the measure is permanent, it even makes the situation a great deal worse.

Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable to me that this House should be content to consider this legislation as its contribution to this all-important and serious problem. I certainly trust I have not been misunderstood, and I only wish that the time were mine to give you the facts and information pertinent to this situation which I have received and developed as a result of my continuous study and investigation. I do not mean to create the impression for a minute that I know more about it than any of you gentleman, but it happens that in my work I have had opportunities which perhaps have not come to you.

Finally, may I say in the best of spirit that I abhor this method of dealing with such important subjects and especially when we have had practically three full months, spending a greater part of such time in matters of far less importance. For myself, I can not but feel sensitively ashamed.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Stevenson].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make only a brief statement as to what this measure will do for the farmer. In the first place, at least 50 per cent, and I believe 90 per cent, of the farm-loan associations in the country are defunct. They met and got an organization and got their loans, and then they quit business, and many of them are absolutely insolvent because of the judgments for deficiencies that have been made against them. A farmer in such a country can not get a loan because his association is in that condition, and the association is not in a position to do business because it is already insolvent and its indorsement would not be accepted by the bank. The result is that we are giving the farmer an opportunity in a situation of that kind to go directly to the bank.

In the next place, we have provided that he shall not be penalized by being charged a rate of 8 per cent interest whenever he defaults on the payment, automatically increasing his interest rate above what interest can be paid and continue to do business, and we allow him to pay the same interest provided in the mortgage itself. In the next place, we provide for a reamortization of loans. Let us take a man who has paid for 10 years and he finally gets to a place where he can not. The upshot is that he has to be sold out or reamortized. They take what is remaining of his debt and reamortize it, and divide it into not over 40-year payments and fix the interest rate at a reasonable rate and reamortize it, and his first installment does not fall due until a year after that, so that automatically he gets a year's grace in which we hope the Lord will do something for this country, as nobody else seems able to do.

In the next place, we hear talk about paying the interest on the farm loan bonds. Section 8 provides:

That the land banks shall use the balance of the $125,000,000 provided in the act of January 23, 1932, not heretofore so used, in carrying out the provisions of this act for extension of loans or making new loans.

That which is used for the extension of loans is to merely pay the interest on the bonds, which they do not get from the borrower—it is to pay that out of this, and that provides for it absolutely, and if it does not, then in conference we shall certainly make that provision beyond peradventure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, has all time expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All but one minute in charge of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, notwithstanding the expiration of the time, that I may proceed for three minutes on this bill. The bill has not been debated here. Some of us have not had an opportunity to express ourselves.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma after the time has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, the practical situation is that if we should reject this bill there will be no legislation on this subject at this session. The need for action is imperative. The bill contains some provisions which it is to be hoped may be changed in conference. Out of the conference may come a bill that will meet the criticisms that have been passed upon it. Therefore, to me it seems the wise thing, almost the imperative thing, to pass the bill through this stage, so that it may receive the further consideration that is certain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent, notwithstanding the expiration of the time for debate, to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I regret I shall have to do so. I am afraid it would be establishing a bad precedent under the rules to extend the time for debate beyond the 40 minutes provided in the rule. The reason these matters are brought in under suspension of rules is to confine the debate to 40 minutes. The three minutes the gentleman requires would establish a precedent. I wish the gentleman would not press the matter.

Mr. HASTINGS. I hope the gentleman will not enter his objection. Aside from the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock] there has been no debate on the other side on this bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would much rather the gentleman would ask to proceed out of order.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for three minutes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Why does the gentleman not extend? Mr. HASTINGS. I want to talk here a little bit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if no other person makes a request for additional time I shall not object, but I shall object at this late hour if there is any similar request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I am tongue-tied. No man in this House knows the disappointment I feel. I can not find parliamentary language to express myself on this bill. It is a mere flyspeck. It would not do a particle of good to the poor farmers of this country.

It is a confession of this great Committee on Banking and Currency, composed of strong men, that after studying this question for three months they are unable to agree on and report legislation that will adequately meet the situation. Mortgages are being foreclosed by the thousands. Outraged farmers are meeting and vigorously protesting the sale of lands. What does this bill do? Does it afford them relief? No. In the aggregate there are $9,241,390,000 in amount of real-estate mortgages, as reported by the Bureau of Economics. What does this bill provide? It makes available the balance of the $125,000,000 which I am advised, and if I am wrong let somebody correct me in his own time, that there are only $50,000,000.

The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. Steagall] in the course of his remarks with reference to the administration of the act of January 23, 1932, making an appropriation of $125,000,000 in aid of the Federal land banks, stated that the bill in effect gave a legislative direction to use $25,000,000 in payment of the interest and extension of loans to farmers.

The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. Steagall] has just stated with reference to this bill:

The act provided that such extensions might be made in the discretion of the bank officials and payments spread over a period of 10 years. The record fails to disclose a single instance in which the provisions of the act passed last year were carried out by the officials of the land banks. Your committee made diligent inquiry, and we have not yet learned of an instance where any borrower had his loan or his delinquent payments extended over a period of years, as contemplated by the act of last year.

Yet in the face of this statement the remainder of the balance unused of that appropriation, estimated to be around $50,000,000, is to be made available for these same Federal land banks.

As above stated, the records show that there are outstanding farm mortgages amounting to $9,241,390,000. Of this amount insurance companies hold $2,164,000,000. What relief does this bill give to a farmer where an insurance company holds the mortgage on his land? Of course it affords him no relief. Commercial banks hold farm mortgages in the sum of $1,020,000,000. How is the farmer helped by this bill where a commercial bank holds the mortgage on his land? There is no pretense that this bill will afford him any relief. Retired farmers hold $1,006,000,000 in mortgages on farm lands. Will some one explain how this bill helps the farmer where the mortgage on his land is held by this class of mortgagees?

The records show that there are $214,033,000 of mortgages on farm lands in my State of Oklahoma, but I do not know of a single farmer in my district that this bill will help. It is a pretense and a sham.

In every agricultural State in the Union the question of the refinancing of farm mortgages and the reduction of taxes are the burning questions. The reduction of ad valorem taxes is for the State legislatures and favorable action is imperative.

The whole country is ablaze, yet we go to quench this fire with a tin cup filled with water.

There are approximately $1,200,000,000 of farm mortgages held by the Federal land banks. The balance of approximately $50,000,000 of the $125,000,000 remaining unused would not be a drop in the bucket. Everyone knows it and everyone concedes it. Why attempt to fool and deceive the farmer? He will get no substantial relief out of this bill. Unless the Senate amends the bill in conference there is no hope for the despairing bankrupt farmer in this bill.

When Congress convened in December last approximately 100 Members of Congress representing agricultural districts associated themselves into a group to study the farm problem. They have met from time to time during the past three months. As a result of their study many bills have been introduced in the House, and some in the Senate, which would adequately meet the situation and afford some relief to the farmers of the country. However, if you take a legislative microscope and search for a week you will not find any relief in this bill for a single farmer in my district.

Everyone knows that the use of $50,000,000 with only one class of mortgagees, the Federal land banks, would be of no appreciable benefit.

Only one local farm-loan association was formed in my district. Because of bad crop conditions, corn selling for 10 or 12 cents per bushel, oats around 10 cents per bushel, wheat from 25 to 30 cents per bushel, and cotton around 6 cent per pound or less—all below the cost of production—the farmers have been unable to pay their taxes and upkeep of their farms and to pay the interest on their loans. Their purchasing power is gone. They need a comprehensive and a permanent measure. If we fail to enact one we admit we are unable to cope with the situation. For one, I am not going to recommend to the farmers of my district this legislative evasion of our responsibility to our constituents.

I was born and reared on a farm, own much farm land now, and feel that I have a practical knowledge of farm conditions. Our inaction will destroy the farmers. They have been facing bankruptcy for 10 years. Their eyes have been on Washington for relief. They see comprehensive legislation and money appropriated through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in terms of billions for the benefit of other classes of citizens, including railroads, banks, and corporations of various kinds, and when we go to explain to them how we have helped the farmer, and present this measure, this homeopathic dose, they will demand to know how they will be aided in refinancing their mortgages, and it will dawn upon them, as it did when the original $125,000,000 was appropriated, that the farmer is the "forgotten man."

Let no farmer be deluded in the belief that this bill will give him any relief.

Here is a great committee of the House of Representatives. The farming question has been one demanding attention for years. An intensive study has been given to this situation during the entire three months since Congress convened in December, but there has been no comprehensive action. To-day, without roll call, unknown to more than a half dozen Members of the House, this legislative flyspeck is called up under suspension of the rules, with but 20 minutes of debate on each side, every minute of it consumed by the committee, and all in favor of the bill, with the exception of 5 minutes used by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock], so that the House has had no opportunity whatever to study the bill, and no opportunity to amend it; no general analysis of the terms of the bill has been made.

Here is the most important matter confronting the country, one in which the greatest number of people are interested, and the bill is considered in the way I have just indicated, with the committee practically admitting that it is the best bill they can bring out. Oh, the shame of it all! Nero fiddled while Rome burned. It is asked what objection there is to the bill. The objection is that it does not afford any relief to the farmers of the country. It is the sin of omission rather than of commission. It makes available the balance of $125,000,000, estimated to be around $50,000,000, for the use of the Federal land banks, when it is admitted that not a single farmer secured any relief out of the original appropriation, and no effort whatever is made to take care of the untold thousands of farmers who have given mortgages on their land to other agencies. If the farmers were to take a pack of bloodhounds and hunt through the various provisions of this bill they would be disappointed in not finding a scent of relief.

Section 1 authorizes the Federal land banks to postpone the interest and installments on farm loans not to exceed five years. In some counties in my district it is estimated that 65 per cent of the farm lands have gone into foreign ownership. The Federal land banks do not own a single mortgage in most of these counties. I know of only one county in my district where the land bank has made loans and they are not making any now. How would this section of the bill help farmers in those counties? It is a legislative omission to accept our responsibility and to do our duty.

Section 2 provides that direct loans may be made to farmers under certain conditions. I tried to get this provision inserted in the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916. However, in districts where the Federal land banks are making no loans how can the farmers be helped? Again this section requires the farmers who borrow money to covenant to join local loan associations, which in my district they will refuse to do. Surely, so far as this legislation is concerned, the farmer is the "forgotten man."

There are a large number of bills now pending before the House and Senate committees which deal in a comprehensive way with the farm-mortgage question. It is a great disappointment that some one of these many measures is not brought before the House for consideration, instead of this bill, which affords no relief.

The farmers in my district are not going to be deceived by this measure. They thought they would get some relief out of the $125,000,000 appropriated by the act of January 3, 1932, but not one of them got any relief. They were deceived into the belief they were going to get some assistance from the home loan bank bill, enacted during the last session of Congress, but when rules and regulations were promulgated it was held not to apply to farm lands. When the city home owner in my State applied for a loan he was required to make application through a building and loan association, and when he did that he was told that because of certain State laws loans were not permitted to be made.

We ought to be frank about the matter. Congress should study the most important question before the American people to-day and instead of evading responsibility should meet it in a broad, comprehensive, and constructive way. The hope of the country is now and always has been in encouraging the American people to become home owners. The farmers, because of economic conditions beyond their control, are distressed beyond belief.

I have attended every meeting of the agricultural group which has met from time to time to study this most important question. I have earnestly presented this matter to the House on three different occasions. In an extended speech I urged the Banking and Currency Committee of the House several weeks ago to bring in a comprehensive bill.

Let me repeat that no one in the House is more bitterly disappointed than I am at this idle gesture. Our only hope is that the Senate conferees may insist upon some provisions that may be helpful.

Only four legislative days remain during the present session of Congress. No other bill is expected to be reported to the House by the Banking and Currency Committee during this session. We return to our several districts where the questions of the refinancing of farm mortgages and farm relief are the principal ones being discussed because every business man, banker, merchant, and laborer, who are all dependent upon the farmer, are vitally interested. When we return we will be asked what legislative relief was enacted for the benefit of the farmer. I would like to be down in my district and hear one of the proponents of this bill who spoke in its favor in the House to-day explain to a crowd of deeply interested farmers, where not a single farm land-bank mortgage has been made, how this bill will help one of them.

I end as I began, by saying that I can not find parliamentary language in the limited time at my disposal, when I am only permitted to speak through the courtesy of unanimous consent, to express my very great disappointment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have three legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, I do not oppose the bill. As I see it, it will do no harm, but it certainly will do no considerable good for the bankrupt farmers of this country, and especially to those in the State of Iowa, whom I have the honor of representing on this floor. They have asked for bread. This bill is a stone.

Thousands of them are being driven from their homes without any fault of theirs. In recent press dispatches we are told that whole communities of Russian peasants—not individuals, but whole populations—have been driven from their homes and from the land of their ancestors into the dreary and snowbound wastes of northern Siberia. But the Russian Government did not do such a wicked thing until it first determined that some of these folks, and the leaders of them, had failed in their duty toward the Soviet Government. Innocent men, innocent women with babes in arms, and innocent children are now treking across the snow wastes of western Asia toward the mines of northern Siberia through no fault of themselves. Indescribable suffering awaits their banishment.

Nobody claims that our farmers have done any wrong. They are free from fault. The conditions surrounding them were not of their making. They are industrious. The members of their families are industrious. In the summer time all of them work from the time when the sun, still below the eastern horizon, has not yet dispelled the darkness of night until a time long after night has fallen upon the world. In the winter they work from sun to sun and from daylight into darkness. They are not impecunious. They are industrious and frugal. I repeat that they have asked for bread; and I rejoice that they are going to have bread and will not be despoiled of their homes through ruthless foreclosures and under the hammer of the sheriff without a struggle. The revolution will be lawful.

It will not be attended with bloodshed, but I predict that neither sheriff nor militia nor standing Army will be allowed in America to drive populations from their firesides and homesteads and from the land of their fathers.

Everybody knows these conditions. Everybody knows that no farmer can pay his taxes and the interest on his mortgage under present market conditions. The cost to produce a bushel of corn is ten times as much as he can now sell it for. I am not discussing here this afternoon the question as to whether corn has gone down in value, nor as to whether 23.22 grains of pure gold has gone up in value. As I see it we must maintain, if we can, financial solvency for banks and business institutions. We are striving to do this, and I believe we will succeed. It remains yet to be learned just what will happen on the morrow or next week or next month to these financial institutions. I will go along with any Member on this floor in any honest endeavor to save them. This Congress has already, and very properly, poured out the money and credit of this Government into the currents of finance and trade and transporation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has allocated billions of dollars to this purpose. Yet this Congress has done next to nothing to prevent farm foreclosures and to save the farms of this country for its best class of citizens.

Yes; there were $25,000,000 allocated to the use of the Federal land-bank system in order that it might carry along farm mortgages, but this is a mere grain of sand upon the seashore. We have somewhere between nine and ten billions of dollars of mortgages upon farm lands, and there are probably two to three billions of dollars more of chattel mortgages upon farm property. These farm mortgages about equal in amount the entire stock of monetary gold in the entire world. It is a just criticism of the inaction of this Congress to say that we have not dealt with the farm-mortgage situation either equitably or adequately, or with foresight or wisdom. I fear that we continue to fiddle while Rome burns.

The bill as I see it will do no harm. But it is so inadequate in compass that it does not meet the situation, and it will not rescue a great God-fearing, long-suffering, hardworking populace from impending ruin. The times demand that we refinance agriculture just exactly as we have tried to refinance trade and banking industries. We should now arrange to give the farmer cheap rates of interest. We have done this for others, and we should do it for him. We should amortize his mortgage over long periods of time. I do not wish him to get subsidies, but wisdom requires that we should send on succor to him just as we have for others. He belongs to a class that has always proven to be the bulwark of our civilization and that has in every peril stood as a solid wall in defense of American institutions and liberties. Without its success banks and business, commerce and carriers, trade and traffic must all go into ruin. There may be isolated cases whereby this bill will be helpful and be the means of putting a little cheer into farm homes. But it is a vain thing and it will scarcely affect the situation at all. I do not rise to protest the bill, but in the closing days of this Congress I do protest the fact that our legislation upon the farm-mortgage situation has been so small, insignificant, and trifling when judged in the light of the great need of the country, as to be of no great help. We have failed to discharge the duties we owe to agriculture in this respect. Our responsibility is to rescue farm homes and farm property from further despoliation. If failure in this respect were the result of ignorance, it might be excused; but there is no process of mind which can excuse selfishness or sloth or inattention to known duty. And when we know that men and women are being sold out of house and home, without any fault of theirs, we should act and act speedily. We must not longer allow them to be sold down the river into economic slavery. We must not banish them into the snow and cheerless wastes of bankruptcy and despair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill (S. 5337) be passed with an amendment?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed as amended.

A similar House bill and rule were laid on the table.

THE LATE HON. WILLIAM YERGER HUMPHREYS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, with very great sorrow I announce the death of former Representative William Yerger Humphreys on last night, February 26, 1933, at his home in the city of Greenville, Miss. He succeeded his father, the late Benjamin Grubb Humphreys, who was elected 11 consecutive terms to Congress from the third district of Mississippi, upon his death on October 16, 1923, at a special election held on November 27, 1923, to fill the unexpired term in the Sixty-eighth Congress, and he served until March 4, 1925, when I succeeded him.

He married Clara Mai Nulsen, of Greenville, Miss., June 1, 1911, and he is survived by his widow and three children. He is also survived by his mother, Mrs. Louise Y. Humphreys, and by his sister, Mrs. Ralph McGee.

William Yerger Humphreys was born in Greenville, Miss., September 9, 1890. After serving as assistant superintendent of the House document room, he began the practice of law in Greenville, Miss., on June 1, 1914, and with the exception of filling the unexpired term of his lamented father was continuously engaged in the practice of his profession except during his service in the World War.

Will Humphreys volunteered in the World War and was a first lieutenant in the chemical warfare service.

Having lived in Washington for many years, Will Humphreys, when elected to the House, was thoroughly familiar with the duties and responsibilities of Members of Congress. He succeeded his father as a member of the Committee on Flood Control, and like his father promoted the improvement of the Mississippi River. He made an enviable record during his brief service in Congress.

Shortly after retiring from Congress Will Humphreys, as he was affectionately and familiarly known, was elected prosecuting attorney for Washington County, Miss., which position he held at the time of his death. He was both fair and successful as a prosecuting attorney. He mastered the theory and science of criminal law. He was unswerving in the discharge of his duties. He prosecuted no innocent person. He was concerned not only in punishing the guilty but in improving the criminal. He insisted upon the enforcement of the law but at the same time he was profoundly concerned about the improvement of society. He was impartial. All, without regard to station in life, were accorded a fair and just hearing. He was among the outstanding prosecuting lawyers in Mississippi and the South.

Will Humphreys was a gentleman. His forebears were cultured and refined. His father spent his life in the public service. His grandfather was a gallant officer of the Confederacy and Governor of the State of Mississippi.

He was attracted to the public service. He loved his country. He was anxious to discharge the obligation of good citizenship to the State and the Nation. He was patriotic. He was true to every friend and loyal to every trust. Like his father and his grandfather, Will Humphreys was honest in his thinking and courageous in his convictions. He thought for himself. He reached his own conclusions. As a citizen and as a public official he was always true to his ideals of the public service. He possessed and always practiced intellectual integrity. The death of William Y. Humphreys at the age of 43, in the full maturities of his powers, is a distinct loss to his family, to Washington County, to the Delta district that he loved and served, and to the State of Mississippi.

SUSPENSION OF ANNUAL ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS IN UNITED STATES AND ALASKA

Mr. SMITH of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the resolution (H. J. Res. 533) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, what is the purport of the Senate amendment? I think the gentleman should withdraw this matter until to-morrow morning, until we may examine the Senate amendment.

Mr. SMITH of West Virginia. Well, Mr. Speaker, I insist on the matter at this time. It is only a request to appoint conferees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman acquaint the House with what the Senate amendment is?

Mr. SMITH of West Virginia. Well, we disagree with the Senate amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask the gentleman to withdraw this until to-morrow. If the gentleman will bring it up tomorrow morning, we will have an opportunity to consider it to-night.

Mr. SMITH of West Virginia. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the request.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mrs. Wingo (at the request of Mr. Driver) indefinitely on account of illness.

To Mr. SIROVICH on Tuesday on account of death in family.

To Mr. BRUNNER on account of illness.

SENATE

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1933

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER

The Chief Clerk (John C. Crockett) called the Senate to order and read the following communication:

> UNITED STATES SENATE, Washington, D. C., February 28, 1933.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. SIMEON D. FESS, a Senator from the State of Ohio, to perform the duties of the Chair this legislative day.

President pro tempore.

Rev. W. S. Abernethy, D. D., pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church of the city of Washington, offered the following

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, Thou who hast promised us daily strength for our daily requirements, grant to us all that we need for this day's duties. May our thinking to-day be on high levels. May the things that we do be according to the highest standards of truth and justice and integrity. Bless, we pray Thee, all who have heavy responsibilities resting upon them. We pray for our President. We pray for the one who is so soon to assume the duties of W. Bishop and other residents of Cortland, N. Y., favoring this high office. We pray for the men who sit in this honored body. May they be guided to-day in their decisions and deliberations. This prayer we offer in the name of Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of yesterday, when, on request of Mr. McNary and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 1752) to authorize an appropriation for the purchase of land in South Dakota for use as camp sites or rifle ranges for the National Guard of said State.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5337) to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, to permit loans for additional purposes, to extend the powers of Federal land banks in the making of direct loans, to authorize upon certain terms the reamortization of loans by Federal and joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 4008. An act to amend article 5 of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1897, relating to the approval of regulations for preventing collisions upon certain harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States;

S. 4491. An act amending the shipping act, 1916, as amended, for the purpose of further regulating common carriers by water in interstate commerce of the United States engaged in transportation by way of the Panama Canal:

S. 5233. An act to provide for the protection of national military parks, national parks, battlefield sites, national monuments, and miscellaneous memorials under the control of the War Department; and

S. 5469. An act to provide for the creation of the Morristown National Historical Park in the State of New Jersey, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13042) to authorize the transfer of land from the War Department to the Territory of Hawaii, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 5445) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex., and it was signed by the Presiding Officer [Mr. Fess] as Acting President of the Senate pro tempore.

THE CALENDAR-UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I propose the following unanimous-consent agreement, to become effective after the conclusion of routine morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess). The clerk will report the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Oregon proposes the following unanimous-consent agreement:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that the Senate, at the conclusion of routine morning business, shall proceed with the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar subject to the 5-minute limitation of debate under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DHL. Mr. President, I want to call up the conference report on the radio bill before the call of the calendar, if I may do so. I would not want the call of the calendar to interfere with the disposal of the conference report.

Mr. McNARY. The conference report can be brought up during the consideration of routine morning business.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORBECK. I have a resolution lying on the table. Will the unanimous-consent agreement interfere with calling it up?

Mr. McNARY. I particularly specified that the unanimous-consent agreement is to become effective after the routine morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

He also presented a resolution adopted by the executive | Labor Council, of Chicago, Ill., which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution by Silverbow Trades and Labor Council

Whereas the present industrial depression in the United States whereas the present industrial depression in the United States has resulted in the creating of a large army of unemployed; and Whereas the best thought of the country has been directed toward eliminating this condition; and Whereas there is a bill introduced by Senator Wheeler, of Montana, known as the Wheeler bill, S. 2487, the enactment of which would reestablish the honest or stable dollar of our forefathers as initiated by them in 1792 and enjoyed by the people of this country to 1873, in our opinion this is the most important piece of legislation that has been suggested either in the United States or whereas its enactment would be highly beneficial to all classes of our people and all the rest of the world, as we do not believe there is enough gold in the world to carry on the trade of the world; and

Whereas under the Wheeler bill it would quintuple the purchasing power of the larger percentage of the world's population, as it would contemporaneously bring the price of silver bullion from 25 cents per ounce to a minimum of 1.29 the world over; and Whereas under the Wheeler bill it is not proposed to purchase silver, but to place the stamp of the United States mint on silver bullion on a ratio of 16 to 1; and
Whereas we believe this would be the best legislation to bring back prosperity to the whole world, and the only thing that will bring prosperity to the mining States and relieve the present depression:

depression:

Resolved, That the Silverbow Trades and Labor Council gives its fullest support to this measure, and that the secretary be instructed to notify each of our representatives to this effect.

LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE OF SILVERBOW COUNCIL,

C. J. CONNORS, Chairman. THOS. McGARY. H. E. ELLIS. EARL C. SIMMONS. TOM BROWN.

Resolution adopted by the Calumet Joint Labor Council February 14

Whereas Senator Burton K. Wheeler has introduced a bill whereas Senator Burron R. WHEELER has introduced a burning whom as Senate bill 2487 for the restoration of the honest and stable dollar, this legislation contemplated to restore the purchasing power of our people and reopen the industry in our Nation, the remonetization of silver is of vital importance to the progress of recovery in this country, the reestablishment of a stable relationship between the dollar and foreign currencies, thus relieving our price structure from the most destructive of all kinds of competition, that of depreciating currencies of competing nations: Be it

Resolved, That we, the Calumet Joint Labor Council, indorse Senate bill 2487, that the secretary send a copy to each of our Senators and Congressman to request that they give every aid and support for its adoption.

E. J. BUDD. H. C. DIEHL.
A. J. PALMGREEN.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE NAVAL ACADEMY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson], which was ordered to lie on the table, and it was read, as follows:

United States Senate, February 27, 1933.

Hon. Charles Curtis,

The Vice President, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Vice President: I hereby tender to you my resignation as a member of the Board of Visitors of the Naval Academy. I again desire to assure you of my appreciation of the honor conferred on me by being named a member of the board.

With kind regards and best wishes, I am,

Very respectfully yours,

CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. TRAMMELL a member of the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. SWANSON.

ACQUISITION OF LAND AT CAMP BULLIS, TEX. (S. DOC. NO. 207)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for completing the acquisition of land at Camp Bullis, Tex., amounting to $6,400, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF STATUES FROM STATUARY HALL (S. DOC. NO. 208)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, without revision, a supplemental estimate of appropriation pertaining to the legislative establishment, under the architect of the Capitol, for the removal of statues from Statuary Hall, fiscal year 1933, amounting to $4,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF FINAL JUDGMENTS—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. NO. 204)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1933, for the payment of final judgments that have been rendered against it, amounting, with costs, to $2,932, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DAMAGES TO PRIVATELY OWNED PROPERTY (S. DOC. NO. 205)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, an estimate of appropriation submitted by the Treasury Department (Bureau of Customs) to pay claims for damages to privately owned property, in the sum of $100, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

INQUIRY AT DETROIT, MICH., ON GASOLINE DUMPING (S. DOC. NO. 206)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 274 (submitted by Mr. Gore and agreed to on July 16, 1932), a report on the results of inquiry of the commission at Detroit, Mich., on the dumping or alleged dumping of foreign gasoline, which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REPORT OF THE AMERICAN WAR MOTHERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the report of the American War Mothers, submitted pursuant to law, covering the period from October 3, 1931, to October 1, 1932, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5337) to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, to permit loans for additional purposes, to extend the powers of Federal land banks in the making of direct loans, to authorize upon certain terms the reamortization of loans by Federal and joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That for a period not to exceed five years any borrower who has obtained a loan from a Federal land bank may on application to such Federal land bank and upon approval of such application by the directors of the bank postpone the payment of any unpaid installment or installments in the manner herein provided in this installment or installments in the manner herein provided in this section. Such postponed payment shall be made by paying at the time each succeeding annual installment is due, one-tenth of the amount of the postponed payment, and, in the case of semiannual installments, by paying at the time each succeeding semiannual installment is due one-twentieth of the postponed payment, until the amount of such postponed payment has been paid. In any case in which the number of remaining installments due on the mortgage is less than 10, in the case of annual installments, or less than 20 in the case of semiannual installments.

installment is due one-twentieth of the postponed payment, until the amount of such postponed payment has been paid. In any case in which the number of remaining installments due on the mortgage is less than 10, in the case of annual installments, or less than 20, in the case of semiannual installments, the amount of the postponed payment shall be distributed proportionately over the remaining number of installment payments.

Sec. 2. Section 7 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, chap. 7, secs. 711-722), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Whenever it shall appear to the Federal Farm Loan Board that national farm-loan associations have not been formed in any locality in the continental United States, or that the farmers residing in the territory covered by the charter of a national farm-loan association are unable to apply to the Federal land bank of the district for loans on account of the inability of such association to indorse such loans, the Federal Farm Loan Board may, in its discretion, authorize said bank, at any time within five years after this paragraph takes effect, to make direct loans to borrowers secured by first mortgages on farm lands situated within any such locality or territory. Except as herein otherwise specifically provided, all provisions of this act applicable with respect to loans made through national farm-loan associations shall, in so far as practicable, apply with respect to such direct loans, and the Federal Farm Loan Board is authorized to make such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary with respect to such direct loans, provided no such loan shall be made for more than $15,000. Each borrower who obtains a direct loan from a Federal land bank shall subscribe and pay for stock in such bank in the sum of $5 for each $100 or fraction thereof borrowed."

Sec. 3. That subsection "inith" of section 12 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, ch. 7, sec. 771), is amended so as to read as follows:

real estate."

SEC. 5. Section 13 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, ch. 7, sec. 781), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Eleventh. When in the judgment of the directors conditions justify it, and with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to reamortize, in whole or in part, the aggregate amount remaining unpaid under the terms of any mortgage, and to accept payment of such aggregate amount on an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual or semiannual installments sufficient to cover the interest payable on the mortgage and in addition of a fixed number of annual or semiannual installments sufficient to cover the interest payable on the mortgage, and in addition thereto such amounts to be applied upon the principal as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period of not more than 40 years from the date of the reamortization; to deposit such mortgages with the farm-loan registrar as collateral security for farm-loan bonds at an amount not exceeding the principal of the original loan remaining unpaid at the date of such amortization. tion; and with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board to charge the borrower an amount not to exceed the actual cost incurred in connection with such reamortization."

SEC. 6. Section 14 of the Federal farm loan act (relating to express prohibitions on the exercise of the powers by the Federal land banks) (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 791) is amended by adding at

"Sixth. To accept as security or additional security for any loan to any borrower under this act, or any installment on any such loan, any security other than first mortgages on farm real estate or Federal land-bank stock; and the transfer to any Federal eral land bank of any such security if it may not be accepted by the bank under this subsection shall be void: Provided, That any bank may accept an assignment of the landlord's rent to the amount of any taxes paid on such land by the bank, or any interest due."

Interest due."

SEC. 7. That section 19 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, ch. 7, secs. 851-856), is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph, to read as follows:

"Such farm-loan registrar shall accept as collateral security in place of mortgages withdrawn, purchase money mortgages and contracts to sell acquired real estate, for a period not to exceed five years, at the amount of the land bank's investment therein. The banks shall have power to execute all necessary conveyances, transfers, and assignments to carry out this provision."

tension of loans or making new loans.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. Fletcher, Mr. Brookhart, Mr. Steiwer, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. BARKLEY conferees on the part of the Senate

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE-ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, informed the Senate that the House had impeached Harold Louderback, United States district judge for the northern district of California, for misdemeanors in office, and that the House had adopted articles of impeachment against said Harold Louderback, judge as aforesaid, which the managers on the part of the House have been directed to carry to the Senate, and that HATTON W. SUMNERS, GORDON BROWNING, MALCOLM C. TARVER, FIORELLO H. LAGUARDIA, and CHARLES I. SPARKS, Members of the House, have been appointed such managers.

FEDERAL INSURANCE FOR TIME DEPOSITS IN BANKS

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] delivered an address over the radio last evening on the subject of the guaranty of bank deposits. That is to say, that is the general subject he discussed. I think the address is worthy of a place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The Senator discussed a subject which we may have to take up for consideration later.

I desire to read the first three paragraphs in the address.

First. The total credit needs of normal business are greater than any emergency credit that can be borrowed from the Federal Government. Economic recovery finally must come through a renewal of commerce in its natural channels as distinguished from artificial channels created by government. These needs are dependent upon normally functioning banks.

Second. The total employment required to put all our people to work is greater than any Government spending can provide. Private business must serve this ultimate function. But, again, private business must have normally functioning bank resources.

private business must have normally functioning bank resources. Third. Most of our normal business is done in credits and clearances and not in actual currency. For example, total American clearances in 1929 were $713,000,000,000, while our maximum currency supply was less than five billions. In other words, our money problem is less a problem in volume of currency than in the velocity of its turnover in normal trade and normally functioning banking.

Thus, this banking function is found at the base of every economic contemplation. Therefore, since public confidence is the indispensable key to normal banking, our most far-reaching challenge is the creation and maintenance of justified and enduring confidence in this behalf.

Mr. President, while I might want to reserve my judgment with regard to some of the details of this address, I think it is an exceptionally able address upon this subject, and I ask to have it inserted in full in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the address in full was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, I discuss to-night the proposal which I have submitted in the Senate to provide Federal insurance for time deposits in banks. Some such measure may prove to be the power that can break the grip of this depression. The stabiliza-tion of normal banking, for the benefit both of depositor and borrower, may well have this far-flung effect. Here are three simple reasons:

First. The total credit needs of normal business are greater than any emergency credit that can be borrowed from the Federal Government. Economic recovery finally must come through a renewal of commerce in its natural channels as distinguished from artificial channels created by government. These needs are dependent upon normally functioning banks.

Second. The total employment required to put all our people to work is greater than any Government spending can provide. Private business must serve this ultimate function. But, again, private business must have normally functioning bank resources.

Third. Most of our normal business is done in credits and clearances, and not in actual currency. For example, total American clearances in 1929 were $713,000,000,000, while our maximum currency supply was less than $5,000,000,000. In other words, our money problem is less a problem in volume of currency than in the velocity of its turnover in normal trade and normally functioning banking. tioning banking.

Thus, this banking function is found at the base of every economic contemplation. Therefore, since public confidence is the indispensable key to normal banking, our most far-reaching challenge is the creation and maintenance of justified and enduring confidence in this behalf. Successfully established, other recuperative blessings will follow as day follows night.

Of course, confidence has many facets. It never can be divorced from collateral influence like confidence in the stability and sanity and solvency of government, confidence in the integral

Of course, confidence has many facets. It never can be divorced from collateral influence like confidence in the stability and sanity and solvency of government, confidence in the integrity of money, confidence in the validity of contracts. These factors are ignored at our peril. The mere suggestion of infidelity to them breeds jeopardy. They defy any panacean substitutes. It am happy to state my own conviction that Congress will desert none of these dependable foundations.

But underlying everything must be mass confidence in the institution of banking itself. This confidence must be a justified reality—the substance, not the shadow. The existing virtues of banking must be emphasized. The weaknesses must be corrected. The public character of banking responsibilities must be acknowledged more than ever in behalf of the depositor. He is the key to our whole situation, because he is democracy's greatest capitalist. If Congress successfully legislates with him in mind it will serve all these pyramiding advantages to which I adverted in the beginning of this discussion.

One aid to this end would be concurrence by the House of Representatives in the so-called Glass banking bill, which is sponsored by the distinguished Virginian who is the highest American legislative authority upon this subject. Thus would we progressively improve the banking structure and contribute to the confidence for which we strive. Thus would we substantially divorce bank resources and stock speculation. We would increase the scrutiny of public control. We would facilitate speedier liquidation dividends in the unhappy event of bank separate investment banking and commercial banking. We would increase the scrutiny of public control. We would facilitate speedier liquidation dividends in the unhappy event of bank closings. We would sanction state-wide branch banking by permit of each State itself, thus offering at least two new and vitally useful services, namely, adequate banking facilities for otherwise bankless communities, and the opportunity of banking consolidations as a successful preventive of banking failures. All of these considerations trend toward banking health and American bankings.

these considerations trend toward banking health and American happiness.

But my particular proposition to-night is that this healthy banking should be, like any other healthy person, eligible for insurance; and that this insurance, under appropriate limitations, should be warranted by the Government of the United States as a matter of sound public policy and as a final invitation to our unadulterated confidence. I shall submit that this insurance, if feasible, can become the surest means to accomplish all of these objectives which we have been discussing—to end hoarding, release currency, relax and multiply credit, stabilize trade, facilitate new business, build morale, and break the vicious circle from which we would escape. I hasten to acknowledge that the thing is easier said than done. But I shall argue that the presumptions favor its success, precisely as the necessities favor its consideration.

I discuss a new stabilization for time deposits, as distinguished from other deposits, and their Federal insurance supported by cooperative contribution. To forestall prejudice, let ported by cooperative contribution. To forestall prejudice, let me immediately point out that this proposition avoids the traditional infirmities which always have attached to a general guaranty of all bank deposits. Wherever a general guaranty has been tried it has failed, and usually with accumulated deficits and disappointments for the depositors themselves. I refer to State experiments in Oklahoma, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, Washington, Kansas, Texas, and Mississippi. Any general Federal guaranty would reduce sound banking to a dead level with reckless banking and would charge the resultant mortality either to the sound survivor or to the Public Treasury. There could be no permanent advantage in embracing this repudiated principle. But I decline to concede that the infirmities of a general guaranty make it impractical to contemplate a more limited but scarcely less effectual protection for bank deposits in that particanty make it impractical to contemplate a more limited but scarcely less effectual protection for bank deposits in that particular sector where banking touches our mass citizenship in largest degree, namely, in savings and certificates. This is the sector where contagious uneasiness sometimes generates—often needlessly and without justification, and often in response to idle, empty gossip, if not to actual communist propaganda. It is the sector where the greatest social tragedies follow upon the heels of failures which often could be averted if mass confidence were not needlessly disturbed. In other words, if these time deposits are protected, our actual problem is conquered. On the other hand, by confining the new protection to time deposits the infirmities of a general deposit guaranty are effectively avoided.

infirmities of a general deposit guaranty are effectively avoided.

Therefore I am suggesting that a time-deposit insurance fund be created within the Federal reserve system; that these time deposits be made contract deposits in literal fact instead of idle name; and that the insurance fund shall pay any time depositor 75 per cent of his deposit within 30 days of the closing of any insured bank. I submit this would be the beginning of the new confidence which is our first necessity.

The resources of this insurance fund would come from an annual tax of one-eighth of 1 per cent upon all the time deposits in the member banks in the Federal reserve system, plus appropriate annual premiums by nonmember banks wishing to annual tax of one-eighth of 1 per cent upon all the time deposits in the member banks in the Federal reserve system, plus appropriate annual premiums by nonmember banks wishing to participate. A share of the earned surplus of the Federal reserve system would also annually contribute. Whether this prospectus is actuarily sound would have to be probed by acid test. I only sketch the presumptions in its favor. Suffice it to say that if this system had been in operation for the 17½ years of Federal reserve experience from 1914 to June, 1932, which includes 2 years of heaviest mortality, the fund would have been two and one-half times sufficient to pay all the net losses. Here are the rough figures: Total losses in Federal reserve member banks, $1,800,-000,000; average of time deposits, 42 per cent, or $750,000,000; average liquidation recovery, 55 per cent. Therefore if the insurance fund paid 75 per cent, its net loss for 17½ years would have been 20 per cent of $750,000,000, or $150,000,000. Meanwhile its receipts would have been in the neighborhood of $375,000,000. I recognize that many new contingencies would enter present actuarial computations. I would want any conclusive opinion to await these considered findings. But I insist that the tentative balance sheet encourages a belief that such a system is well calculated to afford the cheapest purchase of confidence in the history of our institutions.

lated to afford the cheapest purchase of confidence in the history of our institutions.

I ask you to note the implications of this tentative formula.

First. By insuring only 75 per cent of only time deposits, the bank is left completely responsible for all its other deposits (which would have been 58 per cent of its resources during the period here surveyed), and the individual depositor is left with a 25 per cent responsibility to choose his bank wisely. This escapes the major menace which wrecks a general guaranty; yet it serves the major economic and social need which pleads with us for a new element of reliable protection. The security of demand deposits, under such circumstances, would take care of itself automatically. itself automatically itself automatically.

Second. By requiring that time deposits shall become actual contract deposits, without privilege of waiver, nearly half of the need for complete banking liquidity from day to day is obviated; and this fact, plus the fact that there no longer is any incentive for mass hysteria, will loosen credit and put the banks in position more freely to serve the needs of their communities. One of the chief vices of present banking practice is this fact that time deposits are all actually demand deposits, and banking liquidity has had to restrict itself accordingly. This is one unavoidable reason why borrowers have found it difficult to borrow. Third. By insuring time deposits all incentive to hoarding ends. Hoarding is as dangerous as it is understandable. Probably $1,500,000,000 is in hoarding to-day. This is currency. In banks it would create something like fifteen billions of credit money. In other words, this would produce controlled inflation. Put differently, it would produce safe but effectual reflation in natural course. When hoarding ceases and confidence returns, the resources of the Nation will be equal to all of our national necessities.

Fourth. Federally insured time deposits would eliminate the justification for a competitive Postal Savings System, which now sterilizes $900,000,000 and withdraws it from normal industrial and agricultural use. At least it would eliminate 75 per cent of the necessity for Government bonds as collateral when these postal savings are redeposited in regular banks. This would immediately unfreeze some $650,000,000 of present banking resources. There are numerous other technical advantages. But time forbids analysis in detail.

In a word, there would be new social as well as fiscal security.

In a word, there would be new social as well as fiscal security in the land. There would be new emancipation from worry and loss. To sum up, such a formula could initiate a new era of loss. To sum up, such a formula could initiate a new era of American confidence; permanently foreclose hoarding; relax credit; stimulate the use of money and credit—which defines trade; would permit us to think and act constructively and optimistically for to-morrow; indeed, it might be the impulse needed to move us off the dead center of stagnation and start us upon our way to those happy days that were featured in a recent campaign theme song.

If my original premise was correct—namely, that basic confidence is the Nation's need—then my conclusion is justified that Congress can best serve the emergency by abandoning discussions that shatter confidence and by pursuing this most fundamental of all institutional sources of confidence.

A prominent banker wrote me last week as follows:

"I believe that such a law as you propose would create in

A prominent banker wrote me last week as follows:

"I believe that such a law as you propose would create in America almost overnight the renewed confidence which can swiftly start us on the up-turn."

He may or may not be right. Frankly, I do not believe that our convalescence is a matter of any one prescription. Ten years of high fever results in ravages that can not be cured by some easy patent medicine. I decline to join the metaphysicians who are perfectly sure they have the magic potion for our ails. There is entirely too much of this sure-cure propaganda for our own good. I disclaim any dogmatic recommendation that we would be at rainbow's end simply because we insure time deposits in our banks. I disclaim any notion that it can be done overnight, to quote a phrase from the previously noted letter. It can be done only after careful scrutiny of the whole project, with an eye to extra actuarial hazards induced by present times, and with an adequate arrangement to extend the insurance privilege on a reasonable basis to banks that are not members of the Federal reserve system.

Nevertheless, I am entirely persuaded that it can be done, and that it is a healing prospectus of gigantic magnitude, touching, as it does, 15,000 decentralized cash-and-credit service stations up and down the Nation; touching, as it does, not only these 15,000 banks but also the 40,000,000 depositors therein; touching, as it does, the root source of that national confidence which is 15,000 banks but also the 40,000,000 depositors therein; touching, as it does, the root source of that national confidence which is the wellspring of to-morrow's hopes and aspirations.

The President's research committee on social trends recently observed that the future will call for wide and bold experimentation because of the social relations crowding within governmental influence and control. These enterprises may be bold without being foolish. They may be novel without being insane. I have entered only upon one such field to-night. There are many others. But I insist that this particular one is fundamental. I pretend no finality in the scope or detail of my suggestion. I merely submit a forward-looking philosophy of action, and ask that we determine open-mindedly whether it is feasible and sound. Our American dedications must be to confidence in ourselves and in our institutions. Confidence must be deserved in order to be stabilized. I believe in America. It is in deep economic distress to-day. But it has been in distress before. Yea, in at least five prior periods in our history the fathers went down into the valley of the economic shadow just as deep as we have gone. But each era was climaxed with a new sunrise brighter and happier than anything in previous American experience, I do not doubt the continuing repetition of this history. I believe in my country. I believe in its destiny. I believe in its leadership and in its people. I believe in its recuperative resources. I believe in its future. In our banking relationships, I would try to make these resources and this future as secure as the Government itself.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE THROUGH PANAMA CANAL

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4491) amending the shipping act, 1916, as amended, for the purpose of further regulating common carriers by water in interstate commerce of the United States engaged in transportation by way of the Panama Canal, which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "means a common" and insert "shall include every common and contract"; on page 1, line 6, to strike out "mainly"; on page 2, line 5, after "between," to insert "intercoastal"; on page 2, line 7, after "between," to insert "intercoastal"; on page 2, line 22, after "destination," to insert: ", and it shall be unlawful for any such carrier, either directly or indirectly through the medium of any agreement, conference, association, understanding, or otherwise, to prevent or attempt to prevent any such carrier from extending service to any publicly owned terminal located on any improvement project authorized by the Congress at the same rates which it charges at its nearest regular port of call"; on page 5, line 20, to strike out "seven" and insert "four"; on page 6, line 7, after "possible," to insert "Nothing contained herein shall be construed to empower the board affirmatively to fix specific rates"; on page 6, to strike out lines 8 to 25, inclusive, and lines 1 to 8, inclusive, on page 7, and insert:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will carry out the order of the Senate.

HOBSON'S CHOICE BETWEEN GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP AND BANK-RUPTCY OF THE RAILROADS

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I ask leave to have published in the RECORD an address delivered by Samuel Untermyer, of New York, before the University Club of Los Angeles, Calif., on the 27th instant, entitled "Hobson's Choice Between Government Ownership and Bankruptcy of the Railroads."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

The topic of my address is so interwoven with other important problems of the day that it is going to be difficult to entirely separate them. What may at one point appear to be unrelated subjects will be found, when examined at close range, to be closely related. I shall accordingly ask you to be patient.

As only one-half hour is allotted for broadcasting and the address will consume more than twice that time, it has been necessary to separate it into two parts, somewhat at the expense of logical order and coherency, but I shall, so far as possible, endeavor to avoid confusion.

The continued alarming and over growing depression and the

The continued, alarming, and ever-growing depression and the early advent of a progressive administration, loaded down with a defined constructive program and fair promises of a "new deal," have thrust to the front, each clamoring for immediate considera-tion, more pressing, difficult, and important social, financial, and economic problems than have cried out for solution at any one time in our national existence.

One obvious way of inaugurating this new deal of ours will be to resume diplomatic relations with Russia. I regard our persistent attitude on this subject as mistaken, arrogant, and unjust and blind to our best interests. If we were to sever our relations with every nation that has treated us with ingratitude or repudiated its obligations we would be "on the outs" with most of the important nations of the world.

The tragedy of it all is that whilst these burning questions are harrowing the souls of men and the entire Nation is suffering as one man, we are making no substantial headway, and our social and economic edifice is shaking from pillar to stern from blow after blow struck at its foundations. Candor and self-preservation after blow struck at its foundations. Candor and self-preservation compel the unwilling confession that conditions are meantime growing worse instead of better.

It would be possible to minimize this desperately gloomy picture by taking counsel of our hopes and refusing to look the facts in the face. But would that be wise? Is that the way to muster such preparedness as may be made available? We have, as it is, been suffering from far too much vapid rainbow chasing. It has served only to add to our troubles. It is high time for us to apply ourselves bravely to the stern problems that confront us with a realizing sense that whilst with patriotism, statesmanship, rigid governmental and private economy, and the repudiation of false gods, selfish leadership, and corrupt high finance and big business, things may and doubtless will in time materially imbusiness, things may and doubtless will in time materially improve, the inflated artificial values and conditions of five years ago can never return. Chief among these problems is that of the railroads.

What, then, are the facts as to the railroads? I have assembled a few statistics relative to the carriers covering the years 1913, 1921, 1928, and 1931.

The state of	1913	1921	1928	1931

Details regarding 1932 are not at the moment available. How ever, operating revenues are estimated at $3,200,000,000, or almost equivalent to the 1913 figure; while operating expenses are placed at $2,646,000,000, at the end of 1932, against $2,236,000,000 in 1913, thus leaving a net railway operating income of somewhat more than $500,000,000,000, compared with about $965,000,000 in 1931. It is now substantially less, probably not more than at the rate of $250,000,000 of $350,000,000.

With an original net investment of about $20,000,000,000, the total market value of railroad stocks and bonds has during the past year ranged between $6,000,000,000 and $9,000,000,000 on October 1 last. About $7,000,000,000 of this represents the market value of over $12,000,000,000 of bonds; the balance, $2,000,000,000 or thereabouts, represents between six and seven billions of stock. It appears from the latest reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission that Class I roads will, for 1933, fall short of earning their present interest charges by over $200,000,000.

It has been disappointing to note that during the 13 years the transportation act has been in force, nothing substantial has been accomplished under that plan and it does not now look as though anything will be accomplished. We have had enough experience to be satisfied that the main purpose of the law consolidating the roads into a few large systems is a failure.

We have 697 operating railroad companies, many of them in competition with each other for freight and passenger traffic. Such competition has long been recognized as distinctly harmful. The companies continue to waste tens of millions annually in ineffective advertising and buying duplicating equipment, largely With an original net investment of about $20,000,000,000, the "rusting deterioration."

At the close of 1932, there were over 1,000 railroad executives still receiving, after reductions due to the depression, salaries ranging from $125,000 per year down—and many of them unnecessary. That probably largely accounts for the failure thus far to make more substantial progress toward consolidating the roads under the transportation act. That interest, supported by the bankers to whom they largely owe their positions, is certain to be an important factor in opposition to Government ownership, although the useful executives would not suffer from the change of ownership, with the possible exception of the many who are still being grossly overpaid.

of ownership, with the possible exception of the many who are still being grossly overpaid.

An uncomplimentary article published in the December number of one of our magazines gives a few current illustrations, indicating the limited extent to which the official managements of the railroads are entitled to the confidence of their security holders. One of the instances it cites is that of the Pennroad Corporation, which is a holding company that was creatized and noiders. One of the instances it cites is that of the Pennroad Corporation, which is a holding company that was organized and is controlled by the officials and bankers of the Pennsylvania Railroad as a step in that company's career of expansion under the transportation act. They offered Pennsylvania stockholders Pennroad shares at $15 and thus obtained $150,000,000 in subscriptions from the investing public, out of which over $5,000,000 was paid to the banking house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. as an underwitten companies. was paid to the banking house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. as an under-writing commission. The balance was invested in stocks of other railroads such as the New Haven and Boston & Maine at $120 per share, now selling respectively at $15 and $10 per share. Another investment referred to that gives some conception of the stupid, short-sighted policy of these men is that of $4,500,000 in common stock of the Seaboard Airline, now in receivership, which never had any substantial value and is not worth $1,000.

The bulk of this $150,000,000 of other people's money thus administered by these leading railroad men and their "astute" bankers through the Pennroad Co. seems to be a total loss. The present nominal quotation of Pennroad is $1.50 per share.

present nominal quotation of Pennroad is $1.50 per share.

The Van Sweringen network of corporations, financed and controlled by J. P. Morgan & Co. through the Allegheny Holding Co., in the course of their activities under the transportation act has proven still more disastrous than the Pennroad if that were possible. One may go down the line with the same sad results.

Why Congress or railroad security holders generally should expect to get any assistance or sound advice toward solving our railroad problems from these outstanding international banking houses that specialize in control of the railroads and have gotten most of them into their present troubles, is difficult to

There can be no question that a large part of our present rail-road mileage of 250,000 miles is unremunerative under normal conditions. As long as 15 years ago the traffic manager of one of our leading systems testified that not over one-third of the New Haven or Boston & Maine systems was then operating on a remunerative basis. In support of my argument that no form of management could possibly be more dishonest or incompetent than that from which we have been suffering, more of the sad story will appear later on.

And yet such is the power of the bankers that if we hope to accomplish anything constructive toward the solution of the wellnigh insoluble problem of the railroads, our first task must be to disillusion ourselves of the belief that Congress or the Government is going to be permitted to be a free agent to decide these momentous problems untrammeled and in the best interests of the country.

momentous problems untrammeled and in the best interests of the country. Nothing of the kind has happened to us and nothing of the sort will happen. It is because of that and of that only that a just solution seems hopeless. Relieved from that handicap, the problem is not in itself beyond solution.

The same is unfortunately true in dealing with our banks, insurance companies, big business and virtually every public activity of these men. We have been for the past quarter of a century or more and are to-day more firmly than ever, everywhere in the cruel grip of high finance, with Morgans as its ruler. When I hereafter use in this sense the name Morgans, as I shall have frequent occasion to do since I regard their defeat as the when I hereafter use in this sense the name Morgans, as I shall have frequent occasion to do since I regard their defeat as the key to the success of this situation, I mean the entire American and a large part of the foreign banking world that recognizes the house of Morgan as its leader, blindly obeys its decrees and is dominated by its judgments. Even though we may have lost faith in a leadership that has been overwhelmingly demonstrated by recent events to have been blind and mistaken even though by recent events to have been blind and mistaken, even though our fallen financial idols have turned out to be things of clay that have plunged us into our present morass, such is the hold they have accumulated over us by the system they have succeeded in fastening upon us that their grip is to-day greater than ever. Our faith has been destroyed but we remain more securely than ever they have destroyed. ever chained.

Twenty years ago I dared announce in a public address and undertook to prove by charts, statistics, and interlocking directorates and from admissions of these men under oath that we were dominated by a "Money Trust." That address was widely published and commented upon and led to an investigation by a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Payresentatives of which Compression Paylor I contributed to the leave of the House committee of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives of which Congressman Pujo of Louisiana was the chairman, and for which I was counsel, which became known as the Pujo Committee. Many of the then leading financiers of the country, including J. P. Morgan, sr., were witnesses before that committee and were examined by me. The next greatest figure to Mr. Morgan in the world of finance was then George F. Baker, the president of the First National Bank, since dead, who was Mr. Morgan's most intimate friend and business associate. According to his lights and the peculiar financial ethics of his day According to his lights and the peculiar financial ethics of his day Mr. Baker was one of the finest, most upright and public-spirited men the country has produced. He admitted under oath that the concentration of the control of money and credits in this country had reached the point of danger but insisted that because the control was in the hands of men like Mr. Morgan and his associates, of whom Mr. Baker was one, the peril was minimized.

Due to the vast accumulation of wealth and power and the great new aggregation of industries that were created under the control of the Morgans, many prior to but most of them following the war, and owing partly to the representation of that firm as financial agents of the Allies and to a variety of other reasons that enabled them to acquire the control of further vast financial and business institutions, with largely added facilities and widely scattered affiliations, their power is to-day tenfold what it was at the time of that investigation, notwithstanding the many widely flung ventures in the railroad and industrial world for which they are responsible that have proven inflated and unsound and have contributed to the depression for which they are so largely responsible.

I have long insisted that another Pujo investigation is even more urgently needed now than was that in 1912. I said that over a year ago, when the Senate began its pending investigation of the stock exchange, under a resolution that is all too narrow and insdaquate. The pricking of the mere skin below the surof the stock exchange, under a resolution that is all too narrow and inadequate. The pricking of the mere skin below the surface, within the last few days, of a few companies, confirms this. When my name was put forward for the post of counsel for that committee, at first without my knowledge or consent, there was an insistent gathering of the clans and a hurry call and descent on Congress in a unanimous assault by the lobby that would have defeated my appointment if I had been willing to serve. That was far from the purpose for which the committee was put into existence by Senators Warson and Walcorr under the direction of President Hoover in a moment of pique when he mistakenly supposed that the then raging campaign of short selling was aimed at his administration.

It is unfortunate also that the most outstanding banking house

It is unfortunate also that the most outstanding banking house in the world should have set the precedent of grossly inflated stock issues, with no value in assets or earnings behind them of stock issues, with no value in assets or earnings behind them of which companies, such as General Motors, Steel, Radio Corporation, General Electric, are a few of many like instances. At the time, for instance, of the organization of the United States Steel the constituent corporate consolidations of which it was composed had been capitalized at for from ten to twenty times the value of their physical assets with no record of substantial profits to sustain them. When Mr. Morgan fixed the prices for the securities of these companies, payable in the securities of the United States Steel Co., and took them into the new company—in most cases at a premium over par of the inflated capital in stocks of the steel company at par, the latter assumed underlying bonds far exceeding at par the total physical values of all the assets acquired. All the share capital was pure water. Prior to the war the steel common stock sold as low as $8 per share, but, as the result of its subsequent abnormal earnings as the result of the war and of superb management and the virtual elimination or control of competition, the market price of that same stock in 1929 reached the price of over $200 per share. Many stories of a like kind of other Morgan companies might be told if space permitted.

In some respects J. P. Morgan & Co. has been a valuable asset In some respects J. P. Morgan & Co. has been a valuable asset to the country, but in others it has proven a staggering liability. I have tried to visualize what financial and industrial America would be to-day without it or a like instrumentality. It is difficult; it would be minus most of its colossal water-logged ventures that have cost our investing public the loss of many billions of dollars and would probably also be minus the curse of our own tragic participation in the war and its tragic aftermath from which we are still suffering and will long continue to suffer. If there had been no J. P. Morgan & Co. the entire history of the world would be changed. It would be a different place in which to live—whether for better or for worse is another question; in a few respects worse but in most respects better.

It was not then and is not now claimed or suggested that there was or is any definite concrete agreement binding these powerful

It was not then and is not now claimed or suggested that there was or is any definite concrete agreement binding these powerful elements together in this Money Trust, but the community of interest and unity of action that were thus established is a far more potent and compelling driving force than would be any number of written agreements.

That control is to-day far more complete, far-reaching, and despotic than it then was, and it is still growing notwithstanding the depression and in some cases because of it.

No matter how essential or meritorious this movement for Gov-

No matter how essential or meritorious this movement for Government ownership may be, Congress will find itself (as Senator Norris said in the Senate on Thursday last) helpless to put into effect against the covert opposition of the Morgans. That they will oppose it with all their concentrated subterranean power and machinery is a foregone conclusion. Their interests, traditions, and doubtless their convictions are in that direction. Notwithstanding their demonstrated blindness, their faith in their own judgment remains unshaken.

The power of the combination has since been vastly augmented, cemented, and further knit together and the rulership of the Morgans extended since the investigation of 1912 as the result Morgans extended since the investigation of 1912 as the result of their added prestige and wide-flung power in foreign countries since the war, until to-day it holds the undisputed sovereignty of the financial world. It is in many ways an amiable, well-intentioned despotism, except when its will is attempted to be crossed. Then it can strike swiftly, ruthlessly, and with fatal effect. Although, among other things, it is a money-making machine, that result is largely incidental. Mere money gain has never, however, been its chief aim. been its chief aim.

result is largely incidental. Mere money gain has never, however, been its chief aim.

If it had been, it could not have achieved the vast undisputed sway it has so long held and still holds in the face of adversity and of the exposure of its many errors of judgment that were inevitable in dealing with the problems that have confronted it. It has always sought, according to its own lights, to make the end justify the means. It is responsible for much of this country's legitimate and for still more of its ill-gotten wealth and for much of its enterprise and greatness and much of its misery. Whether it has on the whole been a benefit or a curse is a debatable question; I incline to the view that it has been a curse, although I do not question the integrity of its motives.

To the credit of Morgan, senior, it should be recalled that had they not—but not until 20 years after other countries had enforced by law the publication of their corporate affairs—voluntarily blazed the trail in this country in 1898 with the organization of the United States Steel Co., I doubt whether we should yet have had that meager measure of fair play and protection for corporate investors which they inaugurated in publishing full and frequent reports of its business affairs, for in spite of protestations to the contrary, without the leadership and cooperation of these interests, the public would never have succeeded in securing any measure of justice in that or in any other direction either from Congress or the corporate-controlled legislatures of the States.

It was also the wholesome precedent set by the steel company the States.

It was also the wholesome precedent set by the steel company under the direction of Morgans that virtually forced the stock exchange to abolish the vicious swindling practice of listing so-called unlisted stocks with nothing more than an asterisk prefix to indicate that no statements of their accounts or affairs were made or required to be made by them and that they were permitted to be dealt in as bilind pools. Amalgamated Copper, Metropolitan Street Railway, and American Sugar Refining Co. are a few such instances. They had been for years pawns in a gambling game more crooked than that of any criminal den with stacked cards, by which the public had been swindled to the extent of hundreds upon hundreds of millions of dollars. For that farsighted, though long-delayed action Morgans are entitled to unbounded praise. They alone could have accomplished it.

Some day, when there is a real investigation of the history of

Some day, when there is a real investigation of the history of the stock exchange, we shall get a picture of the means by which billions of dollars have been literally filched from the public in the past through the then crooked machinery of that institution that—to our shame, be it said—is still permitted to remain beyond official Government regulation, supervision, and control and above and beginned the law.

and boyond the law.

I have often wondered whether the significance of recent exposures of the men in former exalted station at the top of big business and high finance and now wholly or partly dethroned is generally appreciated. If it were, the shreds of remaining confidence in the judgment of our captains of industry should be badly shaken and we would not now be looking in that direction for guidance or advice. Our legislators would, on the contrary, be keeping as far away as possible from that unsafe source of inspiration. And yet, those that have thus far been exposed constitute but a small fraction of the casualties that have befallen us as compared with those that would be listed as wounded and missing if the facts were known, or who will be found so labeled when the facts become known when the facts become known.

The little we have learned thus far of the cases of the few unlucky men of wide influence has been tempered in the manner of its exposure by the tender protecting influence of a most elaborate country-wide network of propaganda of suppression and pussy-footing, quite as misleading as any propaganda of publicity and quite as effective. Much the worst of the facts has been entirely suppressed.

I do not suggest that these methods should be condemned in such crises as those through which we are passing. On the contrary, there are conditions, such as the present, when public confidence is shaken in which I regard it as excusable in self-defense, even if not quite justifiable. It is at least understandable that we should condone or minimize individual wrongdoing in high places, rather than destroy the remnants of confidence that are we should condone or minimize individual wrongdoing in high places, rather than destroy the remnants of confidence that are so necessary.

That probably is why we have looked with apparent composure upon such incidents as the lending by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of $90,000,000 to the Dawes Bank on the eve of his precipitate resignation from the head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; the transactions of Messrs. Young, Traylor, and others in the securities of the Insull companies; the decision by the Federal court denouncing the violation by Mr. Young and his company of the antitrust laws; the culpable gross neglect of duty of the former nationally respected and trusted and now completely discredited banking firm of Lee Higginson & Co., that is responsible for the loss of over $250,000,000 of the small American investors who unfortunately trusted them to their undoing in that Kreuger and Toll house of cards, and a variety of other revelations of men in high places that would seem staggering in normal times, but are now so soft-pedaled and gingerly dealt with in the press that they cause barely a ripple on the surface of our tempestuous financial seas.

Although he and no other man of his or any other time in our tempestuous financial seas.

Although he and no other man of his or any other time in our history could possibly have visualized so far ahead the extent to which the country has become enslaved, the prophetic vision of our great martyred President was well expressed almost 70 years ago, immediately following the Civil War, in commenting on the peril to our liberties from the great corporations that were then already seeking to rule the Government, in a letter to a personal friend in the following dramatic word-picture:

"As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is segregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at the moment, more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of war. God grant that my suspicions may prove groundless." may prove groundless."

may prove groundless."

The events of the past few years have confirmed many of our thoughtful, conservative, and patriotic citizens in the conviction that the money power, the railroad power, the public-utility power and the other votaries of high finance, special privilege, and big business are now in control of the Government and that unless they can be not only checked but dislodged and their influence destroyed, our Republic will be destroyed.

We have seen from recent events that these forces are so impregnably entrenched that not even exposure after exposure of fraud, corruption, selfishness, and incompetence can dislodge them or weaken their hold. Whilst confidence in them is utterly shattered they have so fastened their tentacles into the vitals of the body politic that there seems to be no way of shaking them off. If there were no other reason for availing ourselves of this opportunity of taking the railroads out of their grasp (and there are many other sound, conclusive, economic reasons, any one of which would be sufficient) this alone and of itself, would be more than adequate. adequate

Upwards of 100 years ago, Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to

George Logan, wrote:

"I hope we shall take warning from the example of England and crush in its birth the aristocracies of our moneyed corporations, which dare already to challenge our Government, and bid tions, which dare already to challenge our Government, and bid defiance to the laws of our country."

Throughout these past few years of agony and suspense Congress has done a few things intended to ward off further catastrophe, but nothing really constructive in a big way to mitigate our apparently helpless and hopeless predicament, unless we except (1) the amendments to the banking law that have recently passed the Senate and are now pending in the House and (2) the important bill amending the bankruptcy law that has passed the House within the last few weeks, now pending in the Senate, and (3) the provision through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of something over $2,000,000,000 toward propping our crumbling (3) the provision through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of something over $2,000,000,000 toward propping our crumbling financial credit in the desperate hope of thereby saving us from a veritable debacle. Unfortunately, the omission to attach to those credits to the banks the obviously necessary condition that the money so advanced, that was not required to be held in hand by them to assure their solvency, should be reloaned, enabled those institutions to hoard in their vaults the funds that were intended for distribution and thus to largely destroy the purpose of the law. The borrowers who are not using the money for the purpose for which it was loaned to them should be required to repay it.

Of the two important amendments to the banking law, I regard that permitting branch banking, even in its now less objectionable form, limiting it to States whose laws permit that type of banking, as vicious and as a long step backward except in the few spots in which local facilities are lacking.

The other amendment, prohibiting the continued ownership and operation by banks of so-called "affiliates" and requiring them to disband, but only after five years, is not only salutary but necessary, except that here again the cloven foot and malign influence of high finance over legislation is, as ever, in evidence. No such delay as five years should be permitted them in which

No such delay as five years should be permitted them in which to end their blighting and unlawful operations that have played so important a part in bringing about our misfortunes so important a part in bringing about our misfortunes.

A glimpse, but only a faint passing glimpse, into their operations is afforded by the few revelations of the Senate committee of the past few days. It is as a single moonbeam compared to a flood of blazing sunshine. The National City Bank disclosures of facts that have to those familiar with financial affairs long been known are merely symptomatic of the situation in a number of other banks. In the interest of clean government and banking reform, at least, the most glaring and reckless of these cases should be exposed and the guilty officials driven from office. There should be as effective a cleanup of that situation as there was of the life-insurance companies in 1906. was of the life-insurance companies in 1906.

It has long been urgent and essential, if we are to build a worthwhile, dependable banking system such as that for which Senator Glass has laid the firm foundations by his admirable bill. I was relieved to find that he put aside the important Treasury portfolio for the far more important task in this direction that lies before him. If, as of course there will be, a reconstitution of the present investigating committee, he is the man who should guide its future activities, but with greatly enlarged powers.

An examination of the character of the speculative truck in which the big banks, through these affiliates, have buried and scattered billions of dollars among the millions of small banks and investors throughout the country will furnish one answer, and investors throughout the country will furnish one answer, and not an inconsiderable one, to our present condition and why we are sunk so deep in this depression. If Congress had heeded the solemn warnings and recommendations about the affiliates in the Pujo report in 1912 and passed the amendments to the banking bill for their suppression, submitted at page 170 of the report, or if our then President or his Attorney General had enforced the law against them as then personally urged by me in interviews with them, we would have a very different story to tell to-day. The same is true of my many public pleas to place The same is true of my many public pleas to place to tell to-day. The same is true of my many public pleas to place the stock exchange under Federal regulation.

Congress and the country were officially warned against the peril and illegality of these "affiliates" and urged to exterminate them over 20 years ago in the Pujo committee report, heretofore referred to. At that time there were only two such "affiliates" (the City Co. and the First National Co.) in existence, but the overshadowing political influence of these financial institutions was too great to overcome and they were unfortunately permitted to continue their unlawful depredations. Now there are over 200 of them spread all over the country. They have absorbed and now hold in the form of "frozen" credits, billions of dollars of what were once liquid assets, belonging to the depositors of the great banks. They have sapped their very vitals. of dollars of what were once liquid assets, belonging to the depositors of the great banks. They have sapped their very vitals. They were the medium through which the banks were able to indulge in wild gambling and to dissipate their depositors' money in ways forbidden by law, and lost it without ever having been called to account as they should have been.

The fate of the branch banking and the 5-year extension provisions of the "affiliates" that were demanded by the banks as conditions of the passage of the bill is still trembling in the balance in the House. Such is the power of the black-horse cavalry of high finance, even in its most discredited days.

It does not, however, follow, from the fact that Congress is taking so little aggressive, affirmative action for our protection in these dark hours that there is nothing it can do in that direction. Here we are lying prostrate and unprotected, with the solvency of these dark nours that there is nothing it can do in that direction. Here we are lying prostrate and unprotected, with the solvency of our banks, insurance companies, and railroads being maintained by brute force of unprecedented Government aid; our mills and factories closed, our workmen unemployed and in want, whilst the countries of Europe, Asia, and the Far East continue flooding our markets, to the exclusion of our own merchandise, with the products of their pauper labor, paid for in their depreciated currencies. The remedy is simple and obvious and yet our legislators continue haggling over it and are likely to end, as usual, by doing nothing. The overshadowing influence of the lobby of special privilege hangs like a pall over all legislation in which it is con-

For three years it has been as plain as the light of day and has been continuously pointed out, that in order to assist in giving our people employment and assuring to them the scale of living to which they are entitled, we should build a Chinese wall around our country so high that nothing short of reciprocal trade con-cessions could surmount it.

cessions could surmount it.

Let us to the extent necessary to protect our home markets, at least for the time being and until we have rescued our lost trade, confine ourselves to free trade with our 48 sovereign sister States and our colonies. It is high time that our shores cease to be the dumping ground for the surplus products of a pauper, starving, and distracted world, with whose pitifully low standards of living we can not compete.

The first step toward our rehabilitation before we apply ourselves to the solution of the railroad or any other problem must, however, be to apply ourselves to the humanitarian task of bringing about a changed social order, in which we must recognize that the primary charge upon the resources of the Nation is the care and support of the old, the sick, and the unemployed, and their helpless dependents, no matter how heavy the burden upon the rest of us—not as charity, not at all—but as our most urgent duty; as part of the legitimate cost of government and on the principle that every person born into the world is entitled to the opportunity to earn a living at an honest occupation, measured by his capacity. If our system has been so woefully maladjusted that in this land of plenty that produces vastly more than is sufficient for the needs of all our people and where there should be employment for all, there is a plethora of food, clothing, and shelter for the few and not sufficient for the many, something is radically, fundamentally wrong with our entire system and we must care for those others out of our overabundance until the genius of our men of brains has evolved, as they can and must, a just, peaceful, and orderly readjustment and redistribution of our combined

We, who brag of being the most enlightened country on earth, are, to our shame be it said, at least a quarter of a century behind European nations in making these provisions. Such has been and continues to be the "strangle hold" of capital over legislation that some of these measures of relief, such as insurance against old age and unemployment, although agitated for a quarter of a century, have not yet been provided. They must be made readily available and must be administered without tying too much red tape around the machinery of distribution. If we had had them when we should, the vast reserve funds thus created would at least have spared our masses the want and suffering from unemployment.

In that connection I have from the beginning of the depression urged by way of temporary relief and until these provisions are made the wise and far-seeing proposal of Mr. Hearst that Congress make available the sum of $5,000,000,000 to be employed partly for the construction of public works and partly for relief distribution for unemployment through the States and by them through the local communities.

A nation that could have permitted itself to be blindly propagandized by foreign countries through the agency and instrumentality of our bankers in the selfish protection of the debts owing them by the Allies into the most disastrous war in history, and one with which it had no concern; which could have been cajoled into squandering in one way or another over $40,000,000,000 on its own account and in loans to its allies to rescue them 000 on its own account and in loans to its allies to rescue them and win their cause for them, upon the sacred promises of repayment which were never intended to be kept; a country that could have literally thrown another ten billions or more into the maelstrom under the guidance, advice, and influence and to the profit of these same bankers in the purchase of worthless obligations of other countries; surely such a country can afford and will be well advised in the interest of domestic peace if for no more just reason to furnish at least this measure of relief to its own suffering citizens. Why are these cries of distress from our suffering masses citizens. Why are these cries of distress from our suffering masses unheeded? Is it that the voice of the people is too weak to reach the Halls of Congress, that are at all times accessible to these same bankers?

To our shame should it ever be remembered that barely was the ink dry upon our President's signature to the unfortunate declaration of war into which we were cajoled by the lying propaganda engineered by these same international bankers of ours, who had been financing the war for Great Britain and France until, and continued to do so after, we were jockeyed into it, when the first of the money raised by us from our people by popular subscription, amounting to $400,000,000, was promptly used to repay J. P. Morgan & Co. out of the proceeds of our first Liberty loan, that being the amount the latter had loaned Great Britain, and which was represented by an overdraft advanced by Morgans that might never otherwise have been repaid.

our ambassador to London, Mr. Walter Hines Page, is authority for the statement, in substance, that it was only by inducing the United States to declare war against Germany that this money could have been saved or the Allies rescued from defeat.

In order that there may be no mistake, I quote as follows on this subject from pages 270-273 of the "Life and Letters of Walter H. Page.

In a cable dated March 5, 1917, to the President signed by the ambassador, occur the following statements:

"If the United States declares war against Germany, the great-

"If the United States declares war against Germany, the greatest help we could give Great Britain and its allies would be such a credit. If we should adopt this policy, an excellent plan would be for our Government to make a large investment in a Franco-British loan. Another plan would be to guarantee such a loan."

(This, mind you, was the brand of our neutrality one month before the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany.)

"But is there no way in which our Government might immediately and indirectly help the establishment in the United States of a large Franco-British credit without violating our neutrality? * * * The pressure of this approaching crisis I am certain has gone beyond the ability of the Morgan financial agency for the British and French Governments. The financial necessities of the Allies are too great and urgent for any private agency to handle. * * * It is not improbable that the only way of maintaining our present preeminent trade position and averting maintaining our present preeminent trade position and averting a panic is by declaring war on Germany. The submarine has added the last item to the danger of a financial world crash.

There is now an uncertainty about our being drawn into the war; no more considerable credits can be privately placed in the United States."

war; no more considerable credits can be privately placed in the United States."

Then follows this from the Memoirs on page 272:

"Urgent as this message was, it really understated the desperate condition of British and allied finances; that the warring powers were extremely pressed for money had long been known; but Page's papers reveal for the first time the fact that they were facing the prospect of bankruptcy itself. The whole allied combination on this side the ocean are very much nearer the end of their financial resources," he wrote in July, "than anybody has guessed or imagined. We only can save them. * * the submarines are steadily winning the war. Pershing and his army have bucked up the French for the moment * *."

The Memoirs continue:

"Thus by April 6, 1917 (the date of declaration of war) Great Britain had overdrawn her account with J. P. Morgan & Co. to the extent of $400,000,000 and had no cash available with which to meet this overdraft. * * The money was now coming due; if the obligations were not met, the credit of Great Britain in this country would reach the vanishing point."

"Though at first there was a slight misunderstanding about the matter."

matter.

(and well there might be) continues the Memoirs:

"the American Government finally paid this overdraft out of the proceeds of the first Liberty loan. This act saved the credit of the allied countries. * * * The first danger that threatened the isolation and starvation of Great Britain was therefore overthe isolation and starvation of Great Britain was therefore overcome. It was the joint product of Page's work in London and that of the Balfour commission in the United States."

Truly a fine brand of neutrality. No wonder we were in the war. These important incidents in our history, showing how we were propagandized into the war at a propaganda cost to Great Britain that has been said to be many millions of dollars, expended by Great Britain in this country with American-loaned money and paid for spies, secret-service men, publicity, and in other secret ways, shed a flood of light upon the unknown perils the country confronts when its interests come in conflict with the plans and interests of the international bankers. That is somewhat akin to the situation that now confronts us.

the situation that now confronts us.

Of all the business and financial questions just now facing the Nation, that of the railroads is the most desperate and confusing. Nation, that of the railroads is the most desperate and confusing. Opposed to us, representing and virtually dominating the private interests in these roads, is the Money Trust, headed and commanded by the Morgan firm. Government ownership or the hopeless general bankruptcy of the railroads are apparently the only alternatives unless Congress can be persuaded by these financial agents of the railroads, banks, and insurance companies to continue pouring untold hundreds of millions into a bottomless pit, as it is now doing under the influence of these same interests.

I regret to have to say that the program recently presented by the Coolidge commission in this connection, of which much was expected, is a great disappointment. It does not meet the situation. It turns out to be a mere makeshift. It does not even adequately consider or discuss the possibility of Government ownership as an alternative. It proposes, in effect, a mere continuance ship as an alternative. It proposes, in effect, a mere continuance in a somewhat modified form of what the Interstate Commerce Commission has been ineffectually trying to do for the past 12 years in the way of regional consolidations under the transportation act of 1920.

The Coolidge commission having been selected by the banks and insurance companies, I suppose that result should have been expected, although the eminence of some of its membership led us to anticipate at least a frank discussion of every aspect of the problem. I fear that the report almost invites bankruptcy by virtually closing the door to Government ownership.

And yet bankruptcy would bring such widespread disaster in its wake that it can not be contemplated without appalling dread of the many collateral evils that would be unleashed upon the masses of our people. It might well tear down the life, fire, accident, and casualty insurance companies and many of the banks; it would directly and disastrously affect the fortunes of well over one-half of our population, which is the proportion who are policyholders in the life-insurance companies that hold a large part of the securities of the railroads and it would destroy confidence and generally disrupt values as none of the many calamities that have befallen us has done.

Notwithstanding the optimistic prophecies of the majority of And yet bankruptcy would bring such widespread disaster in

Notwithstanding the optimistic prophecies of the majority of the surviving distinguished members of the Coolidge commission, and greatly as I regret to say so, candor at this critical time, requires me to insist that there is no such prospect as the report seems to hold out of the railroads ever reverting to anything like seems to hold out of the railroads ever reverting to anything like their past normal years of prosperity, when their revenues enabled them to meet their fixed charges, to pay dividends, and to maintain their roadbeds and equipment.

Competitive conditions are growing steadily more severe and are bound to continue in that direction. The inroads and extensions of motor, water, pipe line, and air transportation, whose competition is ateadily on the increase and are annihilating the revenues of the railroads, render competition impossible on the basis of substantial returns on present railroad investment at basis of substantial returns on present railroad investment at prevailing interest rates. The relative costs of construction and operation of competitive forms of transportation can not be overcome.

In the past many of our problems for the solution of which we have foolishly taken credit solved themselves by our steadily increasing wealth and population. That will not apply to the future. We have little remaining unsettled territory and an almost stationary population. We have too much in the way of transportation facilities of all kinds and it is far too expensively transportation facilities of all kinds and it is far too expensively constructed for our needs.

One of our economists has recently called attention to the fact that coal, which constitutes more than one-third of the tonnage of the railroads, is less used and is being more and more converted into power at the mouth of the mine, and thus carried by wire, and will furnish less and less traffic for the railroads. Oil, too, now goes by pipe line, as does natural gas, and now the railroads are confronted with the serious competition of trucks and busses and water transportation. The roads have about 2,500,000 freight cars, and there are now some 3,500,000 trucks in service on the highways, which can transport merchandise more cheaply, and will continue to be able to do so, no matter how heavily they are loaded with road, franchise, and other taxes. It is said also that the railroads have since 1920 lost over 40 per cent of their passenger traffic.

When we reflect upon the unbelievable stupidity of our railroad

When we reflect upon the unbelievable stupidity of our railroad executives and their financial advisers in sitting idly and blindly by all these years whilst this competition was taking their busiby all these years whilst this competition was taking their business from them, when they should have anticipated the situation and could readily have supplemented their own service, one marvels at their assurance in criticizing Government operation or any other form of operation. The railroads had their opportunity to anticipate and corral the motor competition. With a fatuous short-sightedness that is well-nigh incredible they threw it away. And yet you will hear them prate against the perils of public management.

of public management.

Their demand for an increase in rates to supplement their vanishing earnings was another of their like "strokes of genius." It was the last thing they should have permitted. The traffic can not bear an increase in rates. They are already 50 per cent higher than in 1916. The motor trucks would simply take from the rail lines a still larger part of the business. The mere scaling down of those rates, if it were possible, and the elimination of the existing wasteful duplication of facilities might at one time have been but will not now be sufficient to stem the tide.

The Interstate Commerce Commission reported in March, 1932, that the total value of freight transported in 1930 was $62,090,-176,000, of which about forty-five and one-half billion dollars was

The Interstate Commerce Commission reported in March, 1932, that the total value of freight transported in 1930 was $62,090,-176,000, of which about forty-five and one-half billion dollars was for manufactured and miscellaneous goods, leaving about sixteen billions for the products of agriculture, mines, and forests. The revenue derived from the forty-five and one-half billion dollars was only one and eighty-five hundredths billions, while that from the agricultural products and coal was two and thirty-six hundredths billions. If we adjust these percentages to the present commodity prices, the tax in the form of freight would be greatly increased, as prices have dropped and railroad rates are higher. The grains, then paying about 15 per cent of their destination price, are said to be now paying about 25 per cent. It was absurd of the railway managers in the early period of depression to ask for an increase of 15 per cent.

Revenues will doubtless in time improve somewhat over the present prostrate conditions but not permanently in the railroad world nor sufficiently to carry anything like the existing load. The ultimate trend will inevitably be downward. Meantime the railroads can not go on indefinitely borrowing from Peter (the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) to pay Paul (its creditors), to meet their interest and sinking fund charges and to refund their maturing obligations. Their collateral (much of it questionable in these times) will soon be exhausted. And then what will happen?

It is economically unsound and reckless to encourage them or happen?

It is economically unsound and reckless to encourage them or to permit the Government to go further in that direction, what-ever may be the differences in our views of the justification for ever may be the differences in our views of the justification for the loans of about $400,000,000 already made to them and of those to which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is now committed. To my mind it means simply postponing, not avoiding, the evil day. Whilst these unearned interest payments so borrowed may serve a useful purpose in this crisis in postponing the day of ultimate reckoning for them and for the public corporations that hold billions of their securities and to enable those corporations to hold out to their policyholders and creditors for whom their bonds are held the appearance of prosperity, as reflected in the misleading character of the returns that those companies are permitted from the proceeds of these Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans to make to the public authorities, such fictitious valuations deceive no one, as is evident from the prices at which these bonds are being sold—in many cases little more than the annual borrowed interest the companies are promising to pay.

than the aintial borrowed interest to pay.

I am not criticizing these desperate makeshifts. It is a case of Hobson's choice. But how long can it last? And what next? Inevitable bankruptcy and under the most crude, stupid, and barbarous laws on earth, laws that are a disgrace to a civilized country; bankruptcy of which the lawyers and bankers are the chief beneficiaries.

I agree with a recent magazine writer that there are no governmental bureaucracies that can compare in waste, inefficiency, ernmental bureaucracies that can compare in waste, inefficiency, and incompetency and none in corruption with the managements of many of our leading corporations. This applies especially to the past managements in the railroad world. There are no Government administrations that begin to be so honeycombed with fraud as have been many of our private corporations, especially railroad corporations, in the past, though the latter were more successful in concealing both their frauds and their inefficiency than our Government institutions. It was the danger that Ambassador Bryce foresaw from private monopolies controlled by bankers that led him to say in his American Commonwealth:

"In England we have a form of monarchy with the spirit of democracy, while in America there exists a form of democracy with the spirit and essence of monarchy."

with the spirit and essence of monarchy."

In England and other countries of Europe public utilities are largely owned and operated by the people as a logical attribute of government. In 16 countries the government owns and operates telephone and telegraph systems as part of the postal service; 10 of them own and operate their entire railway systems; 4 of them own them in part; while in 2 of them, England and Scotland, they were operated in private ownership until the outbreak of the war, when those two countries also took over the ownership of their

The United States is the only nation in the world that does not publicly own and operate its telephone and telegraph systems as governmental functions. Under municipal ownership in Engpublicly own and operate its telephone and telegraph systems as governmental functions. Under municipal ownership in England the best quality of coal gas is supplied at rates as low as 25 cents per 1,000 cubic feet and shows a profit at that price. Electricity is everywhere supplied at rates far lower than by private corporations in our country, notwithstanding the fact that in most of these countries there is little water power available.

Local telephone calls were 2 cents.

The history of Switzerland offers a fair comparison between private and governmental construction and operation. Due to the unique difficulties of construction in the mountains of the Alps, the cost of their railways must be at least five times that of ours, notwithstanding the far lower price of labor. Some of the earliest notwithstanding the far lower price of labor. Some of the earliest great engineering tunneling projects in the world were accomplished in the building of those roads. There are over 1,000 tunnels in the Swiss federal system in that little country, yet their fares are less than ours, while their season tickets are only a fraction of the charges made in this country.

When that Government took over its roads, amounting to about 1,700 miles, it paid for them $199,000,000, or an average of $117,000 a mile, which included a large mileage of tunnels and bridges, averaging a cost of $1,000,000 a mile.

Nobody knows how many hundreds of millions of graft, thievery, and corruption are included in the present capital structures of the railroads, but we do know that the late Edward H. Harriman, who was a stock broker, speculator, and operator of railroads, and never built a mile of road, is reputed to have died worth about $250,000,000, accumulated in and appurtenant to the railroad business. business

There is not time or space here to traverse the unsavory history of the American railroads, but I would like to refer to just a few cases to put an end to this false hue and cry about the perils of corruption under public ownership as contrasted with the lily-white purity of private operation. It is a gross calumny and impertinence and opens up one of the most gruesome, shameful chapters in our history.

It is not a pleasant task to rehearse the criminal and crooked method by which Government, press, and politics have been corrupted and the rights of its citizens destroyed by the acts and ambitions of our former railroad rulers. But such reminders can operation of the roads. The character and quality of contemporaneous management will and should play a part in determining that question, but it is also instructive to briefly rehearse a few of the many instances showing the foundations on which railroad financing was built.

Here are a few of the many illuminating illustrations gathered at random:

1. About 1850 the Government began surveys for a vast railway 1. About 1850 the Government began surveys for a vast railway system on the Pacific coast. After these surveys had been made, at the expense of the Nation, a private corporation known as Credit Mobilier was formed to control this system, thus planned by the Government. The award of these rights to that corporation signalizes the first widely known chapter in the dark history of American promotion and financing of railways. This event is recorded in two congressional reports covering over 1,300 pages, the first known as the Poland report and the other as the Wilson report, both by committee appointed by the House of Representatives to investigate the affairs of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. and the Credit Mobilier of America.

tives to investigate the affairs of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. and the Credit Mobilier of America.

These reports dramatically detail the brazen and reckless manner in which Members of Congress were bribed or influenced to turn over the building and ownership of these lines to a private corporation. They show, among other things, how one prominent Congressman, who afterwards became President of the United States, and two others, who were nominated for the Vice Presidency, and others were implicated in the transactions.

I quote from the Poland report:

dency, and others were implicated in the transactions.

I quote from the Poland report:

"But such is the tendency of the times and the belief is far too general that all men can be ruled by money and that the use of such means to carry public measures is legitimate and proper."

2. Another interesting chapter in our railway history was disclosed in the investigation of the records of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., in certain letters that passed between Milton H. Smith, president of that road, and Samuel Spencer, president of the Southern Railway, in which they, in confidence, gave vent to their fullness of joy in having, as they supposed, "obtained control of America as had Cortez and Pizzaro four centuries before."

3. During the years from 1912 to 1915, many complaints were made by shippers and the public to Congress and the Interstate Commerce Commission of illegal practices of five important systems of railways and their resulting inefficiency of service and unjust rates. The commission accordingly made extended investigajust rates. The commission accordingly made extended investigations and issued official reports of findings between the years 1913 and 1917 respecting these practices and the financial transactions of these five systems, embracing approximately one-third of the country's entire mileage. The systems so investigated were the New Haven; Louisville & Nashville; Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific; St. Louis & San Francisco; and the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton and Pere Marquette.

The evidence and findings of the commission are published in their official reports and disclose, among others, the following facts:

(1) That each railroad company investigated knowingly falsified its accounts, partly to hide expenditures of large sums for the control of politics and elections and to influence legislation and the administration of laws.

(2) Falsified its accounts respecting capital, expenses, and profits so that the commission was unable to ascertain for what numbers west sums had been expended.

profits so that the commission was unable to ascertain for what purpose vast sums had been expended.

(3) In many cases the books and accounts were burned by the directors in order to hide various illegal transactions. Many of these acts were done by directors who were well known as among the world's most powerful financiers. Even though many records were willfully destroyed, the commission was able to secure sufficient evidence to disclose the names, dates, and facts.

The commission's report, in order to bring these various illegal practices in systematic order before Congress and the people, was classified as follows:

classified as follows:

(a) Extravagant speculations and purchases of worthless securities in the interests of the directors; peculations from the stockholders, many by illegal devices accompanied by the falsification of books and accounts and their later burning by the

(b) Hiegally spending the stockholders' money and property to corruptly influence politics, the press, and public opinion and to secure secrecy respecting their accounts.

cc) Acts to secure a monopoly against the public interest by the violation of the laws of many States as well as of the Nation.

(d) The organization by the railway directors of "fake" corporations and "dummy" officers to hide the identity of real promoters and shield them from prosecution.

(e) The voting to themselves by directors of extravagant salaries, in addition to which large sums were taken by some of these ries, in addition to which large sums were taken by some of these officials without warrant of law.

4. As these corrupt practices, including falsifying of records, etc., are common to all the railroads investigated, a résumé of the New Haven system investigation will suffice for all.

All the extracts from the commission's reports are taken verbatim from the records. They are startling, as you will hear from the copious extracts I shall read to you from the report when my breedersting time has expired. Quotations from the report of the commission to the Senate of the United States:

"The New Haven system has more than 300 subsidiary corporations in a web of entangling alliances with each other, many of which are seemingly planned, created, and manipulated by lawyers expressly retained for the purpose of concealment or deception.

former management of the New Haven system has been to disclose one of the most glaring instances of maladministration revealed in all the history of American railroading. * * * The difficulties under which this railroad system has labored in the past are internal and wholly due to its own mismanagement. Its greatest losses and most costly blunders were made in attempting to circumvent governmental regulation and to extend its domination beyond the limits fixed by law.

"The subject matter of this inquiry relates to the financial operation of a railroad system which on June 30, 1903, had a total capitalization of approximately $93,000,000, of which $79,000,000 was stock and $14,000,000 bonds. In the next 10 years this capitalization was increased from $93,000,000 to $417,000,000. Of this increase approximately $120,000,000 was devoted to its railroad property. This leaves the sum of $204,000,000 expended for operations outside its railroad sphere. Through the expenditure of this sum the railroad system has practically monopolized the freight som the railroad system has practically monopolized the freight and passenger business in five of the States of the Union. It has acquired a monopoly of competing steamship lines and trolley systems in the section which it serves. The financial operations necessary for these acquisitions and the losses which they entailed have been skilfully concealed by the juggling of money and securities from one subsidiary corporation to another.

ties from one subsidiary corporation to another.

"Marked features and significant incidents in the loose, extravagant, and improvident administration of the finances of the New Haven, as shown in this investigation, are the Boston & Maine despoilment; the iniquity of the Westchester acquisition; the double price paid for the Rhode Island trolleys; the recklessness in the purchase of Connecticut & Massachusetts at prices exorbitantly in excess of their market value; the unwarranted expenditure of large amounts in 'educating public opinion'; the disposition, without the knowledge of the directors, of hundreds of thousands of dollars for influencing public sentiment; fictitious sales of New Haven stock to friendly parties with a design of boosting the stock and unloading it on the public at the higher market price; the unlawful diversion of corporate funds to political organizations; the scattering of retainers to attorneys in five States who rendered no itemized bill for services and who conducted no litigation to which the railroad was a party; extensive use of a paid lobby in matters as to which the directors claimed to have no information; the attempt to conceal utterances of the press by subsidizing reporters; the investment of $400,000 in securities of New England newspapers; the regular employment of political bosses in Rhode Island and other States, not for the purpose of having them perform any service but to prevent them. as Mr. Mellen (the president of the New Haven Railroad) expressed it, 'from becoming active on the other side'; the retention of one John L. Billard of more than $2,700,-000 in a transaction in which he represented the New Haven and 000 in a transaction in which he represented the New Haven and into which he invested not a dollar; the inability of Oakleigh Thorne to account for $1.032,000 of the funds of the New Haven intrusted to him in carrying out the Westchester proposition; the story of Mr. Mellen as to the distribution of $1,200,000 for the corrupt purposes in bringing about amendments of the Westchester and Port Chester franchises; the domination of all the affairs of this railroad by Mr. Morgan (referring to the late J. P. Morgan) and Mr. Mellen and the absolute subordination of the other members of the board of directors to the will of these two men; the indefensible standard of public ethics and the absence of financial acumen displayed by eminent financiers in directing the destinies of this railroad in its attempt to establish a monopoly of the transportation in New England; a combination of all these has resulted in the present deplorable situation in monopoly of the transportation in New England; a combination of all these has resulted in the present deplorable situation in which the affairs of this rallway are involved."

Pages 35 to 41 of the report give a history of the celebrated transaction in which 18 miles of railroad in which Directors J. P. Morgan, sr., William Rockefeller, and some promoters who were their friends were interested was unloaded by them on the railroad company at a meeting kept secret from the rest of the board of directors, at which President Mellen presided. This property proved to be more than worthless to the stockholders, having been operated at an annual loss of over $1,000,000 and for which their directors forced them to pay the vast sum of $36,434,173.25.

The principal accounts respecting this transaction were kept in the office of J. P. Morgan & Co. in such a manner as to hide the purposes for which moneys were received or expended, under the title of "Special Account No. 2."

Part of the accounts were kept by another banker interested in the transaction named Oakleigh Thorne, respecting whom the commission's report says:

the transaction named Oakleigh Thorne, respecting whom the commission's report says:

"It appeared during the progress of this investigation that the personal records of Thorne which might have shown all the details of these disbursements had been burned by him in January, 1912."

This transaction is all the more sensational since Mr. Mellen, president of the road, was not permitted by the directors who robbed it to the extent of millions of dollars to know who got the money, or as he personally wrote in the records when smarting from the rebuffs of Mr. Morgan:

"It seems that as president of the road. I should be entitled to

It seems that as president of the road, I should be entitled to know who got the money for the truck turned over. C. S. M.'

The following is also from the report:
"The enormous sum of $36,434,173.25 was expended for a only 18.03 miles in extent which is being operated at an annual loss of approximately $1,250,000 and which will have to increase its earnings four and one-half fold before it can pay its operating expenses and fixed charges. * * * The Westchester acquisition was planned and executed by a special committee of the board was planned and executed by a special committee of the board consisting of Directors Morgan, Rockefeller, and Miller, with President Mellen as chairman. The vote appointing this committee 'on proposed competition between the Connecticut State line and Harlem River, with power' does not disclose an intention to authorize the buying of charters and promotion securities and the building of a new railroad, much less one at a cost of $36,000,000. It is ambiguous and was evidently intended to conceal a secret purpose. The full board was not taken into the confidence of those directors who wanted these securities purchased and no report was ever made by this committee, placing the situation as they found it before the board."

The following is from pages 45, 60, and 61 of the report of the

The following is from pages 45, 60, and 61 of the report of the commission:

"The frequency with which dummy corporations and dummy directors appear in this record leads to the conclusion that some one high in the councils of the New Haven had an obsession upon the subject of the utility of such sham methods. The directors of the Billard Co. confessed that they were dummies and knew nothing of its operations. Why men of responsibility and standing as these appear to be should lend their names as dummies passes comprehension.

"In the organization of one of the steamship companies, the "In the organization of one of the steamship companies, the young lady stenographer was made president and a youth of 21 years of age, by the name of Grover Cleveland Richards, was selected as treasurer of another company. Clerks and irresponsible persons were drawn upon to supply the demand for 'dummies' in the financial joy rides by the management of the New Haven. Thus throughout the entire story of deception the New Haven management vainly endeavored to hide the true facts behind dummy individuals and dummy corporations.

"As a matter of law such devices are feeble and puerile, but if the master financiers behind these New Haven transactions could use these sham methods and thus give their indorsement to the use these sham methods and thus give their indorsement to the availability of such crooked schemes to cover the true substance and fact of financial transactions, it indicates a low standard of financial morality. No condemnation can be too severe to apply to the fraudulent use of these companies by the New Haven.

"This investigation has demonstrated that the monopoly theory of those controlling the New Haven was unsound and mischievous in its effects. To achieve such a monopoly meant the reckless and scandalous expenditure of money; it meant the attempt to control public opinion; corruption of Government; the attempt to pervert the political and economical instincts of the public in insolent defiance of law. Through exposure of the methods of this monopoly the invisible government which has gone far in its effort to dominate New England has been visible. It has been clearly proven how public opinion was distorted; how officials who were needed and could be bought, were bought; how newspapers that could be subsidized, were subsidized; how a college professor and publicists secretly accepted money from the New Haven while masking as representatives of a great American university and as the guardians of the interests of the people; how agencies of information to the public were prostituted wherever they could be prostituted."

be prostituted."

5. From the wealth of material at our disposal, in answer to the impudent comparisons between public and private ownership and operation of our utilities, I have only time to refer here to two more incidents of which there are many more of a like character.

Of two railroads entering New York, the Lackawanna and the Erie, the Lackawanna operates about 985 miles and the Erie 2,465 miles. The Erie has a capitalization of $182,240 a mile, whilst that of the Lackawanna is about $42,000 a mile.

miles. The Erie has a capitalization of $182,240 a mile, whiles that of the Lackawanna is about $42,000 a mile.

How this came about is a long story nor is it necessary or useful now to recapitulate. All over this country such divergencies in the construction of the railroads exist. The construction the financial structures of the railroads exist. The construction costs of the two roads is about the same, but we are told that in 1916 there was an interest charge against the Erie of $4,699.99 a mile, whilst the interest charge against the Lackawanna is only $7 per mile. How can the Erie, with its interest charges nearly seven hundred times as great as the Lackawanna's, meet the competition of the better-financed road?

petition of the better-financed road?

It was negligent of the Government to allow these things and to permit the railroads of the country to be made the plaything of the gamblers in Wall Street, but it has been done.

For over 30 years Congress has been pleaded with to give us a reconstruction act and an enlightened system for the reorganization of railroads modeled after the companies and reconstruction acts of Great Britain or Canada or South Africa or of any one of the many other civilized countries, but we continue to cling ignorantly and tenaciously to our clumsy antiquated system that makes of every reorganization a feast and refuge for the vultures of finance. of finance.

Neither could anything, I regret to have to confess, better characterize the want of vision, smug self-sufficiency, and absence of public spirit and professional resourcefulness of the men who have all these years specialized in this branch of overshadowing importance in our corporate law and are reputed to be leaders and experts in my profession.

Under an enlightened system the long delays and staggering fees of these lawyers and those of their banker clients, receivers, self-constituted committees, trust companies, and other barnacles many times greater than the fees and more cumbersome, complicated, unnecessary legal machinery are unknown. In Great Britain the time, expense, and delay would amount to less than 10 per cent of what they are with us.

Strange to say, I do not believe that greed accounts for our pres-per cent of what they are with us.

Strange to say, I do not believe that greed accounts for our present archaic system, so far as concerns our bar. Nor is it ignorance. They are simply too inert, too rut-driven, and unresourceful to think or plan beyond the narrow limits of their particular job. "Tis not to ask the reason why, 'tis but to do or die."

Stirred by the impending avalanche of disastrous railroad and industrial reorganizations and receiverships and the manifest inefficiency and helplessness of existing law to deal adequately with the situation that confronts us, the time has come when Congress can no longer evade this issue. A belated effort is accordingly now, at the eleventh hour, as usual, on its way, after repeated warnings and a generation or more of unpardonable neglect, to modernize and simplify the procedure on reorganization and receiverships but only in certain of its minor phases.

To that end a law has within the past few weeks passed the House and is now in the Senate but will not be considered by the latter until the next session. There can be no question of its urgency, but in its present form it is at best a poor and defective substitute for the British law, which should be enacted in its entirety and especially those parts of it governing receiverships or rendering them in most cases, as in Great Britain, unnecessary. Whilst in the early history of our railroad and industrial development we had pirates and buccaneers among our business leaders, who mercilessly exploited the people, there were men of great courage and vision among them. To-day we have no great business leaders. They are pigmies as contrasted with the leaders of former days. They have proven so shortsighted that they could not visualize the basic unsoundness and ultimate collapse of a policy that went on blindly increasing mass production on the great scale on which it had been pursued under the artificial, overstimulated conditions of the war and without any prospect of an increase in purchasing power as though thos

Any man of common understanding could have seen if he had given any thought whatever to the subject that what we require is the wholesale junking of manufacturing plants. Our great problems are now those of distribution and deflation of production; there is already far too much production.

Insistent propaganda by the railroad interests and abuse of the champions of public operation has not succeeded in blinding the well informed to the dismal lack of ability and progressiveness in our railroad administration. The callous and open contempt, criticism, and abuse by big business and high finance of Government and our public men is ludicrous and largely undeserved. It has not kept us from realizing that on the whole the larger proportion of them are abler, sounder, and at least as honest as their abusers.

But to revert to the main point of the discussion; paradoxical as the statement may seem at first blush from the point of view of the Government, as well as of the owners of the roads, a better time than the present for pressing Government ownership of the railroads and of thus averting wholesale receiverships and resulting further disaster could not well be conceived. The days of inflated prices and dividends are over. Railroad securities have lost their charm and sense of safety for all time. This is not a temporary condition due to the times. It is a permanent condition that is bound to grow worse from day to day. Purchase of the roads should now be possible by the Government on a 3 per cent basis, on something approaching present deflated values and revenues as contrasted with the inflated reproduction costs of the Interstate Commerce Commission on which rates have been fixed which the roads will be less and less able to exact. We are no longer living in the times in which the roads are monopolies, and longer living in the times in which the roads are monopolies, and never again will be.

When one considers the economies that will become possible by eliminating the senseless competition and duplications, by the more effective use of equipment, and by simplifying the management, the possibilities that spread out before us are almost without

It should be possible to acquire the roads, at this time, well within ten billions, which is at least three billions above their value, based upon present market quotations. It is, I believe, above what the Interstate Commerce Commission would be likely to appraise their physical value based on the reduced valuation of above what the Interstate Commerce Commission would be likely to appraise their physical value based on the reduced valuation of the average of the past few years. If we double their present net revenue and add the taxes they are now paying but which would cease to be required from them under Government ownership, this price, payable in 3 per cent bonds, would leave an average of 3 per cent for the stock and a surplus to the Government at least sufficient to make good (1) the loss in taxes, (2) to pay the interest on the bonds, (3) furnish a sinking fund, (4) to gradually repay the outstanding Government loans, (5) provide for the cost of gradual readjustment in routing and construction necessary to eliminate the existing duplications due to present wasteful competition, and (6) cover the cost of rehabilitation of equipment and roadbed, which are greatly deteriorated, and will rapidly become increasingly so unless something is promptly done.

The brief experiences of the Government in railroad operation during the World War, experiences that were diligently propagandized, exaggerated, and misrepresented by the railway managements and banking interests so as to make the operations falsely appear unsuccessful and discreditable for their own selfish purposes, must not be allowed to mislead us into the loss of a great opportunity. The occupation of the private managements will be at an end if they are forced to relinquish their representation of the roads that have for generations meant so much profit and nower to them.

of the roads that have for generations meant so much profit and power to them. We must accordingly take what they may say with many grains of allowance.

Bear in mind what happened in the brief months of Government operation during the war. A vast complicated railway system built up on a competitive basis was disrupted and uprooted overbuilt up on a competitive basis was disrupted and uprooted overnight to meet an unknown and unprecedented emergency, regardless of cost, waste, or consequences. There was no opportunity for the Government to set up an organization of its own. It had to utilize that which was at hand, which was that of the roads. If it was incompetent or defective, it was theirs. It was not in their interest to demonstrate the success of Government operation; very much the contrary. Our men and supplies and those for our allies had to be transported without interruption and with accelerated speed to and from all points of the country, reckless of consequences. Money could not be a factor. To that end, roads and great systems of roads were ruthlessly torn asunder; the known routes of travel were abandoned and others substituted; pandemonium was and had to be substituted for order.

Here we are, by way of contrast, considering a deliberately con-

Here we are, by way of contrast, considering a deliberately conceived plan, having in mind only the public comfort, convenience, and economy, managed by seasoned railroad men carefully selected from the best brains and experience in the land. The problems then and now are as wide as the poles.

then and now are as wide as the poles.

In the face of the inspired propaganda from high financial sources against the accomplishments of the Government in that crucial time, and having in mind the novelty of the problems and the traffic pressure at the time of the war, I venture to insist that the way in which our public officials transformed and utilized our railroad systems for the purposes of the war was nothing short of miraculous. It was one of the most remarkable and creditable accomplishments of the war and one of which we may well be proud.

Not the least advantage of Government ownership will be the scrapping of the fallacy of applying the antitrust laws to a natural regulated monopoly, such as the railroads. It is as absurd as the economic waste involved in the application of those laws to our natural resources

We should end the whole flasco at the same time. It has proven a grave handicap to all business. It prohibits us from regulating and limiting prices and suspending and adjusting production to the requirements of consumption. Future generations are being robbed by law and our natural resources, such as oil, copper, coal, and the like, are being exhausted, not only without profit to us but at a net loss, below actual cost of production, because Congress lacks the wisdom to permit our producers to protect themselves or of the consumers of the future when the most obvious remedies are at hand. Other countries find no such asinine policy necessary or advisable. All we need do to correct this situation is to add a few sections to the Sherman and Clayton Acts that will permit competitors to combine on prices and to limit production under the supervision of the Federal Trade Commission

In conclusion, permit me here to repeat the warning that in In conclusion, permit me here to repeat the warning that in this titanic struggle we must reckon upon the bitter and unrelenting opposition of the Morgan banking group to the last ditch with all the unrivaled and illimitable resources at their command and all that this implies. That is quite understandable, All their traditions and beliefs are the other way; they doubtless believe that the public interest and their public duty also lie their way. It has been easy for them to convince themselves notwithstanding the slimy trail of corruption with which our railroad history is covered. They represent as bankers and are resources the history is covered. They represent as bankers and are responsible to the investing public, directly and indirectly, for the greater part of that stupendous industry. Their influence was originally mainly built upon their financing and representing the railroads long before public industrial promotion began.

To dislodge them will involve by far the most desperate contest in history between the Government and the enthroned, concen-trated forces of special privilege, regardless of the merits of the controversy. Let no one underrate the bitterness of that struggle. It will involve the supreme test of our form of government.

The righteousness of our cause will not be sufficient for success.

Beneath the surface it will play a very insignificant rôle if in fact it is permitted to become known. It will be so misrepresented as to be unrecognizable and will be overwhelmed and submerged by to be unrecognizable and will be overwhelmed and submerged by the power of special privilege.

We must reckon upon the forces of publicity being almost solidly arrayed against us, if not by the combined batteries of outspoken hostility, ridicule, and denunciation, by the still more subtle, deadly, tacit conspiracy of silence. The people will be exceptionally favored if the present plea for fair play is even permitted to reach the public ear. The Morgans control and are the bankers for the Radio Corporation, which in turn owns the National Broadcasting Co. that is administered by high-class men tional Broadcasting Co. that is administered by high-class men whose disposition is to be fair, if let alone, but there are limits to their independence.

to their independence.

One thing only can save the people's campaign. That is that the extreme urgency of the situation may so awaken the lethargic public sense of self-preservation and so stir public sentiment as to force action upon Congress in the teeth of the fiercest fire of opposition from every citadel of intrenched power and special privilege ever concentrated upon any public question. Such is the form of Government under which we are living. God grant that I may be proved to be mistaken.

I except one great publisher from this general statement, for here again, Mr. William Randolph Hearst's newspapers are the only ones that have dared take their accustomed stand on the firing line and tell the truth. Within the past week and after this speech was written his Los Angeles Examiner and presumably his other papers had the following, among other pertinent things.

his other papers had the following, among other pertinent things, to say of the railroad situation and the Reconstruction Finance

"The legacy of past evils, despite all reforms of practice, is still represented in distended capitalizations, towering overheads, postponed charge-offs, and physical obsolescence, which are fatal handicaps to service, efficiency, and the reasonable treatment of the public in the matter of charges.

"It is ridiculous to describe the process by which they are seeking further Government aid as "borrowing."
"Let the Government realize this.

"Let the Government realize this.

"It is not lending the railroads. It is paying for the railroads—paying for them, but not getting them!

"How much better to spend the people's money acquiring the roads, reorganizing them, liquidating burdens which can no longer be carried—doing, in short, the things necessary to put the roads on a paying and serviceable basis.

"The railroads have no solution for their situation.

"If it must be solved by the public and by the use of the public's money, the money should be used in the service of the public interest exclusively."

In this connection I beg here to repeat what I have had frepublic interest exclusively."

In this connection I beg here to repeat what I have had frequent occasion to publicly observe, that I regard Mr. Hearst as by far America's outstanding patriot and statesman, with the courage of a martyr, as he was in opposing our participation in the war before we were juggled into entering it and as he has since proven himself to be and has been in all his social and economic utterances throughout the present crisis. He has throughout been right and farseeing.

throughout been right and farseeing.

Of course the Morgan group will be bitter and unrelenting and will give no quarter in their opposition. With them it means the beginning of the end of their reign and increasing control. Although the loss of the control of the railroads, if forced from them at this particular juncture, is for the salvation of their security holders, they realize that it would ultimately be followed by the nationalization of the telegraph and telephone companies and of the network of power, gas, electric lighting, and other public utilities covering the country for which these gentlemen speak with authority and most of which they represent as bankers, not only nationally in many cases but internationally as through the International Telephone & Telegraph Co. and other similar agencies.

agencies.

From this sketch of the picture, perhaps you can faintly see something of what the success of this momentous movement would mean to this imperial citadel of power and how essential to the people in this struggle, apart from the present exigency, that has alone made possible the release of the Nation from this thraidom.

In conclusion, let me say in just tribute to these modest gentlemen that, quite apart from my duty as a citizen to my country, I harbor only personal admiration and good will for them and their accomplishments; and that if we must be ruled by a supergovernment, I can conceive of no equally amiable or better-intentioned despotism in its place unless, unlike the present situation, it be one in which there would be no conflict between private interests and public duty.

My hope and prayer for my country is that the sufferings of this tragic depression have, however, brought with them the one great blessing of blazing for us the way of dethroning all supergovernment and regaining our lost freedom. If that shall come to pass, it will have been well worth the fearful cost.

MORRISTOWN NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK, N. J.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5469) to provide for the creation of the Morristown National Historical Park in the State of New Jersey, and for other purposes, which were, on page 3, lines 11 and 12, to strike out "vigilant interest, initiative, and protection saved to" and insert "active interest in conserving for," and on page 4, line 9, after "1-4)" to insert ": Provided, That no appropriation of Federal funds for administration, protection, and maintenance of said park in excess of $7.500 annually shall be made for the fiscal years 1934, 1935, 1936."

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE RADIO ACT OF 1927

Mr. DILL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 21, and 24, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "commission," in line 20, insert the following: "an application for a construction permit or license for a new station, a transfer of a license from one licensee to another, the revocation of a construction permit or licensee"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following substitute:

"Section 9 of the radio act of 1927, as amended by the act of March 28, 1928, Public Law No. 195, Seventieth Congress, is hereby amended by adding at the end of section 9 the following: 'Provided further, That the commission may also grant applications for additional licenses for stations not exceeding 100 watts of power if the commission finds that such stations will serve the public convenience, interest, or necessity, and that their operation will not interfere with the fair and efficient radio service of stations licensed under the provisions of this section.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered

17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 8. Section 12 of the radio act of 1927 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, sec. 92) is amended by striking out the whole of said section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"'The station license required hereby shall not be granted to or held by,

"'(a) Any alien or the representative of any alien;

"'(b) Any foreign government or the representative thereof;

"'(c) Any company, corporation, or association organized under the laws of any foreign government;

"'(d) Any controlling or holding company, corporation, or association, of which any officer or more than one-fifth of the directors are aliens, or of which more than one-fifth of the capital stock may be voted by aliens, their representatives, or by a foreign government or representative thereof, or by any company, corporation, or association organized under the laws of a foreign country;

"'(e) Any corporation or association controlled by, or subsidiary to a corporation or association, of which any officer or more than one-fifth of the directors are aliens, or of which more than one-fifth of the capital stock may be voted by aliens, their representatives, or by a foreign government or representative thereof, or by any company, corporation, or association organized under the laws of a foreign country:'

"Provided, however, That nothing herein shall prevent the licensing of radio apparatus on board any vessel, aircraft, or other mobile station of the United States when the installation and use of such apparatus is required by act of Congress or any treaty to which the United States is a party.

"The station license required hereby, the frequencies or wave length or length authorized to be used by the licensee, and the rights therein granted shall not be transferred, assigned, or in any manner either voluntarily or involuntarily disposed of, or indirectly by transfer of control of any company, corporation, or association holding such license, to any person, firm, company, association, or corporation, unless the commission shall, after a hearing, decide that said transfer is in the public interest, and shall give its consent in writing."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to same with an amendment as follows: After the word "commission," in line 7, insert the following: "for each and every day during which such offense occurs"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to same with an amendment as follows: After the word "revocation," in line 13, strike out "modification, or suspension" and insert in lieu thereof "or fine"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "revocation," in line 16, strike out the comma and "modification, or suspension" and insert after the word "issued" in line 17 "or a fine or fines imposed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to same with an amendment as follows: In line 17, page 16, strike out "district court" and insert in lieu "circuit court of appeals."

In line 2, page 17, after the words "if supported by," insert "substantial."

In line 18, page 16, strike out "district" and insert in lieu "circuit."

In line 10, page 17, strike out "district" and insert "such." And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from | its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 12 strike out "district courts" and insert in lieu "the circuit courts of appeals"; and the Senate agree to the

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 13. No person shall broadcast by means of any radio station for which a license is required by any law of the United States, and no person, firm, or corporation operating any such station shall knowingly permit the broadcasting of, any advertisement of or information concerning, any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes. Any person, firm, or corporation violating any provision of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both, for each and every day during which such offense occurs."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 11 and 12, page 19, strike out "or by a governmental agency," and after the words "public questions," in line 17, page 19, insert a new sentence, as follows: "Furthermore, it shall be considered in the public interest for a licensee, so far as possible, to permit equal opportunity for the presentation of both sides of public questions"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: Insert a new section, as fol-

"SEC. 15. All fines collected by the Federal Radio Commission under the provisions of the radio act of February 23, 1927, approved May 19, 1932, and amendments thereto, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States the first of each month."

And the Senate and the House agree to the same.

JAMES COUZENS, S. D. FESS. OTIS F. GLENN, E. D. SMITH, C. C. DILL, Managers on the part of the Senate. EWIN L. DAVIS, S. O. BLAND, F. R. LEHLBACH, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, there are not many points of serious controversy in this report and the conferees are unanimous in their action. The most important points in which the conferees made changes were, first, the provision that examiners should be limited in the hearings they might The House conferees insisted that the limitation should include certain additional kinds of hearings that the examiners should not hold.

The amendment providing for stations of 250 watts or more in cases of the regular allocations under the Davis amendment was agreed to by the House with an amendment to reduce the power to 100 watts. That was the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck]. Under the provision as agreed to by the conferees, small local stations may be established without regard to the limitations of the Davis amendment when they will not interfere with the existing radio service. I think that will meet the demand that is so insistent in the western section of the country, where long distances make it impossible for communities to get radio service at the present time. While it does not go there was considerable insistence on the part of some broad-so far as the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota, it does provide for local stations, and the conferees on the part of the House took the position that stations of 250 watts were more than merely local stations and that we ought not to interfere with the equality provision of the Davis amendment for anything beyond small local stations having power not in excess of 100 watts.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. What changes were made?

Mr. DILL. I have stated the changes made in the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. NORBECK. I did not hear the first part of the Senator's statement.

Mr. DILL. The provision as agreed upon in conference reduces from 250 watts of power to 100 watts of power, so that only stations not in excess of 100 watts of power may be established in disregard of the equality provisions of the Davis amendment.

Mr. NORBECK. I appreciate that even some consideration has been given to the small stations, although I look upon the Davis amendment as a most impossible provision. It bases distribution of radiopower on a population basis, with the result that the prairie sections which are sparsely settled get very little. Chicago will get many more stations than there is apparently any need for. New York City, on the shores of the Atlantic Ocean, will have many high-powered stations and more service than the great prairies out in the interior. As I have said, I do appreciate, however, that even the meager provision for small stations will help, and that is all we can do at this time.

Mr. DILL. Then the section referring to foreign ownership, which caused considerable discussion on the floor of the Senate, was finally modified to provide that not more than one-fifth of the directors of any holding company of a corporation granted a license might be foreigners, and for that reason that paragraph was rewritten.

The lottery section, which was amended by the Senate, was accepted by the House with a modification to the effect that both information and advertising would be forbidden under this provision. The House section prohibited information about lotteries being broadcast and the Senate section prohibited advertising about lotteries being broadcast. The new section written by the conferees prohibits either information or advertising being broadcast so far as they affect lotteries.

The section referring to the equality provision of the use of the radio stations for political purposes and the discussion of public questions was modified by striking out the provision that permitted it to apply to questions to be voted upon by a governmental agency because the conferees thought it was too broad, but they did put in a paragraph to the effect that it would be considered in the public interest for a radio station to permit equality of discussion on public questions.

I think this statement covers the principal points that were agreed upon by the conferees.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President-

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator from Michigan desire to ask a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator.

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator indicate what happened to my amendment respecting international relationships with respect to broadcasting and advertising?

Mr. DILL. The House conferees took the position, since the North American conference on radio will probably be called in the next two or three months, that that was a matter that really should be settled at that conference, rather than to attempt to handle it by means of a statute. That seemed to be especially proper in light of the fact that casters that it would be difficult to apply the section, and, in light of the fact that the North American conference is to be held, the Senate conferees felt that no great harm would result in the next two or three months, between now and the international conference; and certainly it is more properly a matter for international agreement than for a law such as we were trying to write.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator contemplates that the subject matter embraced within the purview of my amendment will in all probability be surveyed by the approaching conference?

Mr. DILL. It will necessarily be discussed and surveyed and acted upon, because the reason why the troubles which the Senator was trying to remedy have developed is that there is no agreement now controlling that situation, and it will necessarily come up and the agreement will necessarily cover it. I think.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am content to have the Senator's judgment on it, in view of the fact that he is an eminent authority on the subject. I should like to ask him simply, in conclusion, if he agrees that there is a problem embraced within this rejected amendment which ought to have some sort of attention?

Mr. DILL. I may say to the Senator that I have been extremely insistent for the past year and a half or two years that we must do something about it, because unless we do have some international agreement or some legislation such as the Senator proposed in the form of an amendment, the broadcasting facilities of our own stations are likely to be seriously interfered with, if not ruined, by the interference of stations that are set up without regard to our broadcasting plans.

Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I am reluctant to take the time of the Senate at the expense of the morning hour, but my interest in this legislation is great. It springs from such part as I took in the framing of the original 1927 radio act, and from the fact that the pending bill, H. R. 7716, was patterned closely after a bill which I had previously in the present Congress introduced in the Senate. I felt that in that legislation, both in the original Senate bill and in the House bill, there were matters which were desirable for the Congress to consider, but I did not think that there was anything in either bill of outstanding importance. I regret to say that the changes which have been effected in the House bill by the Senate committee and which have been confirmed by the conferees on the part of the two Houses are in many respects important and in most respects bad. I desire to call attention to some of the amendments which I think are fairly subject to criticism and to leave in the RECORD the expression of my disapproval of the legislation in its present form.

I shall hurry on, passing over some of the matters upon which I have intended to comment. I will speak first of amendment No. 3 and amendment No. 4. I think they may properly be considered together. Amendment 3 strikes out the general authority carried in the House bill to utilize examiners for the purpose of hearings, and amendment No. 4, a Senate proviso, authorizes the commission to employ examiners in a limited character or number of cases. As agreed to by the conferees, the law, if enacted, will authorize the commission to permit examiners to hold hearings only in cases which do not involve—I will read those

- (a) A change in policy by the commission;
- (b) A transfer of the use of radio facilities from one zone to another:
 - (c) A change of regulations;
 - (d) New devices or developments in radio;
 - (e) A new kind of use of frequencies;
 - (f) An application for a construction permit;
 - (g) An application for a license for a new station;
 - (h) Transfer of a license from one licensee to another;
 - (i) Revocation of a construction permit; and
 - (j) Revocation of a license.

With respect to all these matters an examiner under the conference agreement may not hold hearings. An examiner may, therefore, act only within the narrowest range.

Mr. President, this language is a limitation upon the right to use examiners not only in connection with broadcasting but with respect to every other radio activity. Under the conference agreement as it has been reached the examiners may not be utilized to conduct hearings with respect to the 30,000 or more amateur licenses and amateur applications not only for original licenses but for permits for transfer of frequencies and for all the other activities of the amateur operators of the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator say that a limitation would be placed upon the use of examiners by the Radio Commission if this were to be adopted?

Mr. WHITE. I do. It has practically limited the examiners to negligible authority; and the commission, under the amendment, may not utilize the examiners in any hearing of importance to the radio industry.

Mr. COPELAND. Was that a matter which was added in the House?

Mr. WHITE. No; that was a Senate amendment which was agreed to in conference. This means, therefore, that with respect to the multitude and multiplicity of activities in the radio field concerning which the Radio Commission has responsibility, examiners may not be utilized, but that commissioners—either the commission in banc or individual commissioners—must conduct all those investigations and hold all these hearings in the field or in Washington.

To me it is a most unwise provision, limiting the proper activities of examiners, involving unnecessary delays, and adding to the expense of the administration of this law.

It is also to be noted that this Senate amendment provides, as it is agreed to in conference, that in these unimportant cases which the examiners may hear any party of right may have an oral hearing before the full commission; but with respect to all those important matters which a commissioner must hear there is no provision that there shall be that right of oral argument to the parties. We give a right of oral argument with respect to these trivial matters that examiners may hear, but we do not give a corresponding right of oral argument on all the important matters that come before the commission.

I think, as a practical matter, there is another result that follows from all this. These cases are pending all over the United States. They are almost without limit in number and character. The preliminary investigations and hearings must be either by examiners or by a single commissioner. The result is going to be that the commissioners are going to be away from Washington. They are going to be up in the first zone, or they are going to be out on the Pacific coast in the fifth zone. We are going to have an individual commissioner investigating and hearing all these preliminary matters upon which final adjudications must rest. There is going to be the expense incident to that, and there are going to be delays in getting the commission together in banc to pass upon these important matters.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. DILL. I just want to remind the Senator of the fact, however, that prior to 1930 examiners never held any hearings of any kind.

Mr. WHITE. No; they made their examinations and made their reports and made their recommendations to the Radio Commission; and those investigations and those examinations and those reports, while not called hearings, were tantamount to hearings.

There is another consideration that influences me in connection with this matter. One of the basic theories of the act of 1927 was this: I was not altogether in sympathy with it, but it seemed to be the desire of almost everyone else that there should be written into this radio law the principle of regional representation. The law provided that these zones should be set up; that there should be commissioners from each zone representing the particular and the peculiar interest of each zone.

I think it follows that if these preliminary decisions are to be made by a single commissioner, either the commission would accept as a matter of course the conclusion and the recommendation of that single commissioner and we would have, therefore, no real commission action but individual decision, or we are not going to have, when final decision comes, a conclusion and a decision by the whole board of radio commissioners. It is inconceivable that a single commissioner who has made an investigation, who has found facts, who has reached conclusions as to the merits of the matter and conclusions as to law, should sit in banc with the other commissioners upon that very case upon which he has held the preliminary investigation and hearing and has reached a conclusion. If that be so, then we are going to have at most a conclusion not by five commissioners but a conclusion by four commissioners, and we are going to have the zone represented by the commissioner who made the initial investigation without representation in the commission at the time of final decision.

I might go on and talk about some other matters in connection with these two amendments, but these criticisms seem to me to be sufficient. These comments seem to me to be sufficiently pertinent. These considerations have convinced me, as I have thought about it, of the unwisdom of these amendments 3 and 4; and what I have said about these two amendments applies to various other amendments that relate to the same subject matter. I think them unwise. I think them unworkable. I think they will mean delays. I think they will mean added expense. I think they are in derogation of this principle of regional representation and full commission action on these important matters.

I believe I am warranted in saying that these changes are approved neither by the commission nor by its counsel nor by radio broadcasters throughout the United States nor by lawyers practicing before the commission. Indeed, I know of no one interested in the radio industry, interested in the Radio Commission, interested in the administration of the law except the Members of the Senate and the members of the committee which proposed this amendment, that favors the change which is here proposed, and which has the sanction of the conferees.

I want it to be a matter of record that I most emphatically dissent from the wisdom of the proposal.

Now, Mr. President, passing on I come to amendment 16, as it was amended by the Senate, which appears on page 9 of the bill. This amendment was offered on the floor of the Senate, and the House recedes, with an amendment.

Before I come to the substance of the amendment I should like to suggest that, as a matter of drafting, the amendment is not in the proper place. The amendment should not appear at the end of section 9, but should have been incorporated in the second paragraph of section 9, to which it is related in subject matter. It has no connection whatsoever with the closing paragraph of section 9, to which it is by its terms attached, and which it follows. That, however, is a mere matter of drafting.

The amendment is important in that it rejects the principle of equality between the zones written into the law by the so-called Davis amendment of 1930. It rejects that principle of equality between zones, and it strikes down the principle that as between States within a particular zone there shall be a distribution of facilities according to the population of those States. It strikes directly at that principle, and the logic of it would carry us to the repeal in its entirety of the so-called Davis amendment.

The effect of the amendment, and, of course, the purpose of the amendment, is to increase the number of broadcasting stations in the United States. It is true that it relates only to 100-watt stations and that the interfering range of a 100-watt station is not great; but I think everyone at all familiar with radio knows that the carrier wave of a 100-watt station does go for considerable distances and has a disturbing effect upon other stations.

I think it will be agreed by anyone at all familiar with radio that the installation, the licensing, the building, and operating of a 100-watt station require the consideration of other parts of the broadcasting structure, because this 100-watt station may interfere with stations upon a like frequency at appreciable distances from the station licensed.

The fact of the matter is that we have in the United States to-day as many broadcasting stations as there are in all the rest of the world put together. We have already crowded the broadcasting band of the spectrum to the very limits. We have crowded it to the point that the licensing authority has had to resort to all manner of expedients to relieve against the inevitable congestion following from placing the number of stations we now have in the broadcasting band. They are resorting to classifying the stations, they are resorting to spacing the stations geographically, they are requiring the stations to divide time, and they are limiting the power of the stations, all in an effort to keep within the broadcasting band and to make effective and useful within the broadcasting band the number of stations we now have. Notwithstanding all those expedients, there is coming from all over the United States, and particularly from the broadcasters themselves, a demand that the broadcasting band shall be enlarged.

Some persons interested in the subject are to-day insisting that we shall go above 1,500 kilocycles, the present limit of the broadcasting band, and shall put broadcasting stations on frequencies from 1,500 kilocycles up almost to 1,700 kilocycles. The broadcasters themselves are insisting that we shall go into the band below 550 kilocycles, clear down to 160 kilocycles, and place broadcasting stations in that band in order that the congestion in the present broadcasting band may be relieved; and we have at the present time a most serious controversy on between the different radio users of the United States, some fearing the encroachment upon their services through this insistent demand of the broadcasters for the enlargement of the broadcasting band, and the broadcasters urging that they must have frequencies below 550 kilocycles for their uses.

The projection of broadcasters into the band below 550 kilocycles involves the entire mobile interests of the United States. It involves uses by the Navy; it involves uses by the Army; it involves uses by the merchant shipping of the United States and the aeronautical services. The effort to project these broadcasting frequencies down into that band has brought about a controversy which is raging from one end of the United States to the other, and which has arrayed these interests in sharp conflict one with the other.

The Senator from Michigan made some inquiry about a North American conference. That conference is impending. A compelling reason for that conference is the feeling on the part of some of the nations contiguous to this country that the United States already occupies too much of the broadcasting band, and that the United States must yield up frequencies within that band to some of these other nations. Canada wants additional frequencies; Mexico wants additional frequencies; Cuba wants additional frequencies within the broadcasting band, and there is no way in which the United States can stop these nations taking from the broadcasting band whatsoever frequencies they desire to

So it is proposed that there shall be a North American conference, and manifestly it will be the duty of the delegates of the United States, it will be the position of the United States and the desire of the United States, to retain for the use of the United States its present number of frequencies within the broadcasting band; and I suppose it had been anticipated that the United States would insist that the broadcasting band now used by the United States is crowded almost to suffocation, and that there could not be put into that broadcasting band stations in Canada or Mexico or Cuba without wrecking the broadcasting structure of the United States. Yet here is a proposal in the Congress of the United States to put into this broadcasting band, by our own citizens and through the authority of our licensing agencies, more of these broadcasting stations, striking out from under the United States the very ground upon which it must stand in any international gathering with respect to the protection of this broadcasting band for the interest of the United States. I do not know how any delegates of the United States going to an international conference can successfully assert that this broadcasting band as used by the United States is filled to overflowing when confronted with the record that the Congress of the United States is proposing that more of our own stations shall be put into that broadcasting band.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. In just one moment. I say that if we are to break down this principle of the Davis amendment, which calls for equality between the zones, and which calls for a distribution among the States in proportion to population within any zone, if we are to break it down in this respect, then the entire logic of the Davis amendment will be gone, and we might as well proceed to scrap the entire Davis amendment. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I just want to call attention to the fact that a 100-watt station, if arranged as they now arrange them, will be of a certain wave length, and it will not interfere with anything else except another 100-watt station. The amendment is so written that these stations are not to be granted licenses if they will interfere with existing service.

Mr. WHITE. I understand the language of the amendment; but I can not see what position the United States is to be in when it sits down at an international conference and says to Canada, "You must not take any of these frequencies, because it is going to interfere with use in the United States of stations already licensed." I do not see how we are to say to Mexico, "Do not license use of these frequencies, because they are being used in the United States, and it will wreck our broadcasting structure." not see how we can say to Cuba, "Please do not make use of these frequencies, because citizens of the United States, under licenses from our radio authorities, have made their investments, built their stations, and are utilizing these frequencies." I do not see how we can effectively urge this contention, when these sister nations can point to this legislation which would authorize the further licensing of radio stations of whatsoever power in this already overcrowded broadcasting band. So I say, with respect to this amendment, that it is unsound in principle, that it might be unwise at any time; but it is distinctly unwise at this particular time, with this international conference impending.

Mr. President, I now pass on from that and come to amendment No. 17, found on page 10. I think the conferees have distinctly improved the first paragraph of this amendment, and I offer no criticism of that paragraph in the form in which it has been reported to the two bodies.

It is interesting, however, in looking at the second paragraph, which is retained, to note that this amendment relates to station licenses, and it requires a hearing upon any transfer of a license, of any radio license whatsoever. It is not limited to transfers of broadcasting licenses, but no one of the 30,000 or more amateurs of the United States may transfer his license, no one of the many other users of radio facilities in the United States may transfer his license, until there shall have been a hearing by the Radio Commission upon the proposal.

Existing law provides that those maintaining stations can not transfer them without the consent of the Radio Commission. It might be a matter of the utmost triviality, an experimental station somewhere, an amateur station somewhere, a station of very limited range and of little consequence, and an examiner might, with the briefest and the most casual examination, determine that there could be no possible harm done in the transfer of the license, and under existing law the commission, in those circumstances, could grant the application. But here is language which provides that even the simplest thing in connection with the transfer of a license may not be accomplished until there shall have been a hearing by the full commission, and I think that unnecessary and altogether unwise. It might be advisable with respect to broadcasting stations, but with respect to all these thousands of other stations, it is an incumbrance, and not an aid in the wise enforcement of law.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. An important transfer of a license is generally for money; and if a license is to be transferred for a money consideration, does not the Senator think the Radio Commission ought to have a hearing on the application?

Mr. WHITE. I quite agree that there is a class of cases, the point-to-point communication licenses in international service, licenses in the broadcasting services, where that would be true; yes. But I can not see why one boy having a little amateur license, living at No. 10 Oak Street, could not transfer that license to a boy at No. 20 Oak Street without a hearing before the Radio Commission.

Mr. DILL. The Senator knows that these amateur licenses being transferred do not result in the transfer of wave lengths, and such a transfer would be a mere formality. The trouble with an attempt to single out certain licenses for hearings, as the Senator suggests, and excepting others from hearing is that we would be making a discrimination, and I can not really see that there is any serious need for that.

Mr. WHITE. I will not dilate on the subject further, although I would be glad to discuss it, but I want to hurry on.

I next come to amendment No. 18, and for the sake of brevity I will discuss amendments Nos. 18, 19, and 20 together.

Amendment No. 18, as agreed to by the conferees, relates to section 14 of the present law, and it provides that any station license may be revoked or the station owner fined not to exceed $1,000 by the commission, and so forth, for various offenses which are later enumerated in the section.

I instinctively shrink from granting to one of these regulatory bodies the power to impose a fine. A fine is in the nature of a penalty. A fine, in my conception, ought to follow a judicial proceeding. Its imposition is the exercise of a judicial power.

I have not had an apportunity to look up the law on this matter, and I am speaking from pure recollection, but I know that in connection with our navigation laws the authority of the Commissioner of Navigation to impose fines has been upheld by the Supreme Court. My impression is that the case in which the Supreme Court upheld that power decided that right very largely upon the antiquity of the custom and the long exercise of that right by the Commissioner of Navigation. I insist that it is unwise in the extreme to extend to regulatory bodies set up by the Congress the power to impose fines, which are penal in their nature, upon citizens of the United States.

In this connection, I want to call attention to the fact that sections 32 and 33 of the present law authorize the imposition of fines by courts for precisely the same offenses for which this amendment would grant authority to the commission to impose a fine, and there is no provision in the law that a fine by the one shall be to the exclusion of a fine by the other. So that the result of this would be that there might be a thousand-dollar fine imposed by the commission, a thousand-dollar fine imposed by a court for precisely the same offense, and, in addition to that, a jail sentence imposed by a court for exactly the same offense. There would be a duplication of penalty for which, in my opinion, there is no justification whatever.

It strikes me that if we are to give the commission the power to impose these fines there should also go with that authority the power to mitigate or to remit fines. If the power to impose is to be given, then I submit that there! ought also to go with it, as a sort of a corollary, the right to mitigate or remit.

Mr. President, there is another thing in connection with this provision to which I want to call attention. I especially invite the attention of Senators to this. I am considering amendments 18, 19, and 20 together as one amendment. Amendment No. 18 provides that a station license may be revoked or a station owner fined. No. 19 provides that no license shall be revoked and no station owner fined unless the licensee shall have been notified in writing and shall have been given 15 days to show cause why the fine should not be imposed.

There are many cases where the station owner and the licensee are not the same person at all. There are many instances where the owner has leased the station for a term of years and the licensee is in charge with full authority over the operation of the station. In these cases the person who breaches the regulation or the law is not the owner of the station. So what is proposed here is the imposition of a fine upon the station owner, but with a provision for a hearing only for the station licensee, who may be an entirely different person than the owner. In other words, the proposal is for a fine upon the owner, with no provision for notice to him, with no provision for hearing him, but only a provision that the licensee who, as I have said, may be an entirely different person with interests more or less adverse, shall be given a hearing, and the owner, who is to be fined, is to have no opportunity for hearing whatsoever. I submit that that is unsound in principle and would be unfair grossly in its operation. So much for that.

I pass over amendments No. 19 and No. 20, for I have said all I care to about them.

Amendments Nos. 21, 22, and 23 are similar, and I will say what I care to of them, treating them as one.

The present provision for appeals from decisions of the commission is found in an amendment of 1930 to the original 1927 radio act. So far as my knowledge goes, there have been but two criticisms of the present appeal section of the radio law. The first was directed to the failure of that amendment to provide for an appeal from decisions of the commission with respect to construction permits. That was a pure oversight in drafting, understood by everyone familiar with the circumstances under which that amendment was agreed to, and, as a matter of fact, that defect has been very largely cured by construction of the commission and by construction of the courts. Nevertheless, that defect should have been cured, and could have been cured by a very simple amendment.

The next criticism of the appeal section was directed to the fact that all appeals were to be made to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and it was urged by some persons that certainly in revocation cases the appeal should be to the district court of the district where the station was located, undoubtedly the thought being that a local hearing would in larger degree protect the rights of the station involved.

Of course, that was all predicated upon the belief that there were to be controversies as to matters of fact heard before the district court. The present bill gives an appeal only as to matters of law, so that the force of the original criticism or suggestion has been largely removed. The appeal section in its original form, except for this defect with respect to construction permits, so far as my knowledge goes, had the approval of the Radio Commission, its general counsel, all lawyers practicing before the commission, and station owners and station users generally throughout the United

This appeal section has been scrapped in its entirety and a new and what I consider novel appeal section has been substituted for it. The new section provides generally for appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. It includes a right of appeal from any decision suspending a license or construction permit. I call attention to the fact that there is no power in the commission under present law to suspend a station license, so that the appeal section as it stands is giving a right of appeal from a nonexistent power in the Federal Radio Commission. That power of suspension was removed from the bill by the conferees in agreeing to the various amendments.

In another place in the appeal section the right of appeal is given from a decision suspending a license and it provides that the right of appeal shall be limited to the licensee. Again I invite attention to the fact that in the law there is no power in the commission to suspend a license, so again the amendment gives a power of appeal from nonexistent right.

Paragraph (a) of section 16 as proposed to be amended designates and limits the parties who may appeal. They are an applicant, a licensee, a permittee, or intervenor. No one else may appeal from a decision of the Radio Commission, but there is nothing in the law which says who may be a permittee, who may be an intervenor, or how a person may become either a permittee or intervenor in a proceeding before the Federal Radio Commission. But whatever it means, it is a limitation upon the present right of appeal, for the present right of appeal is among others to any person adversely affected by a decision of the Federal Radio Commission. So here we have a section limiting the right of appeal from that granted by present law.

Because of the peculiar characteristics of radio, because of the fact that a controversy may arise in the State of Missouri and that controversy may involve a station in West Virginia or Maine or Indiana or California, I think it unwise in the extreme to limit, as is here proposed to be done, this right of appeal. I think the right of appeal should be in any person adversely affected or aggrieved by a decision of the Federal Radio Commission.

Amendment 22 authorizes the licensee at his option to file his appeal in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia or in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the circuit in which his station is situated. What I now say concerning this appeal section is an expression of doubt, a question as to its meaning and effect, rather than an assertion as to its proper construction. It is interesting to note that with respect to all appeals except from a revocation and a fine, the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia is exclusive. If appeals upon revocation orders and fines are not taken to the Court of Appeals of the District, it is a matter of the gravest doubt whether review as to them can be had from the Supreme Court. The other questions which must go to the Court of Appeals of the District may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States by certiorari for ultimate and final decision with respect to the law applicable to the case. But with respect to revocations which go to the very life of the license, which involve the entire investment of the licensee, that right of review by the Supreme Court of the United States by certiorari may not be assured because of language to which I shall later

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WHITE. I yield. Mr. LONG. I must have misunderstood the Senator. Does he say that the new bill takes away the right of review by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. WHITE. With respect to appeals which go to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia the right of review by the Supreme Court of the United States is probably safe although I am not certain of it; but with respect to revocations and fines which it is designed shall go to our circuit courts, there is danger of a denial of the right of review by certiorari in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I should like to know what there is in this section that prohibits appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States?

(g) The jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review any decision or order of the commission shall be exclusive except as to revocations and fines, and the judgment of said court shall be final.

That means as to all matters except revocations and fines.

Mr. DILL. But it says "except" that they shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court.

Mr. WHITE. Except as to revocations and fines.

Mr. DILL. They are reviewed by other courts. I think the Senator should be fair in this matter.

Mr. WHITE. I am endeavoring to do so.

Mr. DILL. I think the Senator is exaggerating the matter.

Mr. WHITE. I do not know how many Senators have studied this question. I have done it as well as I could in the limited period of time at my disposal. I do not want to exaggerate.

Mr. DILL. I ask the Senator again, what is there in section (g) or (h) that forbids appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. WHITE. It says "exclusive except" and-

Mr. DILL. That is excluding only the matter of exclusiveness for the District Court of Appeals. The Senator carries that away over into the other section.

Mr. WHITE. If these questions of revocation and fine do not get into the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, as it is designed they shall not, then certainly they can not get into the Supreme Court of the United States from the Court of Appeals of the District.

Mr. DILL. They can go to the Court of Appeals of the United States.

I will come to that in a moment. Mr. WHITE.

Mr. DILL. They are not limited. Section (h) specifically provides they may go either to the District Court of Appeals or the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mr. WHITE. I will get to the other matter in a moment, and it is closely related to what I am trying to say.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose I am in the same situation as some other Senators. I have not had time to study the matter, and it is rather an expert question anyway.

Mr. WHITE. It is indeed.

Mr. BORAH. I wish the Senator would read again carefully that portion which he says has the effect of denying a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WHITE. I think it is a vexed question. I do not want to be dogmatic in my assertion about it. It is so much a question in my mind that I am very much disturbed about it. Section (g) provides:

The jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia under this section to review any decision or order of the commission shall be exclusive except as to revocations and the commission shall be exclusive except as to revocations and fines, and the judgment of said court shall be final, except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari.

Then we come to amendment 23. Paragraph (i) which gives the option to appeal to the circuit court of appeals for the district in which the station is located rather than to go into the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. The provision with respect to review there is as follows:

The jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia

I am reading it in the form in which it was agreed to by the conferees-and of the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States to review any order of the commission revoking a station license or fining a station owner shall be exclusive.

Then it goes on and says, and I am frank to say I do not know what the language means:

An appeal filed by any licensee with either of said courts for

Mr. WHITE. Let me read section (g) and a subsequent | license or fining a station owner shall bar appeal by such licensee to any other court for the review of such order.

> I am frank to say I do not know what this last language means, but it suggests to me a limitation upon the right of the licensee to proceed by certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States. I repeat, I do not assert that dogmatically. I am uncertain about it. And this is with respect to revocation and fines over which these circuit courts are given jurisdiction and to which it is designed that these cases shall go.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The evident purpose of that language is to provide that if an appellant goes into the Circuit Court of Appeals, he can not go into the District Court of Appeals. He must choose one or the other. The language may not be as clear as it ought to be, but there is no statement in this section that says the decision shall be final, which would be necessary if we were to prohibit an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, as the Senator from Maine argues. His statement requires an interpretation that is extremely strained, to say the least, and I can not believe that any court will put such a strained interpretation and shut an appellant out of the Supreme Court of the United States, because the clear intent is otherwise.

Mr. WHITE. It is perfectly clear from past history in connection with past cases that there is no eagerness in the Supreme Court of the United States to review these decisions. I repeat that I am uncertain what the language does mean, but I am clear in my own mind that when we are drafting a provision with respect to appeal either from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia or from a Circuit Court of the United States, it ought not to be susceptible of misunderstanding or misconstruction, and it ought not to be in such language that the right of review by the Supreme Court is put in jeopardy. I am afraid all of those things are true with respect to this provision as it stands.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I desire only to say that the right of review by writ of certiorari under the numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States is so limited that it is not worth very much any way.

Mr. WHITE. Possibly that is so.

When the 1927 radio act was written, it was more or less a pioneering task. There was no body of radio law in the United States, and those active in framing the legislation were going into new and unexplored fields. I have always believed that it was as important that there should be certainty with respect to the radio law as it was what the law in fact was. I do not like at all the suggestion that we are going to have these decisions by the various Circuit Courts of Appeal of the United States. We have nine circuits. We may have nine different constructions of law all at the same time and all before the commission, harassing the commission as to what its proper procedure shall be, what its duties and its rights are under the law. I think it is vastly more important that there should be a single tribunal determining the law with respect to radio, at least in the inception of the development of radio law. I appreciate that the views of the Senator from Washington are widely divergent from mine in that respect, and I understand his reasons

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. What is there about the radio statute that should cause Congress to confine all the radio reviews and interpretations of the radio law to the District of Columbia the review of an order of the commission revoking a station | Court of Appeals and allow all other statutes affecting the entire country to be reviewed by the various circuit courts of | appeal throughout the United States? What is there that requires that we shall confine all of these reviews to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, which, to say the least, is not of such high order of legal ability as to justify a monopoly of decisions and interpretation?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have indicated my position and I am not going to elaborate upon it. I think, however, it is vastly more important to get a speedy and certain decision with respect to these new questions of law than it is necessary, for the time being, than to have the divergent views of many courts. I think we ought to have a chart and compass of judicial decision to guide the Federal Radio Commission in the administration of the law as it develops and as it must be changed from time to time as developments come in the radio art. That is all I care to say about that.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine vield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield. Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that I have a resolution pending on which it is necessary to secure action to-day or it will be too late. I had expected, and was told, that if I did not object to the conference report coming up its consideration would take only a very few minutes. I wish it understood that I do not desire to do anything to prevent a full and complete discussion, but the conference report is privileged, whereas the resolution to which I refer is not.

Mr. WHITE. I will say to the Senator that I have spoken much longer than I intended and I will agree to conclude within 10 minutes.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the Senator, and I desire to say that I am going to continue the effort to secure the consideration of the resolution and to have a vote taken on it.

Mr. WHITE. If I am not through within 10 minutes, I will yield the floor in any event.

I pass to amendment numbered 26. This is a complete redrafting of section 18 of the present law. It leaves to implication or to construction entirely whether or not the present section is intended to repeal section 18 of the existing law. Manifestly there should have been a provision in terms repealing section 18 if that was the intention of the new draft.

Paragraph (c) of this section projects a new feature into our radio law. It verges closely on the control of rates by the Federal Radio Commission. It declares that rates charged for the purposes of the section shall not exceed the regular rates charged to advertisers furnishing regular programs.

This rule, if it is to be enforced, involves a determination of two things: First, it involves a determination of what are regular programs, and, next, it involves a determination as to what are the regular rates charged for such regular programs. There is no provision in the present law for the filing of rates; there is no authority in the present law for the Radio Commission to control in any degree the rates charged for advertising; there is no authority in the present law for the Radio Commission to do any of the things necessary to make effective this provision. Manifestly, if this provision was to be in the law, it should have been so amplified as to have met the conditions to which I have thus alluded.

Mr. President, there are some other matters to which I had proposed to refer. I think, however, I have said enough to indicate my complete disapproval of this conference report in the form in which it is written. I feel strongly that the conference report should not be adopted. I feel strongly that these proposals which have been agreed to by the conferees should not be written into law.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate to discuss at any length the arguments advanced by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. The one contention which he made which I think is important, and which if I thought it correct I would myself move to send the report back to conference, is that if this report is adopted a case of revocation can not be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. I asked the Senator from Maine to cite the language of the bill upon which he relied and he first cited the language of subsection (g), on page 16, which provides that the-review of any decision or order of the commission shall be exclusive except as to revocations and fines, and the judgment of said court shall be final, except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States.

But I pointed out to him that that in no way refers to the section on revocations and fines, which provides separate language referring to appeals. When he reached that section he then admitted that he was not sure what the language means. I think that may be true, as he did not help frame the provision, but there is not a word in the section relating to appeals in the case of revocations to justify the contention that the writ of certiorari does not lie, and the only possible way such an interpretation could be put upon the language would be to take a strained view that no fair-minded court ever would take. So I think the Senator's contention in that respect is absolutely unfounded.

I want to say just one thing about the objection the Senator from Maine makes as to the provision regulating rates for political discussion. We have found in actual experience that some radio stations have charged candidates for office a higher rate for the time used for making a political speech than they charge advertisers. The committee believes that public discussion is of such interest that it is but a fair requirement to say that they shall not charge any higher rate when a candidate speaks than when an advertisement of some kind is going over the air. That is not the fixing of rates; that is a provision for equality of treatment of public candidates as compared to advertising clients who may come to the radio station.

Then the Senator from Maine made some criticism of the provision requiring a hearing before the transfer of a license. I remind Senators that stations to-day are being sold for hundreds of thousands and as high as a million dollars, and they are sold for those prices largely because of the wave length, the frequency, if you please, that the particular station is using and hopes to continue to use. I take the position that the commission has been derelict in its duty in not having held a hearing in every one of those cases, and I think in many cases the applications should have been rejected.

As to the transfer of licenses of a minor nature, it is not necessary to transfer them, anyway. If some one wants to get a radio license and turn it over to somebody else, and it is a minor license, let him have it canceled and a new one issued, if that be so serious.

So it seems to me, Mr. President, that the Senator's complaints are largely technical, and I really do not see that any of the Senator's objections are serious, except in so far, of course, with regard to certain policies adopted, as to which I concede his right.

But I come back to the policy of allowing nine circuit courts of appeal to pass on this legislation and interpret it, instead of restricting it to one little Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia at Washington that has been interpreting it first one way and another. I think it will be to the benefit of radio that the judges of the nine circuit courts of appeal may pass on these questions, rather than that one court of appeals in the District shall have a monopoly upon such decisions. There may have been justification for that when the original law was written, but radio has reached such proportions that there will have to be new interpretations; there will have to be new interpretations under this bill and a broader and bigger application of the law generally on the part of the various courts.

I move the adoption of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have been out of the Chamber, and I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. I was quite impressed by what the Senator from Maine said about the restriction on the examiners. Will the Senator explain that restriction or has he already done so?

Mr. DILL. I will be very glad to explain it. When the original law was written it provided that the commission might hold hearings, and in another section it provided that the commission might appoint examiners. The commission operated for about three years without ever allowing anybody to hold any hearings except the commission itself or one of the commissioners. Then somebody, I think the general counsel, suggested that since the Interstate Commerce Commission holds hearings by means of examiners, why should not the Radio Commission let its examiners hold hearings? So they started that policy, and it grew and developed to such an extent that during much of the last few months the commission held practically no hearings, until the agitation was started regarding this amendment. We have tried to permit the minor hearings to be held by examiners, but we believe that the important hearings ought to be held by the commission, and so we have written in this proposed law a provision that minor hearings, not involving any important questions, may be passed on by examiners; but we believe that if the commission is to keep abreast of the development of radio, and if it is to keep awake to the main problems, then the commission itself must sit in the hearings, participate in the questioning, and take part in the actual development of the facts in a hearing.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will bear with me, I have no doubt I am stupid about it, but I have not had the advantage of listening to the debate. As I read the amendment on page 4, line 16, it would seem to me that the actual effect of the bill in operation would be to turn over more business to the examiners.

Mr. DILL. Oh, no; they are now holding practically all the hearings, and the provision referred to limits them and provides that the examiners shall not hold hearings in cases involving a change of policy, a transfer of facilities from one zone to another, a change of regulations, new devices or developments in radio, or a new kind of use of frequencies, and then the conferees added:

An application for a construction permit or license for a new station, a transfer of a license from one licensee to another, the revocation of a construction permit or license.

So we have limited the examiners almost to routine hearings.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator think it is wise to limit the examiners in going over the preliminaries?

Mr. DILL. No; they are not limited in going over the preliminaries. This only applies to hearings. They can still go out and examine; they can submit any kind of reports; they can do anything they please to secure information; but when it comes to holding hearings and examining witnesses on all important matters, that is to be done by the commission.

Mr. COPELAND. Is it the view of the Senator that the commission has time to do that?

Mr. DILL. It certainly has time. At present the commission is doing a comparatively little amount of work, and, in my judgment, unless some legislation of this kind is enacted, we had just as well abolish the commission and have a 1-man director and let the examiners run the commission.

I may say, in fairness to the Senator from Maine, that he has always believed that some plan of this kind would be preferable—not examiners, but that there should be one director of radio, or one man at the head of it, and appeals should be taken to him. I am not criticizing that, but that has been his view.

Mr. COPELAND. With this amendment, is it proposed to adopt the amendment as found on page 4?

Mr. DILL. With the additional words in the conference report, which enlarge the number of things that may not be heard by an examiner.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as I understand, at the present time the examiners have ceased conducting hearings.

Mr. DILL. They have since this amendment was proposed and the discussion has been brought forward.

Mr. LONG. That is, the amendment proposed to give them the right by law?

Mr. DILL. No; it proposed to prohibit them from holding important hearings. Since that time the commission has decided to hold the hearings itself.

Mr. LONG. What is the harm of letting examiners hold the hearings?

Mr. DILL. Because the commission has set about to let the examiners hold all the hearings.

Mr. LONG. They do that in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. DILL. That is true, but the Interstate Commerce Commission is not developing a new art; it is not developing a new science, such as radio; and we believe that if the commission is to keep abreast of the development of radio it must itself hold these hearings.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. Has the Senator the floor?

Mr. DILL. I have the floor.

Mr. BLACK. If this discussion is going to continue for some time, as it evidently is—

Mr. DILL. I am ready to conclude. I must answer questions if they are asked, however.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that the Senator is; but it is rather evident that the matter is going to take some time, and it is a privileged matter. I am very anxious to get up Senate Resolution 375; and I am wondering if the Senator would object to laying aside this conference report until we can take up Senate Resolution 375?

Mr. DILL. I do not think it is necessary to lay it aside. I do not think there is to be any more discussion, unless the Senator from New York has some more questions.

Mr. COPELAND. I had one or two more.

Mr. DILL. I think we ought to finish it.

Mr. COPELAND. This is the thought that I have in my mind: If the proviso put in by the House with the addition made in the conference committee should be adopted, would it not mean that the commission itself would have to conduct practically every hearing necessary to determine a policy?

Mr. DILL. To determine a policy, yes; to determine a policy, and it should. No examiner should be allowed to hold hearings that are to affect the policy of the commission; but where the commission has laid down a policy the examiner may get the facts and report them to the commission.

Mr. COPELAND. From my own contacts with the commission I am led to have this conviction: Somebody, I think the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck], spoke a moment ago about the number of stations in New York. Of course, we have a great many there; and hardly a week passes but I am appealed to by some radio concern asking for a change of power, a change of frequency, and all that sort of thing. Every such matter would then have to be heard directly by the commission?

Mr. DILL. It would not; no. If somebody wanted to transfer a frequency by a station, take it over, then it would have to be heard by the commission; but if it is a matter of change of power or a matter of applying for a new wave length, or something of that kind, it can be heard by the examiner.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is quite sure about that? Mr. DILL. Oh, there is no doubt about that.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask because this matter has come up very frequently in connection with the city of New York station and some other stations.

Mr. DILL. But if a station is proposed to be bought by somebody, I think the Senator will agree that that is a matter that ought to be passed on by the commission.

Mr. COPELAND. I think that is true. I think it should. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

AVIATION HOLDING COMPANIES, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 312, submitted by Mr. Nye on December 23, 1932, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and hereby is, requested to obtain and furnish to the Senate at the earliest pracrequested to obtain and furnish to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the following information, to wit: (1) List of stocks held by aviation holding corporations; (2) list showing the various corporations owning stock in air mail transport lines and the amount of stock held in each instance; (3) list showing directors of aviation holding companies owning aviation stocks in air mail transport lines and having membership on the board of directors of such air-transport companies; (4) list showing airplane manufacturers, airplane-motor manufacturers, and airplane parts and instrument manufacturers owning stock in either aviation holding companies or air mail transport lines, and the amount so held in each instance; (5) list of officers and directors of aviation holding companies who through stock ownership are officers and directors companies who through stock ownership are officers and directors of air mail transport lines and companies manufacturing or distributing airplanes, airplane motors, and airplane parts and instruments; (6) list showing employees of aviation holding companies who are also employees of air mail transport lines, and companies manufacturing or distributing airplanes, airplane motors, and airplane parts and instruments, and the compensation, if any, received in each instance; (7) list of employees, officers, and directors now in the employ of air mail transport lines or aviation holding companies or companies manufacturing lines or aviation holding companies or companies manufacturing or distributing airplanes, airplane motors, and airplane parts and instruments who were formerly employed by the United States Post Office Department, giving the position each formerly held in the Post Office Department and the compensation received while in the employ of the said department and the compensation they are now receiving in the aviation industry; and (8) list of employees, officers, and directors of air mail transport lines and aviation holding companies and companies manufacturing or distributing airplanes, airplane motors, and airplane parts and instruments who are relatives of present employees or officials in the said Post Office Department, all such listings to be as of December 20, 1932.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, by previous action on the part of the Senate a select committee has been authorized to investigate thoroughly the questions involved in Senate Resolution 312. I therefore have no desire to press it, and move its indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5233) to provide for the protection of national military parks, national parks, battlefield sites, national monuments, and miscellaneous memorials under the control of the War Department, which were, on page 1, line 4, after "scribe." to insert "and publish," and on page 1, line 9, after "who," to insert "knowingly and."

Mr. REED. I move that the Senate concur in the House

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF HARBOR, RIVER, ETC., COLLISIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4008) to amend article 5 of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1897, relating to the approval of regulations for preventing collisions upon certain harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, which were, on page 1, line 9, to strike out "barges and canal"; on page 2, line 1, to strike out "boats" and insert "barges, canal boats, scows, and other vessels of nondescript type"; and on page 2, line 5, to strike out "barges and canal boats" and insert "barges, canal boats, scows, and other vessels of nondescript type."
Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate accept the amendments of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF SHORT SELLING ON STOCK EXCHANGES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 371, submitted by Mr. Costigan on the 24th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 84, Seventy-second Congress, agreed to March 4, 1932, and continued in force by Senate Resolution No. 239, Seventy-second Congress, agreed to June 21, 1932, is hereby further continued in full force and effect until the expiration of the first session of the Seventy-third Congress.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, at this time I move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator explain to us what the resolution means?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the resolution calls for the continuance until the close of the first session of the Seventy-third Congress of the stock-market investigation now being carried on by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. The committee's authority was first given under Senate Resolution 84, and was continued until the expiration of the Seventy-second Congress under Senate Resolution 239.

As is well known, the committee now is in the midst of that investigation. Its disclosures, and legislative remedies which may naturally be expected to flow from the testimony being taken, are justly attracting nation-wide attention. It is assumed that no Member of the Senate will desire to interfere with that highly important investigation at a time when general public agreement is being expressed on the overwhelming necessity for remedial enactments by Congress to guard, so far as is humanly possible, against the recurrence of such conditions as have been and are being revealed by the testimony.

As part of and in confirmation of my remarks, I request that the two earlier resolutions—namely, Senate Resolution 84 and Senate Resolution 239-may be printed in the REC-ORD, that certain extracts from news columns indicating significant testimony, as reported in the New York Times of February 22 and February 23 may be added; also, that there be included an editorial from the New York Times of this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so

The matter referred to is as follows:

Senate Resolution 84, Seventy-second Congress, first session

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed (1) to make a thorough and complete investigation of the practices with respect to the buying and selling and the borrowing and lending of listed securities upon the various stock exchanges, and lending of listed securities upon the various stock exchanges, the values of such securities, and the effect of such practices upon interstate and foreign commerce, upon the operation of the national banking system and the Federal reserve system, and upon the market for securities of the United States Government, and the desirability of the exercise of the taxing power of the United States with respect to any such securities; and (2) to report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of such investigation and, if in its judgment such practices should be regulated, to submit with such report its recommendations for the necessary

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the first session of the Seventy-second Congress, to employ such experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpæna or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpens or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Senate Resolution 239, Seventy-second Congress, first session Resolved, That S. Res. 84, Seventy-second Congress, agreed to March 4, 1932, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the expiration of the Seventy-second Congress, and the limit of expenditures to be made under authority of such resolution is hereby increased by $50,000.

MITCHELL AVOIDED INCOME TAX IN 1929 BY $2,800,000 LOSS-BANKER TELLS SENATORS HE SOLD STOCKS TO RELATIVE, THEN REBOUGHT THEM—GOT $3,500,000 IN THREE YEARS—BONUS FROM "MANAGEMENT FUND" WAS IN ADDITION TO SALARY FROM TWO JOBS—"BAILED OUT" CUBAN LOAN—NATIONAL CITY COVERED LOSS OF $30,000,000 ON SUGAR BY A STOCK SALE TO THE PUBLIC

WASHINGTON, February 21.—Charles E. Mitchell, chairman of the board of the National City Bank and its affiliate, the National City Co., both of New York, to-day told the Senate Banking Committee that in 1929 he sold to a member of his family 18,000 shares of National City Bank stock, the resulting loss of nearly $2,800,000 enabling him to avoid paying a Federal income tax that year. Later he rebought this stock.

Mr. Mitchell had previously testified that the National City Bank owned all the stock of the National City Co. shareholders, and that the stock of the latter was trusteed with three trusts for the benefit of the shareholders of the National City Bank. These trustees were Beekman Winthrop, Percy A. Rockefeller, and James

A. Stillman.

In reply to a suggestion that the investment business of the National City Co. has increased substantially since its merger with the Farmers Loan & Trust Co. of New York, Mr. Mitchell said:

"I should say from pure recollection that the sales of securities by the National City Co. had averaged over a 10-year period $1,500,000,000 a year, and I think the high was about $2,000,000,000 and the low just under $1,000,000,000." The high occurred in 1927 or 1928 and the low during the past year.

DELVES INTO BONUSES

Doctor Pecora then examined Mr. Mitchell regarding the payment of bonuses to the officers of the two institutions.

The banker admitted receiving for 1927, 1928, and 1929 from the bank and its affiliate bonuses totaling $3,481,732, apart from his salary, which in the case of the company amounted to $25,000 a year. This extra income, he explained, was from the management fund of the two institutions, in which was placed 20 per cent of annual earnings after deduction of 8 per cent to be paid on capital, surplus, and undivided profits.

The bank's management fund in 1927 was $1,356,990, of which he received $529,230. The company's fund that year was $1,988,-000 and his share was $527,000. That made his total bonus for the year $1,056,230.

The next year the bank's fund was $1,401,585, from which he got $566,634, and the company's fund was $2,739,438, with his share $750,000. In 1929 the bank's fund was $1,725,117, out of which he obtained $608,868.

The affiliate's fund for 1929 was nil, but there was a distribution for the first half of the year from which he got about

This was wiped out by the end of the year. The bonus payments were not refunded, but made deductible from future accumulations, of which there have been none so far, because the management fund system has not operated since 1929.

EXPLAINS GIVING OF BONUSES

"You see," said Mr. Mitchell, "the National City Co. was an in-"You see," said Mr. Mitchell, "the National City Co. was an investment corporation, and it selected as its executives men who would normally be of the type to hold partnerships in private banking and investment companies. It was necessary to meet the competition of private partnerships, which partnerships were often extremely lucrative, by giving to the officers, who were the equivalent of partners in a private banking or investment firm, some share in the profits that they should make.

"The fund was theoretically divided into two parts, and at the outset of the vear the executive committee determined what nor-

"The fund was theoretically divided into two parts, and at the outset of the year the executive committee determined what portion each and every officer should have of one-half of the funds that might accumulate during that year. That was what we called the forward look, because, of course, hardly any two men can be judged to be worth exactly the same amount, and they were all getting the same salary, and this differentiation in the value to the company of these various men was represented in the percentage of this first half of the management fund of which I speak.

"The other half was determined usually twice a year, in July and in January. The officers who participated in this fund were generally asked at that time to submit a vote, which was not a signed vote and was not submitted to me but to some representative of the executive committee.

"It was a secret vote as to what portion should be mine. And then they were asked, having made that vote, for a signed vote as to what proportion each officer should get as to the balance, leaving themselves out of consideration."

COUZENS QUESTIONS PRACTICE

"Do you think it was a good system?" Senator Couzens asked.
"Yes," Mr. Mitchell replied. "I feel quite strongly about it.
It established an esprit de corps."
"Doesn't it also inspire a lack of care in the sale of securities

"I can readily see, from your viewpoint, that it would seem so," Mr. Mitchell replied, "and I must grant that there must be some influence. At the same time I don't recall seeing it operate that way."

"You wouldn't," Senator Couzens retorted. "Only the cus-

"You wouldn't," Senator Couzens retorted. "Only the customers would see it after they got the securities. How many of the securities that you sold are now in default?"

"That is a difficult question," the banker said.

"During a 10-year period our total sales were about $20,000,000,-000, and I think there has been difficulty of one sort or another in something under $1,000,000,000."

"I want to say," said Senator Couzens, "that this testimony is being elicited not with the idea of going into the personal affairs of Mr. Mitchell or the National City Co. but for the purpose of demonstrating publicly, if possible, that these unreasonable salaries and these bonuses lead to unsound banking and unsound sales of securities."

The committee then turned to individual security offerings by the National City Co. and singled out its $11,000,000 participation in a $15,000,000 offering in 1924 of Cuban Dominican Sugar Co. stock, which it obtained at 90 and sold at 97½. It was the purpose to obtain from Mr. Mitchell an admission that the public that bought the securities had a right to know the cost of them to the National City Co. as an indication of their "real value."

AVOIDED 1929 INCOME TAX

Reminded by Senator Brookhart that he had been told by at least a dozen people between the morning and afternoon sessions that their life savings had been wiped out with the drop in National City Bank shares, Mr. Mitchell replied:

"If you know of anyone who has suffered a greater loss in National City Bank stock than I have, then you know something that I don't know anything about."

He said he had bought 28,300 shares in 1928, planning to hold them temporarily and to help out in a difficult situation and to buoy up the market. He subsequently disposed of 10,000 shares and had about 53,300 left. For the balance of 18,300 shares, Mr. Mitchell said he paid between $375 and $380 per share.

These holdings were subsequently reduced again in a sale for tax purposes in which he disposed of some 18,000 shares to a member of his family. Subsequently, he bought it back. He did not name the rebuying price.

"How much of a loss did that enable you to show," asked Mr. ecora. "Wasn't it nearly $2,800,000?"
Mr. Mitchell replied it was between $2,700,000 and $2,800,000.
"That enabled you to avoid an income tow for income." Pecora.

"That enabled you to avoid an income tax for 1929, did it not?"
"Yes; the losses had been such that I didn't have it."

"It was just simply a sale of convenience to elude the tax, wasn't it?" asked Senator Brookhart.
"You can call it that," was the reply.

NATIONAL CITY BANK LENT ITS OFFICERS $2,400,000 TO SAVE STOCK IN SLUMP—NO INTEREST WAS CHARGED—AND ONLY 5 PER CENT HAS BEEN REPAID, RENTSCHLER TESTIFIES—CUSTOMERS "SOLD OUT"—LOANS WERE WRITTEN DOWN AND TRANSFERRED TO NATIONAL CITY CO.—JOINT DEALS DISCLOSED—AFFILIATE SOLD 1,950,000 SHARES OF BANK STOCK—SHARED IN COPPER STOCK

Washington, February 22.—Unsecured loans of $2,366,000 were made by the National City Bank to its own officers to enable them to cover open-market commitments in the bank's stock, following the market collapse of 1929, while at the same time the bank was selling out customers whose collateral did not cover their margins. Gordon S. Rentschler, president of the bank, admitted to-day at the continuation by the Senate Banking and Finance Committee of its inquiry into the stock market.

Subsequently the loans, only about 5 per cent of which were repaid, were written down to the bank and transferred to its affiliate, the National City Co.

Ferdinand Pecora, the committee's counsel, also brought out from the witness that in the three years ending 1930, the National City Co., borrowing from the bank, sold 1,950,000 shares of the bank's stock to the public for $650,000,000. Some of this stock was sold at $580, though its book value was between $60 and $70 and the dividend was $4.

Charles E. Mitchell, chairman of the boards of both institutions, recalled to the stand, testified as to details of joint operations in copper stock by the National City Co. and the bank, the transactions being financed by stockholders of the bank. The public bought 1,300,000 shares of Anaconda stock for more than $100 a share. Its present value is from $7 to $8 a share.

Another highlight in to-day's inquiry was that employees of the bank had been paying, through deductions from their salaries, for stock of the company bought in 1929 at $200 and $220 a share. They still owe more than the shrunken market value of the stock.

EXPLAINS LOANS TO OFFICERS

The fund of $2,400,000 for loans to officers without interest was established by the bank on November 13, 1929, within a fortnight after the stock-market crash, Mr. Rentschler told the committee, to "sustain the morale of the organization and to protect the officers in the existing emergency."

Not more than 5 per cent of these loans had been repaid to the Not more than 5 per cent of these loans had been repaid to the bank, some having been charged against its undivided profits accounts and the remainder written down and transferred to the National City Co. The bank president said the fund had been first suggested either by himself or by Charles E. Mitchell in the belief that it was essential to the welfare of the organization that its officers be protected in the period of financial stress.

He agreed with the comment by Mr. Pecora that the loans were made "principally" for covering commitments of its officers in the open market on National City Bank stock, although at the same time other of the bank's customers that had deposited collaterial with it were sold out.

laterial with it were sold out.

ONE HUNDRED OFFICERS PROTECTED

Mr. Rentschler testified that the unsecured loans had been made to probably 100 men, many of whom also shared in the management-fund bonus, of which Mr. Mitchell admitted yesterday he received $3,500,000 in three years.

[From the New York Times of Tuesday, February 28, 1933] BETTER BANKING

The resignation of Mr. Charles E. Mitchell was inevitable. banking institution, not even the next to the largest in the world, could afford even to appear to approve or condone the transaccould afford even to appear to approve or condone the transactions of which he was a guiding spirit and one of the beneficiaries. He maintains that they were misrepresented before the Senate committee, or misunderstood, but clearly perceiving the mischief that had been done, his very loyalty to the National City Bank impelled him to step out. The directors acted with promptness and without hesitation. They saw at once that no other course was possible in view of the surge of public opinion set in motion by the disclosures at Washington. It was not a case of personalities. The question was one of principle, of sound banking methods. These had been flagrantly violated and there was nothing for the directors to do but elect new officers and promise a new policy. In their public statement they pledge the was nothing for the directors to do but elect new olicers and promise a new policy. In their public statement they pledge the service of the bank to the domestic and foreign commerce and industry of the United States along the well-marked lines of commercial banking. Significant, too, is their undertaking to confine the activities of the National City Co. to Government, State, municipal, and corporate bonds of the highest character. This should mean an end to the mad speculation of banks in the rnis should mean an end to the mad speculation of banks in the years when nearly everybody was mad.

Almost at the same time Mr. Henry Ford and his son were entering the banking field in Detroit and announcing the standards which they propose to adopt and follow in their new business. These sound old-fashioned, yet come with a sense of reassurance to many who have suffered from new-fangled notions of banking. to many who have suffered from new-fangled notions of banking. "The bank's first function is to provide a place of safe deposit. * * * Bank loans should be made for productive and not speculative purposes." That last sharp line of division it is confessedly not always easy to draw. There is often a speculative element in even legitimate enterprises which a bank is asked to help finance. Not all productive loans are as safe as they seem at first. But there is all the difference in the world between assuming a slight risk in loaning money, and plunging deeply into wild speculation with the bank's own funds. The era when that sort of thing was too commonly done by banks is now closed in the United States, and what has been learned in the hard school of experience should prevent anyone wishing to reopen it for a of experience should prevent anyone wishing to reopen it for a long time to come.

Apart from scandals here and there in recent years, the banking system of the United States is notoriously defective. The record of bank failures during the past three years—even in the years before the crash of 1929—is humiliating and even shameful. State charters have been granted improvidently. Inexpert and incompetent men have been made directors and presidents of banks. The accumulated misfortunes and disasters which of banks. The accumulated misfortunes and disasters which have in consequence afflicted so many States, and provoked so widespread a distrust of our banking methods, have become a widespread a distrust of our banking methods, have become a powerful argument for the revision of our banking laws. It is now felt to be a crying necessity. In the effort partially to meet it, the Glass bill, with its many excellent provisions, though with some that are questionable, was passed by the Senate and is now awaiting action by the House. In the end we shall probably need other and perhaps more drastic statutes, Federal and State, if we are to remove from this country the reproach of having the worst banking system in the world.

Even the best one, however, will require men of the highest ability and utmost probity to manage it successfully. This, after all, is the chief moral to be drawn from the imprudences and irregularities which have been spread before the country by the Senate investigation, and have had so disturbing and unsettling Capable and conservative bankers can make even a bad an effect. Capable and conservative bankers can make even a bad system work, but if the established rules of sound banking practice are forgotten or openly violated, if deposits are not regarded as a sacred trust but as material for reckless speculation, if personal motives and a rush to get rich animate the management, there is no safety for anybody, and banks will fall into merited disrepute and distrust. That they have been fully realizing this, and have been striving for some time in every way to go back to the old and stable ways of banking, is one of the encouraging signs in these days of slow recovery. Frozen assets are not the greatest handicap of the banks. What is hurting them most is frozen confidence. Their first and imperative duty is to seek and to deserve to win back the trust of the public.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROPOSED OCEAN MAIL CONTRACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 375, submitted yesterday by Mr. Black, as follows:

Whereas specifications have been issued by the Postmaster General calling for bids on March 1 for an ocean mail contract from Philadelphia-Baltimore to Liverpool-Manchester, route No. 58 B, which involves the establishment of a new steamship service and the payment by the Government of a new steamsnip service and the payment by the Government of about $1,000,000 per annum for 10 years or $10,000,000 in mail money, and also involves the selling of vessels by the United States Lines Co. for a reported price of $500,000 each, which were recently purchased from the Shipping Board for $131,250 each; and

Whereas this proposed new steamship service competes with other American services already established at a great cost to the Government, which services also receive mail pay; and

Whereas it is understood this new line is to be operated by the International Mercantile Marine Co. (Inc.), which already re-ceives large subsidies from the Government while at the same time operating foreign-flag lines competing with American lines;

whereas it appears that there has not been and will not be sufficient time to fully investigate the economic necessity of such line or the propriety of granting a mail contract on March 1 next, and as the matter of ocean mail contracts is to be generally investigated by a committee of the Senate; and

Whereas the Merchant Fleet Corporation reported on February 6, 1933, that this steamship service is not justified: Now, therefore,

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to postpone the awarding of the said mail contract until the matter can be more fully investigated and the soundness of the proposition more completely determined from the standpoint of the Government's interest and all the facts and circumstances involved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the passage of the resolution?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there is objection to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President-

Mr. REED. I do not mean to take the floor, however, if the Senator from New York wishes to speak at this time.

Mr. COPELAND. I desire to speak at some time during the morning, but I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. REED. I shall be glad to have the Senator go ahead now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York. Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator from New York intended to occupy some moments in addressing the Senate, I defer, of course, to him. I desire to occupy a few moments.

Mr. COPELAND. I gladly yield to the Senator from

PROPOSED EMBARGO ON SHIPMENT OF ARMS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I take the liberty of occupying a few moments to bring to the attention of the Senate a subject which, if not carefully watched and prudently guarded, may involve the United States in the difficulty in which it found itself with Mexico in the conflicts that were occupying Mexico some years past, but more particularly the prospect of involving ourselves in a situation similar to that which came upon us in our relations to Germany when she was at war with England and France and we stood in the position of neutrals.

Mr. President, the morning papers bring us the cabled information, confirming that of yesterday, that the Government of Great Britain, through its proper agencies, has assumed to invite us to the consideration of placing an embargo against our own country in the matter of the transportation of arms to the contending forces of China and Japan.

Mr. President, I have no interest, sentimental or material, in behalf of any manufacturer of arms. Were it left to me I should frankly say, though I know I am at great variance | of the oriental lands, China or Japan, or with their secret with my eminent colleagues on both sides of this Chamber, that I would reduce all manufacture of arms having to do with war to a privilege only of the Government, in order that it could be watched and guarded, wherein it could not be used as an agency that could involve us in conflict by disclosing partiality in one direction and covert violation of the neutral laws in the other.

But I come to the point I wish to press upon the Senate.

I am exceedingly anxious that this Government shall not be induced by any form of advance through any other country, its agencies or its interests, to join any other country in any policy it assumes to express to us as the policy of that country respecting its relations with a foreign country; and in this case I advert to the matter of the embargo upon arms.

Mr. President, this is a place where complete frankness must be indulged. Our people must learn to know that while it may be true that England can find it agreeable to intimate some association with us and have us follow some lead she now expresses respecting the embargo on arms as to China and Japan, let us not forget that during the last year and a half England has already supplied both the countries of China and Japan, wherever possible, with all the arms and munitions her people desired and could pay for, and, in addition to that, prepared for further contributions of arms to these countries by laying down, in the behalf of Japan and China, one or the other or both, such preliminary machinery as made a substantial basis for the manufacture by the countries of either China or Japan, or both, of such munitions of war as may be necessary for those countries in the present engagement.

Mr. President, the United States is assumed, under our statutes, to be neutral, and that neutrality is to be preserved. I am particularly attracted by the observations of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] in calling attention to neutrality as a policy of our Government. But the very moment this United States blunders again along the route on which she blundered unhappily through being deceived. in the misconception of a friendship that was really an enmity, and allows herself to be directed by some other country as to the foreign policy this America shall adopt, she forsakes her position of advantage, her influential attitude, her secure and sure rock on which she stands as a separate nation of power in neutrality and in influence.

The attitude of the United States to-day must be this, that she is opposed to war as a policy of any nation, that she seeks peace by every prospect that can be invoked through or by any nation. But she has learned the lesson that while she does not desire that her life shall be one alone, to walk the road of nations without company or companionship, and in no wise, sir, seeks such isolation as makes her a stranger to the needs of a people or of mankind, she must now realize that the attempts of the past to join with other nations upon the theory that she is entering a copartnership that makes for peace and concord led her into conflict so serious of nature as to involve her in what appears to be the loss of twenty-five billions of money, 200,000 of her sons, with 200,000 more of them crawling through the spaces of nature in her land with their hands held out piteously and their voices moaning "Charity."

Mr. President, this is, I may say, in behalf of my own view the moment now when we should with great prudence allow nothing that should involve the coming administration, or that which is the present administration, to enter into any of these seductive alliances suggested, for whatever reason we need not pause at this moment to wholly determine, but let America keep her place, carrying out her policies separately, under the law, as prescribed in her statutes, in executing the policies as declared in her neutrality, and protecting her own existence in the trade her citizens have a right to enjoy. But at a time like this, when, in the Philippine Islands, there are vast millions of property which, belonging to the United States and thousands of American citizens, can be made the subject of an immediate assault in the event of our giving any cause for grievance to any one ally, Russia, joining one or the other, we would invite to ourselves a condition of conflict which we could not avoid. but which, in its end, would be one of such serious embarrassment and possibly of such very wide extent in its dangers that none on this floor could correctly depict its possibilities for the present, or its dangers for the future.

Therefore, Mr. President, at this moment allowed me. I desire to say, so far as my voice may reach, that America has learned the lesson that her real course at this present time must be the fulfillment of her own laws, by herself, to carry out her own policy according to the spirit of her institutions, the sentiment of peace in the heart of the American, but, above all else, sir, the preservation of the principles of the Government of the United States. It will neither enter, as I would not allow were I privileged to be the guard and the guide, with any people or any nation anywhere, where the voice would be permitted to guide us by their vote of numerical strength, 1, 2, or 3, nor embarrass us by the entrance into our counsels upon the great questions now before us, particularly our relations with Asia.

One final word. The President elect of the United States, we gather from the public press, has, through his representatives-prospective members of the Cabinet-entered into appropriate conferences with those who speak on the question of trade and the future commercial relations between our land and the lands for which these representatives speak. Sir, such conferences should go on without interruption. They should go to the extent the incoming administration feel is justified, and we should aid the present administration to the full extent that is necessary in any policy it undertakes that is wholly and strictly American. But wherever a movement shall be initiated by foreign lands or foreign interests to involve us again in an attempt of communion with other nations in executing what appears to be the suggested policy for peace to humanity, let us not forget that these were the same pretenses of some years past, by the same sources, which finally led us into a condition of maze and embarrassment from which we can not live long enough in the present generation ever to escape. Nor should we embarrass the administration now coming into power, or the one that is presently engaged, by repeating the blunders of the yesterdays that cost us so seriously, and will ever continue to involve us so greatly, in the coming days of the to-morrow.

America does not ask that she shall walk the world pathways alone. She only seeks that she shall deal in behalf of her own people, as America, uninfluenced and undirected by the pretenses, however specious and false, as they have shown themselves in the past, that we may not repeat the unhappy tragedies of the yesterdays.

I beg to say, sir, I only speak that we may stand to-day and give the world to understand that now we are ready to stand to-morrow on the policy of America, and for her people, that policy that shall be the American policy, often expressed-peace to all the world, happiness to all mankind, but complete and independent justice to the United States.

OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there is no more appropriate time, I think, to say what I have in my mind than now. Following the eloquent address of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] it may not be out of place to mention what I desired to say a few moments ago. What I have to say is appropriate, too, because the pending matter is the resolution of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] relating to our shipping. .

Mr. President, it is a matter of great concern to us who have been particularly interested in the shipping problems of America to find what really is the attitude of Great Britain toward our efforts to build up American shipping. Some weeks ago, in reply to questions of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson], I brought to the attention of the Senate what is being done by the British regarding the oncoming economic conference. The British Chamber of Shipping has made every effort to pledge in advance the delegates to the world economic conference to be called pretty soon. It is the endeavor of British shipping interests to defeat our efforts in the United States to build up American shipping.

We have not always been quite patient with the Shipping Board. Sometimes we have been quite critical of that board. But I am glad to report that in this particular matter, certainly there has been great alertness on the part of the board. The Shipping Board has undertaken to discourage the State Department from including in the agenda of the coming conference any reference to shipping.

Mr. President, under date of January 11, 1933, the acting Secretary of State, replying to a letter of the Shipping Board, said that, so far as he could judge at that writing, "There was no intention of putting this question upon the agenda." That was very encouraging.

I can not see, for the life of me, that a matter which is purely local, which has to do with our own shipping, and the relationship of our country to shipping, should be made a matter of debate in the forthcoming economic conference. As a matter of fact, so far as I can see, the British are attempting to put everything possible into the agenda, in order that they may have trading material when it comes to the question of dealing with the international debts.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to permit me to make a motion?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13724, the Navy Department appropriation bill, and that it be given immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield for that purpose?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will state it.

Mr. BLACK. Can a Senator hold the floor while he yields to another Senator to make a motion to take up another matter, and continue to hold the floor thereafter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair just asked the Senator from New York whether he yielded for that purpose.

Mr. BLACK. Do I understand the Chair to hold that the Senator from New York has a right to determine for what purpose he shall yield the floor and that the Chair holds that the Senator has a right to yield the floor for the making of a motion? Does the Chair hold that would prevent some one else getting the floor to discuss the motion or for some other purpose?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from New York has the floor until he yields it. The Chair asked whether he yielded for this purpose.

Mr. BLACK. I object to his yielding for that purpose. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not within the province of the Senator to object. Does the Senator from New York yield for the purpose suggested by the Senator from California?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am very much interested in the observations of the Senator from New York, but we are all directly interested in the passage of the appropriation bill. I do not think it would take long to consider it and when it is concluded I shall be very glad to have the Senator from New York resume his remarks and I shall pay very respectful attention to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New York for his protection that if he yields for this purpose he loses the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, is not the whole matter entirely within the control of the Chair? While it is obviously true that if the Senator from New York yields for the motion he yields the floor, it is within the power of the Chair to recognize him as soon as the motion has been disposed of, and he may then resume his observations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Provided he obtains the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We are entering a situation here where I conceive that a good deal of time is liable to be wasted. I am going to submit a request which I feel sure will be granted. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, which is the resolution of the Senator from Alabama, be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Navy Department appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state that there is no unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The hour of 1 o'clock having passed and the resolution being under consideration it takes the status of unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state that it is not the unfinished business. It is the pending business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that it be in order to proceed with the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Alabama, that the resolution be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Navy Department appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That request is in order. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I want to suggest to my leader that the motion which the Senator from Alabama desires to present for consideration must receive consideration to-day to have any effect whatever. If I understand the purpose of the Senator from Arkansas, it is to displace it by placing before the Senate the Navy Department appropriation bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I did not think it necessary to explain to one of the experience of the Senator from Utah that if my request is granted—

Mr. KING. I do not ask the Senator to explain anything to me.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then the Senator from Alabama at any time can bring his resolution back before the Senate by a simple demand for the regular order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.
Mr. KING. Is not the resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama now the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires a vote of the Senate or unanimous consent to make it the unfinished business. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, it is perfectly obvious that with the number of Senators opposed to the resolution of the Senator from Alabama his resolution can not be passed to-day. To keep it before the Senate merely postpones the consideration of vital appropriation bills and wastes one of the four remaining legislative days of the session. We would waste 25 per cent of our effective time by going on with the resolution, which a number of Senators are determined shall not pass.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Would the Senator object to placing in the RECORD the names of those Senators? I have heard of only one, the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. Doubtless others will put their own names in the RECORD.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator states there are several others, and I think we are entitled to know who they are.

Mr. REED. The Senator had better make inquiry as I did and find out for himself. I am not going to make announcements of that nature for other Senators. Therefore, I am obliged to object to the request of the Senator from Arkansas.

still has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York still has the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama and that we take a vote upon the same at 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. I object.

Mr. KING. I move that we proceed to the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, that motion is not

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the resolution is already before the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. In the interest of good government and of necessary legislation, may I make the suggestion that the pending resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama be temporarily laid aside, that we take up for consideration the Navy Department appropriation bill, and that upon the conclusion of its consideration we resume the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. How can there be any objection to

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object. if the Senator will eliminate one statement in his request, that upon the conclusion of the consideration of the appropriation bill the resolution shall be taken up. I shall not object. But I desire to state to the Senator now, in order that it may appear in the RECORD, that the question has been brought up by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] that important legislation should not be laid aside. I desire to state to the Senate that, in my judgment, if the contract is made, it will constitute the perpetration of a gross and outrageous and corrupt fraud. If there is anything more important than the prevention of the perpetration of a $10,000,000 fraud in this country on the part of those who are in power for only a few days more, then I do not so understand it.

I do not object to the request of the Senator from California if he will eliminate the statement that we wait until the appropriation bill is disposed of, because I am convinced that there are those here who will object and who will use that bill as a means to filibuster and prevent action on my

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the resolution is to be acted upon and to have any effect, it is necessary that it should be disposed of before to-morrow. It is directed at contemplated action by the Post Office Department which it is expected will be taken to-morrow unless some deterring influence is exerted. It does seem to me that Senators ought not to take advantage of the situation which exists here to prevent an expression of opinion by the Senate on the subject matter of the resolution.

It happens that almost at the end of every session of the Congress, particularly a short session, some one seeks to avail himself of the rule of unlimited debate in order to prevent decision touching legislation. I do not believe we are justified in taking the rest of the day or in debating until midnight to-night irrelevant subjects in order to prevent the Senate from registering its will touching this resolution.

The Senator from Alabama has made a statement which is significant. He read into the RECORD yesterday statements which tend to show that there is some mysterious

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the Senator from New York | influence being exerted hastily to dispose of these contracts. It is an astonishing thing that just two or three days before a new national administration is to take the reins of government an administration which has been in power for eight years should speed up contracts that are under suspicion. It is astonishing that agencies here should lend themselves to the prevention of action which the Senate has a right to take. If a filibuster against this resolution arises, everyone knows that there can be no expression of the opinion or the will of the Senate until after the contracts under suspicion have been signed, sealed, and delivered, and the new administration will be handicapped by the assertion and contention that we can not escape because we are bound by the letter of the contract. What is the haste about the matter? Why should the Post Office Department serve notice that if it is to be done it should be done quickly?-

If 'tis done, when 'tis done, 'twere well 'twere done quickly.

Why do they assert that if these contracts are not made on the 1st of March, three days before the new President takes the oath of office, they probably will not be made at all? Why do Senators insist upon maintaining a situation under which those contracts will be made and the new administration handicapped?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I hold in my hand a statement that $250,000 of stock will be subscribed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., $125,000 by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., $125,000 by the Reading Co., and that the International Mercantile Marine will subscribe to some of the stock through selling ships for three or four times what they were bought for from the Shipping Board.

I desire to call the Senator's attention further to the fact, in line with the statement which has just been made by the Senator from New York, that this company is interested in foreign steamships. This company plies under foreign flags. It is much interested in bringing about this contract, which it is said could not be forced onto the public under the new administration.

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield to me to answer a few of the statements which have been made about fraud?

Mr. COPELAND. I will yield to the Senator, and then I should like to complete the short speech that I want to make.

Mr. REED. I wish only to say that a great number of the statements made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] yesterday, as well as his statements to-day, not only his generalities that this contract is fraudulent but his circumstantial statements with regard to the ownership of this line, with regard to the interest of the International Mercantile Marine, with regard to the using of steamers that fly foreign flags, with regard to the price that is being paid by the new company, and with regard to the cost of the steamers to the old company are all, I am informed, erroneous, as in my own time I will attempt to demonstrate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield— Mr. REED. I have not the floor to yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator from New York yield? Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I hold in my hand a letter from the chairman of the Shipping Board which came from a representative of the interests from Philadelphia trying to put through this contract.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I renew my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I am not going to yield to anybody to make a speech; I am going to make my own speech, if I ever get a chance. It is a very unpleasant thing for a modest man to be in so conspicuous a position, but I will yield to the Senator from California, who is equally modest, to find out what he wants.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I renew my request that the resolution of the Senator from Alabama be temporarily laid aside and that we may proceed to the consideration of House bill 14724, making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I could not understand the request of the Senator from California.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the resolution of the Senator from Alabama be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed immediately to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BLACK. That is the entire request made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the entire request. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14724) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do want to say, because I think every Senator should know it and the country should know it, that the British are seeking to hamstring American shipping. I suppose for one who attempts to maintain some degree of dignity this is a rather positive statement to make. But, frankly, I am utterly out of patience with the efforts being made by British shipping to hamper the development of the American merchant marine. Yet, Mr. President, that is exactly what is being attempted by our cousins across the sea.

Mr. Walter Runciman, president of the board of trade and a member of the British cabinet, at the dinner of the Chamber of Shipping in London a few nights ago, poked fun at us. He said:

I have underestimated the extent of the American merchant marine, but I was thinking of those ships that were fit to trade.

It is stated:

Laughter swept the hall.

If we have no ships fit to trade, there is no reason why the British shipping interests should be distressed over our merchant marine. But really that must have been sardonic

It will be recalled, as I stated to the Senate some days ago, that Sir Alan Anderson, the head of the British Board of Trade for Shipping, pointed out how necessary it is that the subsidies and aids being given American shipping should cease. I read to the Senate on another occasion the resolutions adopted by the British Board of Trade for Shipping, describing in detail what efforts are to be made to interfere with our progress in the development of American shipping. Among other things, it is proposed that the British delegates to the forthcoming world economic conference should be instructed to get in contact with as many delegates as possible appointed by other countries, in order that a compact may be entered into to take action at the economic conference against the development of American shipping.

Mr. President, that is rather a positive statement, but it is borne out by the record.

As I attempted to show before this unpleasant parliamentary episode occurred, the American Department of State has failed, as I see it, to guard American rights and privileges in the forthcoming economic conference. I read, and I recall to the attention of the Senate, a quotation from a letter written by the Acting Secretary of State in January to the effect that there was no intention of putting the question of shipping upon the agenda.

A few days ago in the British Parliament Ramsay MacDonald said of the forthcoming conversations in the United States that it was expected all the questions upon the agenda of the economic conference would be discussed and considered. That was the statement of Ramsay MacDonald; and yet only a few days before that, those in this country who stand guard over American shipping were told there would be nothing upon the agenda relating to shipping. But what happened? As usual, the British statesmen were too smart for American statesmen, and we have one more defeat to

In the agenda for the monetary and economic conference which I hold in my hand I find on page 31, section 6, under the heading "Organization of Production and Trade," the following:

Some of us have felt that a greater freedom of international trade is not the sole remedy for the present crisis, that the crisis has revealed profound disorganization of production and distribution, and that, on this point also, joint action by the governments is necessary for the recovery of an economic system threatened by bankruptcy.

We take the view that concerted action by the governments in selected fields of production and trade may be effective, either in the direction of facilitating and regulating the efforts already made by certain classes of producers, or in alleviating the unfortunate results on the economic situation of interventions which are results by unduly parrow national considerations. prompted by unduly narrow national considerations.

Of course the reference there is to the "national considerations" of ours to develop our commerce and trade.

I will quote further from the agenda on page 33, under the heading "Transports." Listen to this:

Among the agreements to be considered, the conference might endeavor to ascertain whether it would not be possible to conclude agreements in connection with sea, land, or river transport which might improve the economic condition of the transport system, while considerably reducing charges which at present represent a heavy burden on the State budgets in the case of certain methods of transport.

In the case of shipping, the most urgent questions arise in con-nection with direct or indirect subsidies to national mercantile nection with direct or indirect subsidies to national incommarines and premiums on national shipbuilding. This policy has certainly contributed toward the creation and maintenance of a much greater tonnage than is required by existing international trade, so that in many countries shipping has become a burden on the national economy instead of a contribution to we agree with the meeting of shipowners recently held at the International Chamber of Commerce that it is impossible to return to sound conditions in the shipping industry so long as return to sound conditions in the shipping industry so long as the uneconomic policy of Government subsidies continues. This policy of excessive intervention requires to be checked by agreement between the governments. At the same time certain possibilities of agreement might be considered with regard to the scrapping of old tonnage, the utilization of existing tonnage, and the laying down of new ships.

Similarly, in the case of air traffic, the subsidies granted by States or other public bodies constitute a considerable portion of the receipts of air-traffic companies. In this sphere, as in that of shipping, subsidies render competition particularly burdensome. In the case of rail transport, at any rate on the European Continent, endeavors should be made to ascertain whether it is not possible to arrive at agreements setting definite limits to the indirect protection of national economic interests by means of not possible to arrive at agreements setting definite limits to the indirect protection of national economic interests by means of railway tariffs.

Lastly, any progress which may be made by the conference toward greater freedom in international trade should naturally lead to the adoption of a more liberal policy in respect of international transport by river and road, since the economic importance of these two methods of transport is constantly increasing.

Mr. President, it does not become a nation which for 400 years has subsidized its ships as Britain has-and I speak advisedly when I say "400 years"-it does not become a nation which has resorted during all these years to direct and indirect subsidies and aids to its shipping; it does not become that nation, in my judgment, to find fault with us because we have copied her policy and attempted to build up our shipping in the same manner.

I can not blame England for wishing to take every advantage she can of the rest of the world. If she desires to destroy the shipping of other nations in order that the shipping of England might prosper, of course, that is her national right; she can do that if she pleases. But, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am determined to do everything I can to preserve American shipping, and I am not satisfied, on my part, to have a conference held which will seek to interfere with the domestic policy of our country. I protest against it. I think the country ought to know that efforts are being made to accomplish one of two things, either to have "trading material" for use in the conference, so that in the concession of certain items they have put into the agenda we may be induced to cancel the war debts, or else that a deliberate effort is being made to destroy American shipping through the operations of this forthcoming conference.

When the American people realize what efforts are being made by foreign statesmen to interfere with our national progress, it is my opinion that the country will be aroused. It ought to be aroused. Why, in Heaven's name, should Americans sit quietly in their homes while other nations are seeking to take away from them trade and commerce?

We have attempted in America to build up our American shipping and have done so to the extent that now about one-third of our products are carried in American bottoms; but, in spite of the development of American shipping, we carry only 4 per cent of the shipping of the world while England in her turn carries 60 per cent of her own commerce in British bottoms, and carries 45 per cent of the shipping of the world.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. I wish the Senator would put into the Record the fact, however, that prior to the Civil War, when the Democrats had had control of this country for half a century or more, we carried between 83 and 87 per cent of all of our foreign trade in our bottoms, and that we were encroaching upon every other country, and our flag was found in every port wherever any other nation's flag was found and in many ports where other nations' flags were not found; but by unwise policies, subsidizing tariff policies, and so on, practiced by the Republican Party—and I do not want to be partisan—our shipping was largely driven from the seas.

I agree with the Senator that we should have a merchant marine; but I do believe that if we repeal many restrictive policies and adopt sound and rational measures, our flag will still continue to float upon the seven seas, and our ships will find entrance into every harbor of the world.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator is partially, if not entirely, right. In the days of the old clipper ships, America did carry a tremendous proportion of the world's commerce; but through methods which I have been attempting to describe, by mail subventions and subsidies, and by other governmental aid of British shipping, in that certain officers in the merchant marine were paid through the naval appropriations, in those various ways England has built up her tremendous shipping. She has put millions into her great Cunarders. I do not happen to have at this moment the figures at my command; but, if I remember correctly, more than twelve and a half millions went into the building of two ships of the Cunard Line.

By one method and another British shipping has been developed until to-day England controls the seas. She has not viewed with complacency the development of our shipping. She has not been happy to see these great vessels launched as they have been since the Jones-White Act was passed. There can be no doubt that by the operation of that great measure there has been developed an American merchant marine which is now a real factor in the carriage of commerce, not only for our country but for the world.

But, Mr. President, these smart Englishmen—and I admire them for their smartness—are determined that the progress of American shipping shall stop; they believe that the American merchant marine has become too formidable; and so they are striving, originally by secret diplomacy and now by a direct effort in the coming economic conference, to tear down what we have spent so many millions to develop.

Mr. President, are the citizens of this country to disregard the machinations of other countries? Are we to sit silent while efforts are being made to destroy our shipping and to put us once more at the mercy of foreign bottoms? Think what it means to the American manufacturer, what it means to agriculture in America, to have our own ships carry our products!

During the coal strike in England, when English bottoms were used to carry coal from the Continent to England because of the fact that their own mines were closed, American wheat was piled up everywhere in our country. The apples from the West and the Northwest, the fruits from New York and California, were without means of transport; and it was then that our Shipping Board took out from its reserve fleet and equipped vessels which made it possible to carry these American goods.

There are other times, however, different from that particular time, when we are wholly dependent upon our own resources. There are other times when we find out how uncomfortable it would be if we had no ships of our own. What would happen if a British ship had a cargo half British and half American and they were to go into a port in South America with a cargo of apples, we will say? Which part of that cargo would be unloaded first? You know perfectly well that it would be the British part, and that the market would be glutted before the American products were landed.

There can be no question that every industry in America has a direct interest in the American merchant marine. The merchant, the manufacturer, the farmer—all the citizens of America are interested.

Mr. President, those were some of the things which I had in my mind to say when we got into a parliamentary tangle. I have no desire to interfere with the debate on the Black resolution. I believe that under the administration of Mr. Farley, who is to be the Postmaster General, a careful study will be made of every mail contract. But I must say I am out of patience with our supineness, our willingness to submit to the encroachment upon our rights of the British or any other nation interested in shipping.

We want our shipping developed. We want our merchants and manufacturers and farmers to have American bottoms to carry these products; but we will not have them unless we are very alert during the next few weeks and watchful during the conversations with the brilliant foreign statesmen who are coming here, and in the proceedings of the economic conference. Unless we are alert, unless we recognize the danger and deal with it as we should, when that conference ends it will be like the ending of every other international gathering—that poor old Uncle Sam will have been robbed of all his possessions, or most of them.

Let us not put ourselves in the position of neglecting to protect American interests now and in the conference which will meet very soon.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a quorum call? I promised at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from New York to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the bill for action on the amendments.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 24, line 16, after the word "man," to strike out "or civil employee performing" and insert "detailed to the performance of," and in line 20, after the word "servant," to insert a comma and "or of any civil employee performing such work," so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the pay, allowances, or other expenses of any enlisted man detailed to the performance of service in the residence or quarters of an officer or officers on shore as a cook, waiter, or other work of a character performed by a household servant, or of any civil employee performing such work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 4, before the word "of," to strike out "593,479" and insert "895,499," so as to read:

Transportation and recruiting of naval personnel: For mileage and actual and necessary expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence as authorized by law to officers of the Navy while traveling under orders, including not to exceed $2,000 for the expenses of attendance at home and abroad, upon meetings of technical, professional, scientific, and other similar organizations, when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such attendance would be of benefit in the conduct of the work of the Navy Department; for mileage, at 5 cents per mile, to midshipmen entering the Naval Academy while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as midshipmen, and not more than $2,500 shall be available for transportation of midshipmen, including reimbursement of traveling expenses while traveling under orders after appointment as midshipmen; for actual traveling expenses of female nurses; for travel allowance or for transportation and subsistence as authorized by law of enlisted men upon discharge; transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen and applicants for enlistment at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentice seamen discharged on medical survey, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of sick or insane enlisted men and apprentice seamen and insane supernumerary patients to hospitals, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of sick or insane enlisted men and apprentice seamen and insane supernumerary patients to hospitals, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of sick or insane enlisted men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties; transportation of dependents of officers and enlisted men (not to exceed $450,000); expenses of funera

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General expenses, Marine Corps," on page 45, line 20, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$26,250" and insert "$35,-000," so as to read:

Not to exceed for transportation of troops and applicants for enlistment, including cash in lieu of ferriage and transfers en route; tollet kits for issue to recruits upon their first enlistment and other incidental expenses of the recruiting service; and including not to exceed $35,000 for transportation for dependents of officers and enlisted men, $381,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the committee also reported an amendment suggested by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], which is found on page 22 of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 22, line 2, after the numerals "$1,289,770," the committee report to strike out "(none of which shall be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by nonflying officers or observers except eight officers above the grade of lieutenant commander, to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy)," so as to read:

Pay of naval personnel: For pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders (not to exceed 908 officers of the Medical Corps, 186 officers of the Dental Corps, 556 officers of the Supply Corps, 33 officers of the Chaplain Corps, 233 officers of the Construction Corps, 109 officers of the Civil Engineer Corps, and 1,461 warrant and commissioned warrant officers: Provided, That if the number of warrant and commissioned warrant officers and officers in any staff corps holding commission on July 1, 1933, is in excess of the number herein stipulated, such excess officers may be retained in the Navy until the number is reduced to the limitations imposed by this act), pay—$27,786,490, including not to exceed $1,289,770 for increased pay for making aerial flights.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, that is an amendment suggested by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the amendment. I think I understand that it is for the purpose of making naval doctors aviators and giving them increased pay. If I am in error, I shall be glad to be advised.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a certain amount of money is appropriated for aviation. So let me say in the beginning that the total amount of the appropriation will not be changed. Nor will there be any brake upon its being spent. In other words, the Treasury will not be affected one way or the other.

Senators know very well that the accidents which happen in aviation are due either to defects in the machine or defects in the pilot. Physical disabilities have everything to do with accidents in flying.

The doctors of the Army and Navy have been striving for years to reduce accidents due to physical disabilities on the part of pilots. The Army has no such restriction as was placed in this bill originally. When we strike out the language on page 22, lines 2 to 6, we leave the Navy on exactly the same plane with the Army.

So far as the commanding officer finds it wise to do so, it is desirable that he shall use physicians in order that they may have the practical experience of those who make flights, and that they may be prepared then to recommend other tests or higher standards of physical perfection, so that the accidents in the air may be lessened.

Senators know that the condition of the eyes, the visual power, the muscular power of the eyes, the readiness with which the eyes accommodate themselves to varying distances, are factors which are involved. Senators know that the condition of the internal ear, of the spirit levels of the ear, which have to do with our sense of orientation and space, is a very important factor. Senators also know that the rapidity of the nerve impulses is very important in getting immediate action in emergencies.

The purpose of the amendment is to make it possible for the commanding officer to assign doctors to do the flying instead of the laymen of the Navy, as he may see fit. So I am sure my friend the Senator from Utah will see that there is no effort being made to spend more money and that there is no opportunity to make a saving by rejecting the amendment. On the other hand, the safety of those in the Navy who are engaged in aviation and, by reason of what the doctors determine, the safety of other pilots in aviation will be promoted by the adoption of the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the measure before us is passed, as undoubtedly it will be, I desire to submit a few observations dealing in a general way with the naval situation and the military expenditures of our Government. Before doing so I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments while I avert to the matter discussed by the able Senator from Illinois a few moments ago.

For several years, and particularly of late, we have indulged in rather harsh criticism of European Governments, particularly Great Britain, France, and Italy. There have been attributed to them and other countries ambitions and purposes unfriendly to the United States; and I believe that not infrequently Americans have misinterpreted the attitude of those countries toward our Government. History reveals that people are prone to be critical of each other, and wars and international controversies arouse resentments which time alone can efface. It was the hope of all peoples that following the World War there would come peace, and that instrumentalities would be set up to determine disputes that might arise among nations.

Statesmen and humanitarians, rich and poor alike, hoped for a new day and believed that the League of Nations and the instrumentalities which it provided would contribute to world peace. Nearly all nations adhered to the league, and the machinery which it created to settle international controversies has been invoked upon a number of occasions for the adjustment of international controversies. There are those who believe that if all nations, particularly the United States, had entered the league, the course of the world would have been different, and disputes which have arisen would have been prevented, and conflicts which have taken place would have been avoided.

I do not find occasion to denounce leading European nations for their recent approaches to the United States for the purpose of adjusting international disputes which it was feared might culminate in war. I see nothing sinister in the suggestion that nations should cooperate in order to promote amity and good will and to use their good offices in averting belligerent activities.

The United States not many years ago was associated with European Nations in a great conflict. There was a joint association in a common cause, and the nationals of those nations so associated, as well as the Nations of the Central Powers, following the war, believed that the time had come when international difficulties should not be settled by the sword, but that there should be adopted by civilized nations an international code of laws under which and through which international disputes might be settled. The immortal Grotius gave to the world the form and the spirit of international law and laid the foundations of a structure upon which succeeding generations might erect a temple of justice within which nations might meet and, in an orderly way, adjudicate controversies.

It was believed by many that the League of Nations would prove a factor in developing broader and more comprehensive juridical principles, or at least judicial institutions which would be promotive of international peace. I perceive no impropriety in some of our former associates seeking to cooperate with our Government in the settlement of incipient conflicts which, if not arrested, may develop into serious international disturbances.

I can not believe that the able Senator or others are condemning the United States for having become a belligerent in the World War. Nor can I believe that the officials of our Government should be condemned for having in that great contest made common cause with the Allies in seeking a successful issue of the enterprise in which they were engaged. And, Mr. President, I can not find ground for criticism of the present administration in its efforts to prevent a serious conflagration in the Orient.

Long before the open-door policy was announced by an eminent American Secretary of State, the United States believed that it had interests in the Pacific, and that it would not look with complacence upon aggressive policies of other powers which would mutilate a great nation and close its doors to the trade and commerce of the American people. The open-door policy was not intended to be an act of hostility or unfriendliness to any nation or any people. Before and after the so-called Boxer troubles many Americans visited China, many engaged in business and in educational and missionary activities. Treaties were negotiated between the United States and China, and they were believed to be advantageous to the peoples of both Governments.

Our Government also entered into treaty relations with Japan and important commercial dealings developed. Both Japan and China were associated with the United States and the allied nations in the joint enterprise to which I have referred, and following the World War and in the peace treaties which were negotiated our Government urged that the rights of China should not be invaded or injured by any nation.

Later at the Washington conference in 1922 the United States, the British Empire, France, and Japan entered into a treaty with respect to their rights in the region of the Pacific Ocean. In that treaty it was declared that if there should develop between either of the contracting parties a—Controversy arising out of any Pacific question and involving their rights which is not settled by diplomacy and is likely to effect the harmonious accord now happily existing between them, they shall invite the other contracting parties to a joint conference to which the whole subject will be referred for consideration and adjustment.

They further agreed that in the event of any threatened action they would—

Communicate with one another fully and frankly to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken jointly and separately to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.

This treaty called for cooperation, consultations, and joint action in matters affecting their interests in the Pacific.

Another treaty was entered into in 1922 known as the 9-power treaty. The high contracting parties to this treaty were the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Belgium, and Portugal. It was declared that the—Contracting parties desired to adopt a policy designed to stabilize conditions in the Far East, to safeguard the rights and interests of China, and to promote intercourse between China and the other powers upon the basis of equality and opportunity.

The signatories of the treaty agreed to-Respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China, and to provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government.

They further agreed to use their influence for the-Purpose of effectually establishing and maintaining the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations throughout the territory of China.

They also covenanted to refrain from taking advantage of conditions in China in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of subjects or citizens of friendly states. They further agreed that—

Whenever a situation arose which in the opinion of any one of them involves the application of the stipulations of the present treaty and renders desirable discussion of such application there shall be full and frank communication between the contracting powers concerned.

It was further agreed that in order that powers not signatory to the treaty were to be invited to adhere to the treaty, the United States was to make the necessary communications to such nonsignatory powers.

Senators will also recall the important part played by the United States in securing the general pact for the renunciation of war, commonly called the Kellogg-Briand pact. As I recall, more than 56 nations adhered to that treaty, among them most, if not all, of the European nations, also China and Japan. By that treaty the United States, and all other nations signatory to the pact, solemnly declared—* * that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another. * * *

They further agreed-

That the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means.

Baron Tanaka, the Japanese Minister of Foreign Affairs, speaking for his Government, declared that—

The Government of Japan sympathize warmly with the high and beneficent aims of the proposal now made by the United States, which they take to imply the entire abolition of the institution of war, and that they will be glad to render their most cordial cooperation toward the attainment of that end.

The representative of Japan further stated-

That the Japanese Government would be happy to collaborate with cordial good will in the discussions with the purpose of securing what they are persuaded is the common desire of all the peoples of the world, namely, the cessation of wars and the definite establishment among the nations of an era of permanent and universal peace.

These treaties, to which I have called attention, brought, or should have brought, the signatories thereto into closer relations, and imbued each and all of them with a desire to promote world peace and to prevent war. I think the proper interpretation of these treaties calls for consultation and conferences among the high contracting parties, with a view to averting conflicts and the removal of causes that would be provocative of animosities and belligerent activities.

It seems to me that it would not be in consonance with the letter and spirit of these treaties if and when clouds of distrust or suspicion arise or misunderstandings develop which threaten the peace and harmonious relations of any of the contracting parties, the signatories thereto took no step to meet the situation, and regarded with apathy and indifference movements that might eventuate in international controversies. Moreover it must not be forgotten that China and Japan and the European Nations, parties to the Versailles treaty, as well as other treaties, entered into obligations following the war which required them to settle their controversies without resort to war.

Articles 10, 11, 16, and others of the Versailles treaty contain covenants restrictive of war-like activities and military operations. Machinery was provided in the Versailles treaty to which resort was required to be made for the purpose of settling international disputes. Obligations rested upon officials and organizations created by the treaty to take immediate steps when international difficulties arose and the possibility of conflict and war developed to settle the same and thus prevent conflicts. Considering all these matters, it seems to me that the parties to these treaties to which I have referred were under solemn obligations to consult and confer together when there were manifestations of international disturbances or evidence of animosities and threatened conflicts that might result in disturbing the peace of the world.

The League of Nations took cognizance of the ominous clouds arising in the Orient. China and Japan were parties to the Versailles treaty, as well as to the 9-power treaty and the Kellogg-Briand pact. In my opinion, I think the officials of the League of Nations would have been derelict in their duty if they had declined or refused to take steps to prevent war between China and Japan.

Senators will recall that a commission of inquiry was appointed, upon an appeal by the representatives of the Chinese Government to the secretary general of the league, asking that the Secretary bring to the attention of the council the dispute between China and Japan. The appeal also requested that under article 11 of the covenant of the league, steps be taken to prevent the development of a situation endangering the peace of nations. Pursuant to this appeal a commission was appointed with the approval of both Governments. A member of this commission was Maj. Gen. Frank R. McCoy, of the United States. This commission of inquiry visited Manchuria, China, and Japan and submitted a report which is known as the Lytton report. Lord Lytton, as Senators know, was chairman of the commission.

It is not my purpose to discuss the merits of the controversy between China and Japan, although it is relevant to the matter which I am discussing, to state that the Lytton report finds Japan to be the aggressor in the Manchurian episode. For a number of months there have been armed conflicts between China and Japan in Manchuria and along the Great Wall of China. Japan is now engaged in a struggle to expel Chinese authority from the so-called Province of Jehol, contending that it is a part of Manchuria and subject to the control and authority of the so-called Navy" and larger appropriations are asked for the protec-Manchukuo government. China is resisting the military advances of Japan, and contends that both Jehol and Manchuria are Chinese territory.

The point I am attempting to make is that there is a conflict between these two Nations, parties to the Versailles treaty, the 9-power treaty, and the Kellogg-Briand pact. In view of this situation the League of Nations was under obligation to investigate the causes of the dispute and the reasons for the military activities and to attempt to settle the dispute between China and Japan by pacific means. The league conceived it to be its duty to call the attention of Japan to the provisions of the Versailles treaty and to require of Japan, as well as China, that they avail themselves of the instrumentalities provided by the league to settle their disputes and to refrain from engaging in war. In view of the fact that a number of the members of the league were also parties to the 9-power treaty, to which the United States was a party, it was eminently proper that the officials of the league should seek to cooperate with the United States for the purpose of preventing war between China and Japan. And I beg to say that, in my view, our Government not only acted prudently but wisely in its cooperative efforts with members of the league in calling Japan's attention to its obligations under treaties to which it and China were parties.

The League of Nations was interested in preserving peace and a duty rested upon it to avail itself of the provisions of the Versailles treaty to accomplish that result. The United States also, aside from its desire for world peace, was interested or should be interested in having the provisions of the Kellogg-Briand pact and the 9-power treaty observed.

In my opinion the policy pursued by President Hoover and Secretary Stimson in dealing with the Sino-Japanese question is sound and is to be commended. Aside from the two treaties to which our Government was a party, the United States is interested, as I have stated, in maintaining the open-door policy and in the protection of the rights of American citizens in that far-off land. Our Government is interested or should be interested in maintaining the letter and the spirit of the Kellogg-Briand pact and in attempting to infuse into international relations the spirit and philosophy of that important international treaty.

Secretary Stimson more than a year ago announced a doctrine to the effect that our Government would not recognize any situation, treaty, or arrangement brought about by means contrary to the Kellogg-Briand pact. That policy I know has been vigorously assailed and bitterly condemned by some, but it seems to me that in view of the important part taken by the United States in securing the Kellogg-Briand treaty, there is an obligation resting upon our Government to earnestly urge that the letter and spirit of the same be observed. That course does not mean that the United States should engage in war, but when signatories to that treaty resort to war in contravention of its terms, there is not only no impropriety, but indeed, as I see the situation, there is an obligation upon the signatories to the pact who are not violating its terms, to challenge the attention of those nations which it is alleged are doing so, and to urge that war having been renounced as a national policy, that disputes and controversies between disputing nations should be settled by pacific means.

It is no argument against the wisdom of the policy of the administration that its efforts to prevent a conflagration in the Orient have not been attended with the success which those who love peace and desire justice wish; but sooner or later, Mr. President, nations will learn that treaties may not be violated with impunity, and that temporary triumphs will have permanent disadvantages, and in the end justice and moral forces will ultimately dominate and prevail.

Mr. President, I now address myself to the naval bill which is under consideration. As I have indicated, this measure will promptly pass the Senate. No opposition to its passage will be effective. The situation in the Orient is used as an argument in favor of large appropriations for the Army and Navy. Strident cries are heard for what is called a "big States is menaced by any danger from invasion.

I have, upon a number of occasions, stated that the position of the United States makes it invulnerable to any attack either by land or by sea. Because of the strategic position of the United States, its immunity from attack, its prestige and power in the world, it should carry high the banner for world peace and reduction in armaments. A powerful nation, free from military ambitions or imperialistic designs, should take the lead in every movement for world peace, for international cooperation, and for the establishment of just and humane policies to guide the nations in their international relations.

This world ought not to be condemned forever to tread the bloody paths of war. With our philosophy and science and religious and spiritual concepts, there should be developed a force and power adequate to overcome the sinister and atavistic forces which have wrought such sorrow and devastation in the world.

Professor Giddings has suggested that there has been a portentious question, "Is it peace or is it war?" and Professor Wiggam has stated that if we should write upon the cover of every book, before the entrance to every school and church, before the door of every home and the cradle of every babe this black and terrifying question, "Is it peace or is it war?" you describe the precise situation of the human species on this globe.

I do not agree with the views of many of the so-called biologists that man, like wild animals, love war and must die tragic deaths. I can not believe that the civilizing forces which are entering into the arid lives of men and nations will not yield important results and produce races and peoples who will develop the arts of peace and advance to a high plane of moral and spiritual exultation.

What is needed to-day is a will to peace, not a will to war. The day of Nietzsche's philosophy must pass away and a new day illumined by a sublime faith that a Divine Providence rules in this world, and that the future has rich rewards for those who seek justice and righteousness and the unity and peace of the world.

I regret the efforts made by some to secure enormous appropriations greatly in excess of the needs of our country for military preparations. The economic situation calls for economy in State as well as in Federal Governments. Both political parties have pledged themselves to important reductions in governmental expenditures. Unfortunately there seems to be an indifference upon the part of representatives of both political parties to respond to pledges made. Daily measures are passed carrying enormous appropriations regardless of the condition of the Treasury or the promises for economies that have been made. There is much concern among thoughtful persons as to the results of extravagant and profligate expenditures. It is apparent that we may not continue these stupendous appropriations without reactions of a most unfavorable character. It would be a calamity, the full consequences of which can not be fully understood, if our Government, as well as State governments, should destroy the credits of the respective governments as a result of increased deficits flowing from enlarged expenditures.

Upon several occasions I have referred to the mounting costs of government and the increased appropriations in State and National Governments. The credit of the United States will be impaired if there shall be a continuation of expenditures without adequate steps to obtain revenues to meet expenditures. There may be, of course, capital investments which may be properly passed on to the next generation, but wisdom dictates prudence in taxation and caution and prudence in Government expenditures.

In my opinion the expenses since the war for military activities have been entirely too large. I might add that in 1914 the appropriations for the War Department were $194,-000,000 and for the Navy $144,000,000. During the war, of course, the appropriations for the Army and the Navy were materially increased, but after the war there should have been a return to peace-time military expenditures; but in 1923 the appropriations for the Army and the Navy aggretion of our country, although no one believes the United | gated $660,533,000, and in 1924 more than $620,000,000; in 1925 the appropriations for the Army and Navy totaled $680,000,000, and in 1926, $689,000,000. In 1927 the Army and Navy appropriations totaled $693,000,000, while in 1928 the amount was approximately $700,000,000. In 1929 the total appropriations for the Army and Navy amounted to $861,525,000. Then, as now, we were at peace with all the world and, as I have indicated, we had no enemies and were menaced by no foe.

In 1930, 1931, and 1932 these high levels of appropriation were maintained. In 1933 there was a slight reduction. The bill before us carries $327,583,000 for the Navy for the next fiscal year. Our military expenses, Mr. President, since the war have exceeded those of any other nation. My recollection is that for each of the years since the war our military expenditures have exceeded by some one hundred to two hundred million dollars those of any other nation in the world. In 1931 Great Britain's total appropriations for her military establishment was $535,000,000, Japan's $232,-000,000, France's $455,000,000, Italy's $259,000,000, Germany's $170,000,000, and Soviet Russia's $579,000,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROOKHART in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KING. I yield. Mr. FESS. That statement is a statement of fact, that it costs us more. But does that mean we have a larger personnel in the Navy or is it because we pay our personnel more?

Mr. KING. My recollection is that the personnel of Great Britain's navy is substantially the same as that of the United States. It is true that the pay of those in our Navy is greater than that of any other navy, but an examination of the appropriation bills for any number of years will demonstrate that a very large part of the naval appropriations are for purposes other than the payment of men in the service. There are approximately 30,000 civilian employees in the Navy, a number greatly in excess of any legitimate need. Millions of dollars are expended in maintaining unnecessary yards and docks and stations and naval bases. The overhead of the Navy Department, as well as of the War Department, consumes a very large percentage of the total appropriation. As the Senator knows, we have scores of Army posts and stations, the expenses of which are very great. There are duplications in the activities of the Army and the Navy which result in unnecessary expenses. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, if we had one department of national defense, combining the Army and the Navy, we would save tens of millions of dollars annually and make for efficiency and effectiveness in peace times, as well as in

I have upon several occasions introduced bills providing for the reorganization of the Army and the Navy and the consolidation of our so-called national defense. I should add that naval boards have recommended from time to time the abandonment of some of those extraneous and parasitic naval organizations. Recommendations have been made that a number of navy yards should be abandoned and branches of the service, unnecessary and extensive, either consolidated or abolished. But the people living where these yards and bases and parasitic growths are found protest with great vigor, and Congress overrules the Navy Department and perpetuates these excrescences which are such a burden upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I recognize that statement is also correct, and it is also true with respect to Army posts. It has been recommended over and over again, and yet we never do it. I am in sympathy with cutting down expenses. I wonder where we can cut in either the Army or the Navy and do it safely? That is what is disturbing me to-day.

Mr. KING. Many economies could be effected in all branches of the Government and tens of millions of dollars annually saved without interfering with the efficiency of the Government. I shall not take the time of the Senate to analyze the provisions of the bill and point out where, in my opinion, savings might be effected. I have, however, examined for years the naval appropriation bills, as well as other provisions calling for appropriations, and have sincerely believed that the appropriations for the Navy since the war have been from fifty to one hundred million dollars annually in excess of what was necessary.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit, while I have sympathy with what he is saying, I think he would agree with me that under the state of the world mind to-day it would not be very safe to reduce the Navy personnel or its equipment.

Mr. KING. I do not accept without qualification the generalization of my friend. As I have stated, Mr. President, the will to peace is necessary now, and the United States, because of its power and prestige and its superior financial strength, should take the lead in every movement for the reduction of military armaments. If the United States were a weak Nation; if it were beset by enemies; if its territory was an invitation to invasion from hostile enemies, then a different situation would be presented.

Our geographical position is different from that of France or Germany or Poland or Great Britain or Japan. France has been invaded by powerful foes and her people with or without reason are not free from fear of further invasions. I believe that most of the peoples of the world desire not only limitations of armaments but a reduction of military force almost to the limit of a police force. I do not believe that our country should disarm. Upon the contrary, I believe that we should have an up-to-date modern and scientific navy and that we should have an effective but small Army. Only a few years ago our Army consisted of 25,000 men and our naval expenditures were from one hundred to one hundred and forty million dollars annually. Now, as I have indicated our military expenditures are between seven and eight hundred million dollars annually, and under the terms of the London treaty negotiated by this administration we are authorized to expend (and many insist that we should live up to the authorization) approximately $1,000,000,000 for new naval craft before the end of 1936. In my opinion there are too many militarists in the United States; too many who are interested in military and naval propaganda.

I am inclined to believe that the manufacturers of munitions and ordnance and of all weapons and paraphernalia of war are not silent in these days, but welcome large appropriations in order that they may have contracts for the manufacture of war material. And there are those who, when a little cloud appears on the horizon, though it may be upon the other side of the globe, insist that our country is in danger, that the foe is at our door, and that hundreds of millions of dollars must be quickly expended in military

Mr. President, we should exert all the influence our country possesses to bring about a limitation of armaments and to excise from the hearts of men the fears, the jealousies, and apprehensions—and perhaps ambitions—with which they may be afflicted.

I admit the implication flowing from the Senator's question that the situation in the Orient is unsatisfactory. I admit that Japan is pursuing a course not generally approved in this and in other countries, and a course which many fear may start an oriental conflagration, the extent and consequences of which may not be foreseen.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Keeping in mind the efforts which were put forth to keep out of the World War—and no President ever worked harder than President Wilson did to avoid it—yet we went in, and I think we did a good thing. There is a possibility, I think, that such circumstances might arise in spite of all we can do, that with all our hatred for war and the determination never to go into war, we might be involved in spite of ourselves like we were in the World War.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I admit there is a possibility of an international conflict of such magnitude as that the United States might be drawn within the periphery of its influence, but I do not perceive that the oriental situation is fraught with the same difficulties, dangers, or problems that confronted the United States and other nations between 1914 and 1918. I do contend, however, Mr. President, that extensive propaganda in the United States for large military expenditures has a profound psychological effect, and is calculated to arouse animosities, fears, and resentments. The talk of war is like a firebrand thrown among the nations. The United States occupies a position of leadership, and its influence should be exerted to promote peace in the interest of world fellowship. We should conjure other nations to reduce their armaments; to observe with fidelity treaties which have been entered into.

Some will say that this is not the rôle which we should assume; that in so doing we are enmeshing ourselves in the affairs of other nations. I do not subscribe to this view. and repeat that in the confused and bewildered situation, largely resulting from the economic depression, leadership is needed and a call of the world to peace is far more necessary to-day than appeals for enormous appropriations for war. Senators will remember but a short time ago the President of the United States delivered a number of powerful addresses in which he directed attention to the enormous military burdens upon this and other countries. In eloquent terms he asked the nations that steps be taken to reduce armaments in the interest of world peace and to lift from the people burdens too heavy for them to bear. The Navy League, that vociferous and belligerent organization, charged the President with abysmal ignorance and employed the occasion to convince the people that our Navy was wholly inadequate for the safety of our country.

Mr. President, it is an annual occurrence when appropriation bills are to be prepared for the press of the country to be flooded with propaganda calculated to alarm the people because of the alleged inferiority of our naval establishment as compared with those of other great powers. In my opinion these statements come from the Navy League, retired admirals, from some members of the National Legislature, and from press rooms of the Navy League itself. The situation is now pictured by some of these same propagandists as more alarming than before and statements are widely disseminated that the Navy is far below the established limits of the London naval treaty and will, in the near future, rank fourth or fifth among the great naval powers. These statements, it appears, are given official sanction by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate through the medium of a document entitled "Navies of the World, Comparative Statistical Data," and another statement appearing in the House committee hearings of 1932. These statements, in my judgment, are calculated to create an erroneous opinion as to the strength of our Navy in comparison with the navies of the world.

The figures and tables in the document referred to are furnished by the Navy Department and are presumably so arranged as to bring every particle of pertinent information relating to the present and future strength of the five naval powers in ships, tonnage, personnel, and expenditures into relief for the benefit of Senators and laymen who have not the facilities of gathering data on these technical points. The public has a right to demand not only accurate information but an unbiased presentation of the facts, free from the taint of propaganda. The manner in which the data are presented, however, leads one to the conviction that they have been prepared for the purpose of showing the strongest possible case for a large building program. The document is designed to show that our Navy to-day is greatly inferior to the British Navy and barely on a par with the navy of Japan. It is designed to show, further, that by 1936, when the Washington-London naval treaties expire, the United States will be fourth or fifth among the naval powers of the world, far behind Great Britain and Japan, and inferior even to the French fleet. These conclusions are not borne out by a careful analysis of all the information available. They can only be established by the misuse of statistics, by the suppression of vital facts, and by the rigid application of age limits adopted in the Washington and London treaties, without reference to pertinent, necessary, and qualifying factors.

Table IV of the document to which I have referred purports to show the vessels under age on December 31, 1936, provided vessels now building and those appropriated for are completed. It shows the United States with only 60 vessels of all types and a total tonnage of 346,720, as compared with 130 vessels for the British Empire, 151 for Japan, 159 for France, and 121 for Italy. In total tonnage the United States, according to these figures will be slightly inferior to France and somewhat stronger than Italy. These statistics and tables are, in my opinion, inaccurate and misleading.

For instance, take capital ships. Let us examine carefully the figures for the United States in this table. The first obvious distortion is the complete omission of all battleships in the table submitted. On December 31, 1936, according to the figures thus presented, the United States will not have a single battleship under the age limit agreed upon in the Washington and London treaties. In those treaties the principal naval powers agreed to fix the age limit for capital ships at 20 years. At the present time the United States has a total of 15 capital ships of 455,400 tons. Eight of these capital ships, built between 1917 and 1923 and having a total tonnage of 251,600, will still be under the 20-year age limit on December 31, 1936.

Mr. President, I invite attention to another significant fact. At a naval conference held a short time ago Grandi, speaking for Italy, suggested the abolition of battleships, and, as I recall, submarines. My recollection is that France associated herself with Italy in that proposal, and Mr. Mac-Donald, speaking for Great Britain, indicated that his government would favor the abolition of submarines and a material reduction in the number of battleships. Furthermore. Great Britain suggested that the life of battleships should be prolonged for 25 or 30 years and that if future battleships were constructed they should not exceed 25,000 tons.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. REED. I am sure the Senator does not want to state the case incorrectly. It is true that Italy and France, having no battleships, propose that the other nations should abolish theirs. It is also true that Italy proposed the abolition of submarines, and that Great Britain and the United States joined with her in that suggestion, but it was resisted and defeated by France and Japan.

Mr. KING. My memory may be at fault, but I have a few documents with me which support the statement I have made. I know that in one of the preparatory naval conferences the position of Great Britain, France, and Italy was as I have indicated. I ask permission to insert in the RECORD at this point a few statements made by representatives of some of the governments to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so

Mr. KING. A press summary which was published as an official white paper by the British Government is as

The Government proposed that the number of capital ships for each signatory fixed by the Washington treaty should be reached within 18 months of the ratification of the treaty resulting from this conference instead of by 1936. It proposes that no replacement of existing ships should take place before the next conference in 1935 and that in the meantime the whole question of capital ships should be the subject of negotiation between the powers concerned. The Government will press for reduction, though, of course, without disturbing the Washington equilibrium. Its experts favor a reduction in size from 35,000 tons to 25,000 tons and of guns from 16 inches to 12 inches. They also favor a lengthening of the age from 20 to 26 years. The Government hopes that there will be an exchange of views on this subject during the conference. Indeed, it would wish to see an agreement by which battleships will in due time disappear altogether, as it considers them a very doubtful proposition in view of their size and cost and of the development of the efficacy of air and submarine

At the second plenary meeting of the Twelfth Ordinary Session of the Assembly of the League of Nations, on September 8, 1931, M. Dino Grandi stated, speaking for Italy,

* * Disarmament and arbitration, the rejection of all solutions based on force, and the relative equalizing of the military strength of states at the lowest possible level—that is not just a theory or dogmatic assertion. It lies at the root of the system which the league covenant has evolved with a view to the reduction of armaments; it corresponds essentially to real and pressing demands. Indeed, there is no problem of security distinct from disarmament and arbitration. * * *

He referred to the period preceding the war and later to the principle of conciliation and arbitration, the establishment of the Hague Tribunal and treaties based on the same principle as against the policy of armaments, and then

When we look back on those tragic happenings, we can hardly be surprised that our nations, which have barely emerged from a war, the consequence of which are still crippling them, should refuse to regard international justice as an adequate safeguard for the future.

Nor can we be surprised if the nations ask that international justice shall be safeguarded from the dangers attendant upon a policy of armaments. The covenant imposes upon us the duty of disarming, but the covenant does not possess the only claim to our consideration; there exist other claims, vaster still.

For the last 20 years Europe has been in a permanent state of unrest. Wars and revolutions have succeeded one another, the deaths must be reckoned in millions, national systems of economy have been overturned and the working classes are without em-have been overturned, and the working classes are without employment

Our civilization has been periodically saved in different directions by the genius of a few men and by the power of resistance and the spirit of sacrifice of the peoples, but the time has come to make a collective and concrete effort in the defense of our common heritage.

We have had further proof during the last few months of the need for closer cooperation between nations, and—what is more important—there has been cooperation between the nations which only a short time ago were in armed conflict with one another. They have settled their differences and decided to cooperate in the defense of our common civilization.

cooperate in the defense of our common civilization.

Fresh possibilities have been opened up by the negotiations between those countries, which do not differ in any respect from those envisaged by the league. All these means lead to the same common goal. In any case, work is being done, ideas are being clarified, and—let us be frank—the interests served by international solidarity are being proclaimed and defined. Our business now is to organize, to safeguard, and to clear the way, and that we can not do so long as our efforts at collective organization are paralyzed by the race for armaments.

In my Government's view disarmament is the starting point of many things; the putting into execution of the system of security and peace created by the covenant, the establishment of greater confidence between states, and the reestablishment of laws of economic integration which have suffered such ruthless violation.

That is the most urgent item in the league's program; that

That is the most urgent item in the league's program; that is the task most closely in keeping with the league's essential purpose.

The disarmament conference has been convened and will begin work on February 2. My observations may therefore appear superfluous; indeed, I hope that they will prove so. Naturally, they do not refer to the convening of the conference, but to the policy that may be adopted by the governments represented there, to the ideas they may bring to it, and to the methods they intend to follow. Now is the time for courage, moderation, and above all, common sense. Each one of us must realize the difficulties of the others, must state his own requirements frankly, limiting them to what is really essential, and must reduce his armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations, within the meaning of article 8 of the covenant. * * the meaning of article 8 of the covenant.

Again M. Dino Grandi, representing Italy, submitted an advanced program, one which, if adopted, will crown the conference with success. He said:

- * * My country, for its part, is therefore ready to accept an organic plan of quantitative limitations comprising: In respect of naval armaments:
- The simultaneous abolition of capital ships and submarines.

- 2. The abolition of aircraft carriers.

 In respect of land armaments:

 1. The abolition of heavy artillery of all kinds.

 2. The abolition of tanks of all kinds.

- In respect of air armaments:

 1. The abolition of bombing aircraft.

In general:

1. The abolition of all kinds of aggressive means of chemical and bacteriological warfare.

The revision of the laws of war so as to insure a more com-plete and effective protection of civilian populations.

I do not think it necessary to draw your attention to the fact I do not think it necessary to draw your attention to the lact that when once we have come to an agreement for the abolition of certain weapons of war which are the most powerful and the most deadly we should not only have taken a great step forward in the direction of disarmament but we should also be in a position to come more easily and more rapidly to an agreement on the quantitative reduction and limitation of other forms of armanagement.

I regret that I do not have a number of other statements with me which more fully indicate the position of Italy, France, Great Britain, and Japan as their positions were made known at the London conference and at some of the preparatory naval conferences to which I have referred. I do have with me, however, a statement made by Litvinov, speaking for the Soviet Government. He submitted the following program as a contribution of his Government to a policy of world disarmament:

* * The only infallible way to the solution of the problem of the organization of peace, the problem of the averting of war, the problem of assuring security to all nations, is general and total disarmament.

The idea of total disarmament is distinguished from all other The idea of total disarmament is distinguished from all other plans by its simplicity and by the ease with which it could be carried out and with which its realization could be controlled. Identical security and equality of conditions for all countries could only be arrived at by means of total disarmament. The soviet delegation has by no means come here merely to put before you yet another time its proposal for total and general disarmament, or to declare that we are determined to have complete disarmament or none at all. We have no illusions whatsoever as to the fate in store for our proposition. Our delegation is ready to armament or none at all. We have no illusions whatsoever as to the fate in store for our proposition. Our delegation is ready to discuss with you any proposals tending to reduce armaments; and the further such reduction goes the more readily will the soviet delegation take part in the work of the conference. Considering the draft convention drawn up by the preparatory commission, altogether inadequate, the soviet delegation will advocate here its own draft for the reduction of armaments, which, however, it regards merely as the first step toward total disarmament.

would remind the conference that the soviet delegation w the first to propose, in its second draft convention put before the preparatory commission, the complete destruction of the most aggressive types of armaments, including:

1. Tanks and superheavy long-range artillery.

2. Ships of upward of 10,000 tons displacement.

3. Naval artillery of over 12-inch caliber.

Aircraft carriers.

5. Military dirigibles.

6. Heavy bombing planes, all stock of air bombs, and any other means of destruction for use from airplanes.

7. All means and apparatus for chemical, incendiary, and bacteriological warfare

The soviet delegation proposed the complete prohibition of air bombing and not only beyond the limits of a definite area. It also proposed not merely to refrain from chemical warfare but actually from preparing for it in time of peace.

All these proposals remain in full force for the present conference.

I am empowered to declare here the readiness of the Soviet Union to disarm to the same extent and at the same rate to which the other powers may agree.

Unfortunately this proposal, as well as others submitted by him, were treated with more or less disdain by the representatives of other nations. In my opinion, our Government did not take the progressive stand for limitation of armaments, which would lead the world to disarmament, that its commanding position required.

Mr. President, I now call attention to the 12 capital ships built between 1917 and 1923, with a total tonnage of 251,600, which are under the 20-year age limit; they are the Mississippi, the New Mexico, the Idaho, the Tennessee, the California, the Maryland, the West Virginia, the Colorado. The newest of these, the Colorado and the West Virginia, will not reach the 20-year age limit until 1943, six years after the expiration of the London treaty. The others will reach the 20-year age limit between 1937 and 1941. What possible reason is there for not including these eight ships in this misleading table of vessels under age on December 31, 1936? Their inclusion in this table would add 251,600 tons to the total strength of the American Fleet. But for some purpose those figures were omitted, and there is presented to the American people a false picture in regard to the strength of the Navy.

The other seven capital ships now included in the American Fleet will reach the arbitrary 20-year age limit between now and the end of 1936. Technically, therefore, these ships will be "under age" at the end of 1936; but there is another very important factor which this document does not mention.

During the last few years Congress has appropriated $67,-159,000 for the modernization of these seven ships and for six other battleships, and I see in the bill before us a large appropriation for modernization of battleships. Incidentally, three of these other ships, modernized at a cost of $9,000,000, were scrapped or demilitarized under the London treaty. Beginning in 1923 the Navy Department began the study of modernization. As a result of this study a policy was established involving modernization of 13 of the 15 battleships in the fleet. Congress was told that this program, costing millions of dollars, was essential if the battleships in the fleet are to be kept efficient and up to date. Congress approved this program, and between 1925 and 1932 they appropriated approximately $80,000,000 for so-called modernization.

What was the purpose of this modernization? One purpose was obviously to add to the length of life of the ships. This whole question was explored by the House Subcommittee on Naval Appropriations in the Navy Department bill for 1932. Admiral Rock, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, testified before this committee that the modernization work would add from 10 to 15 years to the life of these vessels. Let me quote Admiral Rock's own words to the committee:

I think-

He said-

added length of life would be largely a military matter. think the life of the materiel would be increased from 10 to 15 years * * it will actually add to the life some 12 to 15 years, besides bringing them quite up to date from every angle. (Navy Department appropriation bill for 1932. Hearings before the subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations, p. 570.)

What does this testimony mean? It means, in the opinion of the technical experts of the Navy Department, that these ships which are listed as "obsolete"-for misleading purposes, I insist-will actually be efficient and up to date for another 12 to 15 years.

May I add at this point, Mr. President—quoting from memory only-a statement made by Mr. Hector Bywater, one of the great naval experts of the world, that our battleships, ship for ship and gun for gun, are superior to those of any other nation, and that by reason of our ships being oil burners, and many of them having heavier guns, we have a fleet equal to that of any other nation.

Obviously, with the oil burner's greater speed, our ships have an advantage over those that are slower and are coal burners; and Mr. Bywater calls attention to the great disparity in the speed of the ships, crediting to our Navy greater speed and therefore another factor of superiority.

Returning to what I was just observing, Mr. President, this testimony means that these ships will be included in the fleet for this length of time. The Navy Department, as we know, is opposed to abolishing battleships, which they still regard as the core of the fleet. The Navy Department has steadily refused to consider proposals for abolishing battleships at the recent international conferences. But if they are going to retain these ships, and if they are constantly asking Congress for money to modernize them, what valid reason have they for not including them in the table showing the strength of the American fleet?

In the strength of the American Navy on December 31 1936, therefore, we are certainly justified in including all of the 15 battleships on the lists to-day. The total tonnage of these ships is 455,400 tons-more than the total tonnage of all the vessels under age given in the document published by the Naval Committee. The failure to mention capital ships is certainly more than a minor omission; it is a deliberate suppression of the facts.

DESTROYERS

A similar analysis of the destroyer figures likewise reveals certain important omissions. According to Table IV the United States will have only 11 destroyers under the age limit fixed by the London treaty, on December 31, 1936. These are the vessels authorized a year or so ago, eight of which are now building. Now, in the London treaty the principal naval powers agreed to limit the age of destroyers laid down after 1919 to 16 years and those laid down before 1920 to 12 years. At the present time the United States has a larger number of destroyers than any other naval power—254 ships, totaling 270,910 tons. It is true that these ships were built during the World War or shortly after the armistice—a number of them, I might add, after the armistice—and that all of them will be over the technical age limit fixed in the London treaty.

Nevertheless, it is certainly a distortion of the truth to say that these vessels will be utterly useless in 1936. In the first place, no less than 97 of these destroyers were laid down after the armistice and completed between 1919 and 1922. I may add, from my own knowledge of the situation at that time, being then a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, that we had all the benefits obtained from German construction of submarines as well as Great Britain's work in that direction. That is true of the other ships that we constructed; and the naval craft laid down by the United States between the dates referred to were superior, I think, to any in the same categories of any of the other naval powers.

These 97 destroyers cost $181,000,000. They were not built in a few months, as were some of those rushed through during the World War. Practically all of them will be under 16 years of age in 1936. They have not been subjected to hard use since they were completed; a majority of them have not seen more than four or five years' service. While it is doubtless true that in design and equipment they are not comparable to the very latest modern destroyers, the fact remains that they do represent an important element in our fleet strength, and that they have been kept in condition for future use in case of emergency.

More important than this, however, 57 of our destroyers were reconditioned in 1930 at the urgent request of the Navy Department and at a cost of approximately $4,000,000. At the time these vessels were revamped both Admiral Rock and Admiral Hughes testified before the House Appropriations Committee that the efficient life of these ships would be extended by about 10 years. They did not say, of course, that their efficiency would be equal to that of new ships, but they did testify that their length of life in many respects would be greatly increased. Obviously, Congress would not appropriate $4,000,000 for the revamping of these destroyers if they thought that they would be useless within a few months. Admiral Rock and Admiral Hughes were quite emphatic in stating that the reconditioning would make these vessels efficient for an additional period of years. If we accept their estimate of 10 years and add it to the life of these destroyers, we will actually have at least 57 destroyers in addition to the 11 now authorized which will be efficient for combat use well beyond 1936. As a matter of fact, they will be efficient at least until 1940. The failure to mention these destroyers, like the failure to mention battleships, is certainly more than a minor omission. It is certainly fair to include at least these 57 vessels, with a tonnage of approximately 60,000 tons, to the effective strength of the American Navy in 1936.

It would be possible also to comment on the submarine strength of the American Navy in 1936, as shown in the table published by the Naval Affairs Committee, and to show that a large number of the submarines built since the war will still be fairly efficient after 1936. For example, no less than 40 submarines have been completed since 1922. As the age limit for submarines was fixed at only 13 years in the London treaty, however, the Committee on Naval Affairs is technically correct when it states that only 20 vessels with a total of 27,000 tons will be "under age" on December 31, 1936.

To sum up this analysis of our strength in 1936, it is quite apparent that the United States Fleet will not actually be as weak as the table submitted by the Naval Affairs Committee would indicate. In fact, if battleships which have been modernized or which are still under age in 1936 are included, and if the 57 destroyers which have been revamped are also included, the total tonnage of the American Fleet is more than twice as large as that shown in the table. The difference is clearly shown by the following comparison:

Vessels modernized or reconditioned and vessels under age on December 31, 1936

Category	Num- ber	Tons
Capital ships Aircraft carriers Cruisers A Cruisers B Destroyers (reconditioned) Destroyers (under age) Submarines	15 3 116 10 57 11 20	455, 400 79, 800 152, 850 70, 500 2 60, 000 16, 500 27, 070
Total	112	862, 120

¹ 2 additional authorized but not appropriated for and under terms of treaty may not be completed until 1937 and 1938.
² Approximately.

Mr. President, referring to the 57 destroyers mentioned in the above table, I desire to say that those have all been reconditioned, and in addition there are scores that have not been reconditioned, but many of which are available for service for several years.

These figures are exceedingly conservative. Naval vessels do not suddenly become useless or obsolete at the moment they reach a certain arbitrary age. And in case of necessity the United States will still have on the 31st day of December, 1936, a substantial additional tonnage in destroyers and submarines capable of putting to sea and performing useful functions. Nor is the comparison with other nations as alarming as the table of the Naval Affairs Committee would lead us to believe. In capital ships we will be the equal of Great Britain and superior to Japan; in 8-inch-gun cruisers, we will have a larger number and a larger tonnage than Great Britain.

We will have 16 of these cruisers, as compared with 12 for Japan and 7 for France and Italy. In 6-inch-gun cruisers we will be slightly inferior to both Great Britain and Japan. In destroyers, counting only the 57 reconditioned vessels, we will be the equal of Great Britain and Japan. In submarines we will be slightly inferior to Great Britain and considerably inferior to Japan and France, who have concentrated in ships of this category. For defensive purposes the American Fleet will, in fact, be superior to any other navy in our own home waters. But a navy built to the top limits of the London naval treaty will not be sufficient to permit a naval campaign in the Far East. By renouncing our right to build up and fortify new naval bases in the Pacific, at the Washington conference, the United States definitely renounced the possibility of an aggressive war against Japan. The United States has renounced any imperialistic ambition in the Far East. That ambition, if it ever existed, was finally renounced at the Washington conference, when we agreed to a limitation of navies which makes it impossible to exert naval power in Asiatic waters. If we want to repudiate that policy, the Washington and London naval treaty levels will be entirely inadequate, and we will have to prepare ourselves for a naval race more intensive and far more dangerous than any naval race in

In submarines we will be slightly inferior to Great Britain and inferior to France and Japan. I might add, Mr. President, that France and Italy have not availed themselves of the authority or privilege of constructing additional tons of capital ships permitted under the Washington treaty. They were permitted to maintain, as Senators will recall, a ratio of 1.87 to the other powers; that is to say, 5–5–3, Great Britain, the United States, and Japan, and 1.87 for France and 1.87 for Italy. They have not cared, as suggested by the able Senator from Pennsylvania, to construct | battleships. They have wiser men, I think, than some of our navalists. They perceive that with airplanes, submarines, and destroyers, and some of the modern developments in naval warfare, the battleship has lost some of its potency and power as an offensive and a defensive naval weapon. But the navalists in the United States, with a tenacity unparalleled, have clung to the battleship, and have until quite recently repelled the attempts which were made to develop submarines, airplanes, and airplane carriers, and to utilize torpedoes and other modern inventions which the World War and the developments since demonstrated to be most effective in naval warfare. That is the reason, in part at least, why France and Italy have declined to build battleships, but have built submarines, aircraft, and airplane carriers.

A navy built to the top limits of the London naval treaty would not be sufficient to permit a naval campaign in the Far East. By renouncing, at the Washington conference, our right to build up and fortify new naval bases in the Pacific, the United States definitely renounced the possibility of an aggressive war against oriental powers. The United States has renounced any imperialistic ambition in the Far East, and I sincerely hope in any part of the world. That ambition, if it ever existed, was finally renounced at the Washington conference, when we agreed to a limitation of navies—that is, of capital ships—which makes it impossible to exert naval power in Asiatic waters. If we want to repudiate that policy, the Washington and London naval treaty levels will be entirely inadequate, and we will have to prepare ourselves for a naval race more intensive, far more dangerous, than any naval race in the history of the world.

Mr. President, I regret that we have manifested, in the pending bill and in other naval and military bills which have been brought before Congress during the past 8 or 10 years, a militaristic spirit quite inconsistent with our professions and incompatible with the ambitions and aims and desires of the American people. I know that no motion to amend the bill, to modify it, to reduce items of appropriation would meet with approval in this body, and that may be said with respect to every appropriation bill reported.

We should economize, and economize more, and still further economize. We should endeavor to bring our expenditures within our income and at the same time use the powerful influence of this Nation to promote the cause of international peace and good will.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, there is a bill on the calendar to which I think there will be no opposition, and I desire to ask unanimous consent for its consideration and passage. It is House bill 14395, an act relating to the prescribing of medicinal liquors. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I regret that I can not consent at this moment. Let us proceed and finish the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. LONG. Would there be any objection, after the pending bill is disposed of, to having the measure to which I have referred taken up?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I would have no objection. Mr. LONG. Then I shall ask that we proceed to the consideration of the bill after we finish with the naval ap-

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from California that it is a unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LONG. There is no opposition to the bill. It could go through in a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs on page 22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is on engrossing the amendments and reading the bill a third time.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PRESCRIPTION OF MEDICINAL LIQUORS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14395. an act relating to the prescribing of medicinal liquors.

Mr. FRAZIER. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to present a conference report, on the War Department appropriation bill, which I think will lead to no discussion whatever.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 14, 25, 26, 34, and 42.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 13, 17, 19, 20, 28, 38, 39, 44, and 45; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$144,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended by inserting in lieu of the word "Government' in lines 4 and 5, page 12, of the engrossed bill, the following: "War Department"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,444,045"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "trucks, including station wagon types and trucks purchased in complete units for experimental purposes: Provided further, That, in addition to the foregoing, completely assembled and equipped motorpropelled trucks, including station-wagon types, may be purchased out of this appropriation, and other appropriations for the fiscal year 1934 under the Quartermaster Corps, which may be available for or on account of the maintenance of animals, or for or on account of the purchase, maintenance, and operation of animal-drawn equipment, or for or on account of rail transportation of persons and materials, the cost of any such vehicle so procured not to exceed $750, including the value of any vehicle exchanged"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,401,870"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,466,531"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: ": Provided further, That hereafter the provisions of section 5 of the act of July 16, 1914 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 78), shall be construed as applying to the Corps of Engineers as to the purchase of motorpropelled passenger-carrying vehicles"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 16, 18, 22, 23, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 36, 37, 40, and 41.

DAVID A. REED, HIRAM BINGHAM. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, FREDERICK STEIWER. Managers on the part of the Senate.

Ross A. Collins, W. C. WRIGHT, TILMAN B. PARKS, HENRY E. BARBOUR, FRANK CLAGUE, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the conferees on the Army appropriation bill have agreed to 28 amendments out of 45, and are in technical disagreement on 5 or 6 more. They report a disagreement on the other amendments, and I ask that the partial report be agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Pennsylvania would explain about these amendments. The Senate gets no information from the announcement of the Senator that there is an agreement on 28 amendments out of 45.

Mr. REED. That is quite correct. The principal amendment still in disagreement is the Couzens amendment, providing for an addition to the appropriation for training camps. As to that we report a disagreement. The other items on which we are still in disagreement are with regard to the retention of a colonel who is about to retire, employed in the office of the Director of the Budget. The House refuses to agree to that. The amendments which would make irregular reductions in the pay of retired officers are still in dispute. The item for transportation of personnel and the item regarding the Fort Benning Railroad are still in dispute. The item for the purchase of horses for the Army is in dispute. The increase made in the medical equipment for a new hospital is in dispute. Travel items in the Ordnance Department and in the seacoast defense are in dispute. We can not agree yet on the retention of the librarian at West Point with a proper salary. The use of the Medical Reserve Corps in the summer camps has not yet been agreed on. We have not yet agreed to increases which we made to authorize the purchase of headstones for veterans who died.

Mr. FRAZIER. This is only a partial report?

Mr. REED. That is all; and it is necessary to take this action in order to get a vote on the floor of the House on amendments like the Couzens amendment. We will message our agreement to the House and then to-morrow they will take a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the action of the House on certain amendments of the Senate to the agricultural appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 27, 1933.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14 to the bill (H. R. 13872) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:
": Provided, That hereafter in the administration of the Federal highway act and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, the first paragraph of section 9 of the act of November 9, 1921, shall not apply to publicly owned toll bridges or approaches thereto, constructed and operated by the highway department of any State, subject, however, to the condition that all tolls received from the operation of any such bridge, less the actual cost of operation and maintenance shall be applied to the repayment of the cost of its construction, and where the cost of its construction shall have been repaid in full, such bridge thereafter shall be maintained and operated as a free bridge."

after shall be maintained and operated as a free bridge."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and concur therein.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this provision appertains solely to publicly owned toll bridges and provides that when the money for the bridge has been paid back it shall become a free bridge. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. May I say to the Senator from Louisiana that I desire to call up the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill.

Mr. LONG. That is privileged anyway.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask to take up the conference report. Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, do I understand that unanimous consent has been asked to take up the conference

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. Will it take very long? It is my understanding that it will take all day to-day and all day tomorrow.

Mr. SMOOT. As to that I can not say. I doubt that to be the case, but there is going to be some discussion on one

Mr. LONG. Unless I am required to yield under some rule of the Senate, I want to bring up the beer bill. It is not the regular beer bill, but it is the so-called apothecary's beer bill. It has been approved by unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee and has passed the House. It is a mere formality, and I was trying to get the Senate to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no particular objection to the bill, but I hope the Senator from Louisiana will not undertake to bring up a controversial proposition until we have finished with what is known as the Walcott-Hull bill. That is the bill which has for its purpose the granting of emergency aid to the agricultural interests of the country. We have had it up before. I think we can dispose of it within a reasonable time. I should very much like to see that measure disposed of first.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Louisiana that I think, after making some surveys, the probabilities are we can quickly dispose of the Hull-Walcott bill, and if it is to be done it ought to be done as quickly as possible so as to afford some opportunity to the House to consider the matter. The bill to which the Senator from Louisiana refers has passed the House, I understand.

Mr. LONG. Yes; and has been approved by the Judiciary Committee. It will not take three minutes to pass the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, it will take longer than that, because I shall object to it.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it will take longer than three minutes. Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator from Louisiana intend to move to take up his bill?

Mr. LONG. I think I have a right to move that we proceed to the consideration of the bill. It will not take more than three minutes. I do not see why we should not go ahead with it. Does the Senator from Alabama object?

Mr. BLACK. I shall not object to the consideration of the Senator's bill after my resolution has been disposed of.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Louisiana that when we have the Hull-Walcott bill out of the way I shall not oppose the taking up of his bill. I am perfectly willing to have it disposed of.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to suggest that the conference report which the Senator from Utah is trying to call up, while it is controversial, will not cause any unnecessary delay. If those who are opposed to the conference report are successful in defeating it, it will go back to conference again. We ought not to do that if we can help it, because it will have to be considered by the House. I would like to say to the Senator from Arkansas that, as a matter of fact, if we delay taking up the conference report until probably the last thing, that would be one of the arguments used for not agreeing to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thought the Senator from Utah had presented his conference report and, it having a privileged status, that we would proceed with it at once.

Mr. SMOOT. I have already asked that it be taken up. Mr. NORRIS. There is no intention on anybody's part to unnecessarily delay it, so far as I know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report was offered yesterday and read.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and I am now asking that it be laid before the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, that is a privileged matter? The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. BLACK. May I suggest to the Senator from Utah that I am anxious to join in getting the appropriation bills through the Senate? My judgment is that the proposed filibuster on my resolution is supported by very few Senators. I have only learned of one up to this time. I am speaking of the resolution with reference to preventing the perpetration of what I believe to be, if not a fraud, at least an outrage with reference to a contract which will be signed most likely to-morrow at 12 o'clock unless the Senate takes

If it were not for the fact that this matter will be taken up by the Postmaster General to-morrow at 12 o'clock and closed, I would not think of asking that we go ahead to discuss and dispose of the resolution now. There is $10,000,000 involved in the matter, besides loans requested by the shipping interests, according to the report which I have before me, of a considerable amount more. I can think of nothing more important at this time, with the questions that have come up, than that we should prevent this raid on the

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I can hardly conceive of the Postmaster General signing a contract under existing circumstances. If there is any fear that a thing of that kind would be done by the Postmaster General, just as he is going out of office, I do not see how anybody could object to insisting that the matter be held up until such time as the new Postmaster General comes into office.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no intention of delaying consideration of the resolution, but this is a conference report which has to go back to the House. The conferees on the part of the House positively and without hesitation said they would not yield as to the $280,000 increase made in the Senate. That will be discussed when the matter comes up. I hope the Senator will recognize that this has to go through the House and be brought back to the Senate before it can be finally disposed of.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that, but I would like to state further, that personally, if the Senate could by resolution absolutely prohibit the making of such a contract, I would believe it to be more important to pass the resolution than to pass the appropriation bill. We could take up the appropriation bill in the extra session. Unfortunately, we have only the power to express ourselves on the other matter. I may say to the Senate here and now, in order that those who are making the bids may be placed on noticeand there will be only one bid made under the circumstances—that they may just as well be placed on notice that if they succeed in pushing through the contract at this late hour there is a large group of Senators who will fight as long as it is possible to fight against any appropriation of one cent or one dime or one dollar to carry out such a contract executed under such circumstances.

I can not understand how it is humanly possible for anyone to object to the passage of the resolution when it is known that a new Postmaster General will come into office in a few days, when it is known that charges have been made and the evidence read here and that it is desired to put this thing through in this administration because they are afraid they can not do it under the next administration.

I want to serve notice now, and I want it to go as far as it can go, that I am not only speaking for myself but I am telling that which has been stated to me by various other Senators, that if by reason of the proposed filibuster on the part of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] or anybody else, the Postmaster General is enabled and sees fit to ride roughshod over the rights of the people of the country who have held that his administration ought to go out of power in two or three days, and if he executes such a contract three days before he goes out of office there will be a determined and vigorous effort made on the floor of the Senate, just as long as it is possible for us to continue it, to prevent the granting of the appropriation of a single dollar to carry out any such contract.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I share in the viewpoint expressed by the Senator from Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that a transcript of his remarks made in the last three minutes be prepared and sent by special messenger forthwith to the Postmaster General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent to take up the conference report.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I understood it was a privileged matter and that I could not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah can make the motion if anyone objects.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is objection I shall move to take

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that motion would not be debatable. Is there objection?

Mr. LONG. I object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of those who are opposing the resolution of the Senator from Alabama or the disposition of it whether they have any suggestion to make looking toward the disposition of the resolution before 12 o'clock midnight to-day?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I have been accused of conducting a filibuster against the resolution. I have not said a word in opposition to it. The attack has come from the proponents of the resolution.

Mr. BLACK. Did not the Senator make the statement that there were enough Senators to prevent the passage of the resolution during the remaining days of this session?

Mr. REED. I think if the facts were known, there are enough votes to defeat it.

Mr. BLACK. Then let us vote on it immediately.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I realize that the Senator and others interested are entitled to a fair opportunity to debate the resolution. The question is that the resolution has been pending several days and if it is not disposed of to-day, as I have already said during the debate, it will be fruitless to pass it at all.

Mr. REED. The Senator is mistaken. It was introduced just yesterday afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether he would agree to an arrangement by which, at the conclusion of the consideration of the conference report, the Senate shall continue the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] to its final disposition during the present calendar day?

Mr. REED. I would not want to agree to that, Mr. President. I want a chance some time to-day to state what the facts are. These people have been accused of fraud; they have been accused of making a corrupt bargain; by inference the Postmaster General is accused of being a participant of the corruption. The resolution begins with a lot of recitals, most of which are exactly contrary to the facts. This contract has been unanimously approved by the Shipping Board, including the Democratic members of that board. The recital in the resolution is that the Merchant Fleet Corporation reported this month that the steamship service is not justified. The fact is the Shipping Fleet Corporation reported exactly the contrary.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] has the floor.

Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator yield to me to read a letter from the Merchant Fleet Corporation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not yield any further.

Mr. BLACK. I have a letter from the Merchant Fleet Corporation saying that this service is not justifiable.

Mr. SMOOT. That will all come out in the discussion.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BLACK. I object to taking up the conference report. Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 14458. making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent offices, and so forth.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. NORRIS. It is debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has moved to proceed to the consideration of the conference report and under Rule XXVII that motion is not debatable.

Mr. BLACK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a second?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. With regard to what?

Mr. NORRIS. With regard to the so-called Black resolution.

Mr. REED. Regular order, Mr. President!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. BLACK. I ask for the yeas and nays. Mr. LONG. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand for the yeas and navs seconded?

The yeas and navs were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14458) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not desire to be, and I am not going to be, placed in the attitude of trying to defeat rapid action on any appropriation bill, but it is manifest that there is a desire on this floor not to consider this resolution. It is known, because I have in my hand here the advertisement, that this matter is going to be taken up by the Postmaster General to-morrow at 12 o'clock. It involves $10,000,000 of the money of the people of the United States. It is not to go to charity; it is not to go to help the unemployed; it is to go to help a part of the same group that have a strangle hold on the affairs of this Nation and who are largely responsible for the terrible conditions which exist throughout the country.

All one has to do in order to find out who has been drawing down the money for the shipping subsidies is to look at the names of the list of boards of directors and it will be found that, without fail, they go right back to the same New York interests which are typified by Mr. Mitchell, who testified a few days ago before a Senate committee; the same interests typified by Mr. Insull, who has fallen into disfavor with some of his own group because he happens to have been caught. Look at the list of directors and you will find they go right back to the Morgan interests and the Chase National Bank and the City National Bank, as I can show they go in this case.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator assert, of his knowledge, that J. P. Morgan & Co. or the Chase National Bank have anything to do with this transaction?

Mr. BLACK. I assert from the report of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the United States Senate on House bill 9699, the hearings having been held in 1932, that the following appear as directors of the International Mercantile Marine Co .-

Mr. REED. Will the Senator tell us what that company has to do with this transaction?

Mr. BLACK. I will read to the Senator from the statement by Mr. Horan, what they have to do with it.

First let me read, so that the Senator will know, that one of the directors is J. P. Morgan. That goes very straight to Mr. Morgan. Another one is C. H. Sabin, who is, I am informed, connected with the Guaranty Trust Co., a Morgan bank.

The Senator desires to know on what I base my statement that the International Mercantile Marine has anything to do with the transaction. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the president of the International Mercantile Marine is Mr. P. A. S. Franklin. Is there any question about that?

Mr. REED. I take it there is no question about that.

Mr. BLACK. All right. I have here in my hand a telegram from Mr. P. A. S. Franklin, sent to the United States Shipping Board in the interest of this particular contract. It is dated January 31, 1933, and reads:

Referring letter to you from Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. dated January 28, United States Lines—

Is there any question about the United States Lines being controlled by the International Mercantile Marine?

Mr. REED. I do not know that they are, Mr. President; but if the Senator states so, of his own knowledge, I am willing to admit it.

Mr. BLACK. I have the facts here in the report made to the committee, which I shall be glad to have the Senator look at. I will show the Senator what they have to do

Mr. REED. Let me ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. REED. Is it not true that the owner of these vessels will be the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Line?

Mr. BLACK. Yes: and let me show the Senator the connections of that company.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; go ahead. Mr. BLACK. I read further from the telegram:

Request approval and permission of the board to sell to the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. four merchant B boats for operright to call at Baltimore and Norfolk, and with the right to call at Manchester. The sale would be subject to the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. receiving a mail contract. The operations would be conducted by the Roosevelt Steamship Co.

That is another subsidiary of the International Mercantile

The terms of sale would be $500,000 for each ship payable as follows: $75,000 cash, $75,000 in preferred stock, and $350,000 in preferred mortgages. It is contemplated that the Shipping Board would release the United States Lines Co. for the amount of the mortgages, which would be assumed by the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. As this matter is urgent, would request hearing on this application with a view to furnishing further details as second as possible. soon as possible.

United States Lines Co., By P. A. S. Franklin, Chairman.

Now I will read a letter dated January 28 on the letterhead of the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. organization Executive Committee, addressed to Mr. T. V. O'Connor, chairman United States Shipping Board, signed by Mr. Hubert J. Horan. I presume there is no question about his having the right to send this letter, knowing what he was talking about, because he also appears in the hearings from which I read one or two excerpts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Did the Senator say something about the Roosevelt Steamship Co.?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is that the steamship company of which Archibald Roosevelt is one of the principal

Mr. BLACK. It is the steamship company with which Kermit Roosevelt is associated.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Are they both in that com-

Mr. BLACK. I do not find the name of Archibald Roosevelt, but I do find the name of Kermit Roosevelt.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How much of a subsidy do

Mr. BLACK. It is my information from what I have found in the report that the affiliated lines get greater subsidies from the United States Government than any other lines in the United States. If I am incorrect, I will ask the Senator from Tennessee to correct me.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is substantially correct. The subsidies paid them are about as large as those paid any organization.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BLACK. I yield. Mr. LONG. Did I understand that it is Kermit Roosevelt who is in on this subsidy?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. I was wondering why he made peace with the President elect the other day over some family differences.

Mr. BLACK. Now, Mr. President, let me read just a little further in order that there may be no question about who

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. May I ask one other question, if the Senator will yield for just a second?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is this Roosevelt line also connected with J. Pierpont Morgan?

Mr. BLACK. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is that the contract they have to get signed by midnight to-night?

Mr. BLACK. By 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Having shown the connection of Mr. Morgan, and I could show the connection of others in the Morgan interests and banks with this International Mercantile Marine Line, let me read now from this letter:

For your information-

Says Mr. Horan-

For your further information the sources of committed capital definitely subscribed, $500,000—cash as follows: $250,000, by the Pennsylvania Railroad. $125,000, by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. $125,000, by the Reading Co.

Now, I desire to call attention there to the fact that in the recent testimony taken at the hearings of the committee on the 5-day week, as the Senator from Nebraska will doubtless recall, we showed the relationship of these railroads to the Morgan interests and to the banks in New York. Now they are going further-

We are assured of additional capital of $100,000 from other urces. In addition, of course, the I. M. M.-Dollar-Dawson interests will have a stock interest of $300,000.

That answers the question: that shows about who is connected with it. It shows just as I stated in the beginning that the International Mercantile Marine Co. is one of those behind this transaction. It is shown further in the hearings that it will be operated by the Roosevelt Steamship Line—the Roosevelt Steamship Co. (Inc.)—the officers of which are: Chairman of the board, P. A. S. Franklin; president, Kermit Roosevelt; vice presidents, J. M. Franklin, Basil Harris, and G. F. Ravenel; treasurer, A. F. Finch; and secretary, A. P.

It is my recollection—and if I am incorrect I should like to have the Senator from Tennessee correct me, because he is very familiar with this subject—that the evidence taken last year showed that this ship subsidy getting organization paid its president $100,000 a year. I will ask the Senator from Tennessee whether that is correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct, Mr. President, so I am informed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to call the Senate's attention to another matter. There are 300,000 tons of shipping owned by the International Mercantile Marine and belonging to that organization that are flying the British flag, and it is a well-known fact that, in essence, it is a foreign steamship line. Yet it and its subsidiaries are drawing subsidies from the American Government, and it is under contract—and I shall be glad to read an excerpt from the contract, if the Senator desires—so far as its other lines are concerned, to turn the ships over to the British Government in the event of war.

I also call the Senator's attention to the fact that the contract itself can be found on page 353, and the following pages, of the hearings on the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill for 1933, and the evidence of Mr. Franklin may also be found on page—I will give it to the Senator in just a moment-

Mr. BLACK. It is on page 1099.

Mr. McKELLAR. Wait a moment; I will get it and be certain. Yes; it is on page 1099 and the following pages. The excuse is given that they are asking some modification of that contract. There was some kind of modification, but, to the best of my knowledge, the International Mercantile Marine is still under obligation to turn over its ships to the British Government in time of war.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLACK. I desire to yield first to the Senator from Pennsylvania. Before doing so, however, I want to add just one statement to what the Senator from Tennessee said.

It also appears on page 1103 of the hearings that the Senator from Tennessee asked this question of Mr. Keating, who is the attorney for the International Mercantile Marine. and who, as I recall-I shall look in a minute-appeared in the interest of this particular subsidy:

Senator McKellar. Brought down to its real meaning, it means, the meaning of that agreement is that you are not permitted to transfer these British ships without the consent of the British Government.

Mr. KEATING. That is it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. Two questions-

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the Senator from Pennsylvania starts, will he let me call attention to a further quotation from page 1103 of these hearings?

Senator McKellar. If you do that, the British hold control of these 38 ships, either way.

Mr. KEATING. We do not give up very much, Senator, in agreeing to that.

In other words, those 38 ships are under the original agreement, and are in duty bound to go to the British Government in the event of war; and we are subsidizing that very concern owning those ships!

Mr. GORE. Mr. President— Mr. BLACK. I yield first to the Senator from Pennsylvania. [A pause.] I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma, then.

Mr. GORE. I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he means to say that we are paying a subsidy out of the Treasury of the United States to an English steamship line.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Tennessee meant that the International Mercantile Marine has a number of ships, some of which are American and some of which are British, and that we are subsidizing those that are American, as I understand.

Mr. McKELLAR. And that a portion of these ships, 38 in number, are still under contract to be turned over by this company to the British Government in the event of war.

Mr. GORE. No subsidy is paid so far as the British ships are concerned?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; not to the British ships themselves, but the subsidy is turned over to this company, which owns all the ships.

Mr. BLACK. I call atention to the fact that that is the very company that I have just read will be greatly interested in this contract, and is urging that this contract be signed to-morrow.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. It is perfectly true, is it not, that these two ships which they are proposing to sell to the Philadelphia Steamship Co. will not be subject to call by the British Government?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. REED. It is perfectly true also that these two Philadelphia ships will fly the American flag. They are flying it now.

Mr. BLACK. I presume they will if they can get enough money out of the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly right.

Mr. REED. It is perfectly true that these are two old transports which had been flying the American flag for many years: is it not?

Mr. BLACK. And have been getting subsidies so large that it almost makes a man ashamed to read what they

Mr. REED. The Senator makes interesting answers, but they are not responsive.

Does the Senator think the fact that, in part payment for those two ships, this Philadelphia concern is going to give a small minority of its preferred stock, inculpates the Philadelphia concern with the fact that the International Mercantile Marine owns some British ships? Are we all guilty of all offenses because we buy these two ships-

Mr. BLACK. I do not intend to get away from the real subject; but I am going to answer that, and then I am going to call the attention of the Senator to the real issue.

Mr. REED. I wish the Senator would.

Mr. BLACK. In the first place, the International Mercantile Marine will be the controlling factor, because it will have a mortgage on the ships. That is shown in this letter. It will not only have a mortgage on the ships, but, according to my information, which may or may not be correct-I have not it here before me-the balance due under the mortgage will be for a greater amount than the ships were originally sold for by the Shipping Board.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BLACK. I yield. Mr. REED. The Senator made the statement yesterday that these ships were sold for $131,000. May I assure the Senator that his information was wholly incorrect.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator will recall that I had in the resolution that "it was said." I have that information, and the man who knows says he will swear to it; but that is not material here. The question here is this:

Mr. Brown is the Postmaster General of the Hoover administration. He will be such only until next Saturday. After that, a new administration comes in.

Mr. REED. And will the Senator tell us who will be Postmaster General then?

Mr. BLACK. Let me conclude my statement. Then I will yield to the Senator. I am not going to be led off from what is the real issue.

The statement has been put in the RECORD that evidence was given in the hearing before the Shipping Board that it was vitally essential to get this contract signed before Mr. Brown went out. Evidence has been put in here showing that there was a feverish haste, an unseemly anxiety, to dispose of this matter while Mr. Brown yet remains as Postmaster General.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BLACK. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee. Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that he can well understand how this is when we have it dinned in our ears, almost every time this matter comes up, that "We have a contract," "We have a contract," "We must stand by our contract." That is the reason why there is such anxiety to get this paper signed by the present Postmaster General, and that is why such feverish haste is being made here in the closing moments of the old administration to get something so that they can claim, "We have "We have a contract," "We must stand by a contract," a contract."

That is the cry of Senators on this floor. We ought not to permit this contract to be made; and if this contract is made under these circumstances, the Senate ought to go on record as being unwilling to stand by such a contract, because, in my judgment, from what the Senator from Alabama read yesterday of the proceedings concerning it, it will be a fraudulent contract if it is entered into.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senate believes in honesty, it will vote for the resolution.

Now let me read another thing they propose:

It is the hope of the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Line that the United States Shipping Board will allow the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. to borrow—

You will remember that the statement is made that these are not such excellent ships-to borrow 75 per cent of $120,000 per ship, or 75 per cent of $480,000—namely, $360,000—from the construction and loan fund of the United States Shipping Board. The Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. will pay in cash $120,000 for the reconstruction of the four ships.

They want to borrow, first, $480,000. That is a part of the application. After they have borrowed this money, and have put in their capital, and have an agreement for a $10,000,000 subsidy out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States, how much will the working capital of this huge million-dollar company be? The net working capital will be $180,000. They propose to borrow $480,000 from the Federal Government. They propose to get a contract for $10,000,000 of subsidies with a working capital of $180,000.

Mr. COPELAND and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from New York desires that I yield to him.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Alabama is so fair a man that he does not want to leave in the Senate a misunderstanding of the facts.

The International Mercantile Marine possessed itself years ago, before the war, of certain British vessels. It had an opportunity to sell these vessels, and on the personal request of President Wilson it did not dispose of them to British interests. It had an opportunity to sell at a time when there was great demand for bottoms, because during the war there was a great destruction of ships. So the International Mercantile Marine, of which Mr. Franklin was the head, had the opportunity to sell these British-flag vessels; and Mr. Wilson, then President, requested him not to do so, because they were needed to build up the American merchant marine or to build up American commerce. So, on President Wilson's request, the vessels were not sold.

Then as time passed, with the decline in the prosperity of the country and of the world, the International Mercantile Marine was not able to dispose of the ships which it very much desired to sell; and the only reason there are any British-flag ships in the International Mercantile Marine is because they can not get rid of them. The other vessels in that great concern are American-flag ships, and they are the ones which are receiving the mail subvention.

That is the fact, which I am sure no one here can dispute; and I know my friend's sense of fairness is such that having now learned what is the truth regarding it, he will not charge this concern with bad faith merely because they are so handicapped as to have these ships, which, Heaven knows, they would like to dispose of if they could find a purchaser.

Mr. BLACK. I have not charged them with bad faith. I stated—the statement came out—that they owned 38 foreign ships. That is not the question here. Here is the question:

There has been feverish activity to get a contract signed up before this administration goes out.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President— Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. If this company has invested $120,000 of its own money and borrowed $360,000 of the Government's money, can the Senator blame it for being feverishly anxious to get a new contract when the new contract gives it a million dollars a year for 10 years of Government money on an investment of just $120,000? If it gets a subsidy of only $500,000 a year for 10 years on a $120,000 investment, it is racketeering that would put Al Capone to shame.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. It is a fact, is it not, that this was all spread out in a public hearing on February 3 last, and that the only feverish haste that has appeared is the haste that has appeared in connection with the pending resolution, which was not introduced until last night?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct that the resolution was offered only yesterday. It would have been offered earlier if I had had the facts before yesterday. That is the only reason I did not offer it earlier, because I knew nothing about it; but when I learned about it I offered the resolution, and this is the question that must be answered by those who oppose this resolution:

If this is a genuine, bona fide, honest effort to obtain a genuine, bona fide, honest contract, there will be no desire on the part of anyone to keep it before Mr. Brown. What reason is there to think that Mr. Brown is the only public official who can be relied upon to sign up this contract?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there? Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator remember the touching consideration that Pennsylvania got from the last Democratic administration? Does not the Senator know full well that this contract never will be signed on any terms for any Philadelphia concern?

Mr. BLACK. I am inclined to think the Senator is correct; that this contract never will be signed by anybody but Brown under the terms under which it is offered, whether it comes from Philadelphia, New York, California, Alabama, or Utah. I am inclined to think that there is no hope that they could find another man in all of the United States before whom they would dare to march up and ask that he sign this contract. Yes; I agree with the Senator to this extent: I am sure it will not be signed when the new administration comes in. If the new administration permitted it to be signed, I am frank to say to the Senator that, in my judgment, it would forfeit the respect and the confidence of the people of the American Republic who placed it in power.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator realize that Mr. Brown had nothing to do with framing this contract?

Mr. BLACK. No; I do not.

Mr. REED. It was all worked up by the Shipping Board, and agreed to by Republicans and Democrats alike.

Mr. BLACK. I do not understand that it was all worked up by the Shipping Board. It was worked up by a lot of others besides the Shipping Board, and I think an investigation would show it. I am frank to say that I find in this hearing a statement that it was very unfortunately true that the Comptroller General had to pass upon it. I do not know why they were afraid of the Comptroller General, but it is stated that it is unfortunately true that he had to pass upon it. That statement was made by the Senator's secretary, according to the record.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the Senator a question for my own information. Are we to understand that if this contract is signed by to-morrow noon, these interests will receive a subsidy of $10,000,000 over a period of 10 years?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct, according to my informa-

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If that is true, then, these interests which would receive the subsidy are the very leaders of the so-called National Economy League.

Mr. BLACK. It is the same group that is trying to break down everything in the country that does not bow to the will of the Chase National Bank, the Morgan interests, the National City, and the others of that controlling group.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is the same group, is it not, I ask the Senator, which now would undertake to charge the depression to the disabled veterans of the United States?

Mr. BLACK. I think the Senator is correct. Let us not get away from the issue. Here is a proposal to get a contract for $10,000,000. That money does not grow on trees; it must come from the taxpayers.

Mr. REED. The Senator wants it spent at Muscle

Shoals, I suppose?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is very much interested in Muscle Shoals. He is interested in anything in the world except having portrayed before this country his attitude in standing here and trying to defeat a resolution which would prevent the signing of a contract until it could be fairly and honestly investigated by those who are not interested in | cessful business for 15 years. Then he proceeded to subthe result. I do not blame him for wanting to divert attention, but we will not divert it. We will talk about Muscle Shoals later. We are talking now about what the Senator

Here come some people before the Shipping Board, and they say, "Here is some money our group has not yet gotten out of the Treasury. We have left a little. Now, we admit that Mr. Mitchell did not know he was going to leave any in the pockets of the American people when he got through. We admit Mr. Morgan did not intend to leave any. We admit that we thought we would get everything everybody had but our subsidies."

When we trace them down we find that practically every one of them goes right back to the Chase National Bank, to the National City Bank, to the J. P. Morgan interests, to that group which has a stranglehold on the financial affairs of this country, which has brought us to the terrible situation where we must watch people starve in the midst of abundance and plenty. They thought, "Well, now, here is a little more. We might get $10,000,000. The pickings will not be so good when the new administration gets in, so we will go down, we will take a strong delegation down before the Shipping Board, we will take Congressmen and Senators and Senators' secretaries, and we will go down and tell them that we have to get this money while Mr. Brown is in."

Why is Mr. Brown the only person who would give it to them? Why is it that out of all of the United States it is thought he is the one man who could give it to them?

I invite those who doubt the close touch of Postmaster General Brown with these mail subsidies to read the hearings on House bill 9699, and study what happened with reference to the Seatrain contract. I invite them to find out how the strong hand of Mr. Brown was seen all along the devious and uncertain way wound by those seeking to extract money from the Federal Treasury by what appears to any fair-minded man who reads the evidence to be fraud and corruption.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Pennsylvania asked the Senator from Alabama a few moments ago about his delay in presenting this resolution. I want to say to the Senate that Mr. Brown came before the Committee on Appropriations, of which I happen to be a member, and, in his testimony, said there was no use taking steps now, that nothing was going to be done before March 4, when he would go out, that it was a matter for his successor, and not for him. So far as I am concerned, as one member of the committee, I did not believe Mr. Brown had the slightest intention of trying to effect any more contracts before he went out. It was only in the last day or two, when the Senator from Alabama told me that he was undertaking to put through a contract just in the closing hours of his administration of the Post Office Department, that I learned of it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, let us see. They go down before the committee and they say, "We have to get action now; we have to hurry up." They do not wait to write letters giving notice of the advertisement. According to information coming to me, this thing was so late, it was so difficult to get it out, that they sent out the notice of the advertisement by wire. Why was that? They did not even use the subsidized air mail. They sent it out by wire. Why was it? It was because they were being told here, "We must get it through before the new administration gets in. Our only chance is to get it through under Mr. Brown."

Who is this Mr. Brown? He is the same gentleman who defended the Seatrain contract before the committee, who admitted that it was not necessary to carry any mail, admitted that there was a contract sufficient to carry all the mail that had to be carried between this country and Cuba. who admitted in the evidence that there was a shipping interest using private capital that had been doing a suc-sidize another company represented by some of the same group which we find here, and proceeded to give them a contract, taking away other millions of the people's money.

Oh, the Morgan interests and the Roosevelt interests make a loud noise when we begin to talk about the salary of some employees, saying that what we need to do in order to balance the Budget is to cut everybody's salary. But they do not cut their own salaries. They do not cut their subsidies. They come in the last week of the expiring term of a repudiated administration, of a repudiated official, and attempt to get a contract signed up. Then we find, strange to say, unbelievable as it is, Members of the United States Senate who oppose waiting until there can be a fair, honest, and open investigation of the facts.

Let us take just a moment there. Let me read a letter of February 6 to the President of the Merchant Fleet Corporation, United States Shipping Board. Here is the statement made:

The following tabulation shows the amount of dry cargo moving during the fiscal years 1931 and 1932 from and to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Hampton Roads to Liverpool and Manchester.

From this tabulation it will be noted that the establishment of a direct Philadelphia, Liverpool, Manchester service is not justified.

What do we find? We find the telegraph wires being used. We find anxiety, feverish activity, to take away $10,000,000 that belongs to the taxpayers of this country, from their hard-earned money, and put it into the pockets of the same group that stands like a giant colossus in control of the financial affairs of this Nation, striking at the very life blood of the Republic, and they blindly permit conditions to continue of privilege to them, while millions of the people are in misery and destitution and want. Yet we find them so firmly entrenched that there is even an objection to letting the Senate vote on whether to approve Mr. Walter Brown's passing on this contract or not.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 6 o'clock the Senate proceed to vote on this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN. I object. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator, in all fairness to the Senator himself, that I do not know whether we will pass the appropriation bill by that time or not, and certainly the Senator does not want to ask us to proceed now to the consideration of the appropriation bill, and then, as soon as it is disposed of, vote on the resolution to which he refers.

Mr. BLACK. Is the Senator for this resolution or against it?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the first time I have heard it discussed. I have been in committee meetings and hearings, and I would not say offhand, without even reading the resolution, whether I would vote for it or against it.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator favor Mr. Brown? Mr. SMOOT. This is what I am for; I am for the appropriation bills. I am responsible, in part, for the passage of the bill I have in charge, and I want it passed. If it shall be that the Senate is not going to agree upon some one of the amendments in the bill, it will have to go back to conference again, and we have only a few days in which to pass the appropriation bills. I am partially responsible for the passage of the appropriation bills, and I am going to see that they are passed before any other legislation of the kind referred to interferes.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is also interested, as a Senator, in seeing that there be no signing of a $10,000,000 contract without giving time for consideration by disinterested authorities, and I feel sure that the Senator will not approve Mr. Brown. I can not believe that the Senator from Utah approves Mr. Brown signing a contract of that kind on March 1, and I would have thought, knowing the Senator's great record in this body over a long period of years, that he would have been the first to put the stamp of his disapproval on anything that had in it the slightest question or doubt.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if I felt that there was any doubt, if I knew it, as no doubt the Senator thinks he knows it, and had given any particular study to it, I should answer the Senator frankly; but I am sure he does not want me to give him an answer as to a thing I have not even considered. I can not do it.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has been here and has heard the evidence of an attempt to get the contract through during this administration. The Senator has been a part of this administration. Does the Senator want to put smut on the closing part of his administration by standing by and approving their blocking action which would prevent signature until an investigation could be made?

Mr. SMOOT. I want the Senator to understand that I am not attempting to block it in any way, shape, or form. I am trying to get action upon an appropriation bill.

· Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator vote for it?

Mr. SMOOT. There are other appropriation bills to come.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent that we vote right

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. I object. Mr. BLACK. I ask that we vote immediately after the disposition of the appropriation bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is unreasonable to ask that a question be disposed of without any chance on the part of those on the other side to explain their stand. I object.

Mr. BLACK. As to the statement that it is without any chance for anybody to argue it, the Senator knows better than that. The Senator knows he can get up and present his side of the question. The Senator knows he can take all the time he wants to take in attempting to prevent it.

Mr. President, of course I can do no more in connection with bringing this up than to continue to discuss it. The Senate has agreed to take up the other matter. I simply want the RECORD to show just what has occurred. I want it to show in order that the Postmaster General may know, when he puts his signature on the contract, as I assume he will do to-morrow, that the eyes of the country can see. I want these gentlemen who are conducting this movement, and who believe they are going to get a reward by getting through a contract by this method, to understand that they can get it signed up if they desire, but no individual and no government is bound by a fraudulent contract. This Government will not be bound by the contract any more than an individual would be bound under the same circumstances. Let Senators conduct their filibuster. Let them prevent a vote. Let them try to get the last expiring bonus which a discredited administration can give to Mr. Brown. They will not get it. Congress will not make an appropriation to carry out a contract which has followed such a tortuous and devious and uncertain course.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, I am interested in the matter under discussion, because it vitally affects the port of Baltimore in the State of Maryland. I have had some information given me on the subject, and I call upon the Senator from Alabama to tell me whether the information submitted is right or not.

As I understand it, his resolution provides that the Postmaster General be requested to postpone the awarding of the ocean mail contract from Philadelphia-Baltimore to Liverpool-Manchester, route No. 58-B-until the matter can be more fully investigated and the soundness of the proposition more completely determined from the stand-point of the Government's interest and all the facts and circumstances involved.

If this be a crooked contract, I certainly shall not vote for it, but my information leads me to believe the contrary, and it is that information which I desire to submit to the Senator from Alabama and to other Members of the Senate to ascertain whether it is right or whether it is wrong.

The whereas clauses leading up to the resolution, I am told, are obviously in error. In the first place, the most thorough investigation of the desirability of awarding such contracts has been made by a subcommittee on merchant marine consisting of representatives of the United States Shipping Board, of the United States Navy, the Department of Commerce, and the Post Office Department.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, does the Senator object to putting the names of those individuals in the RECORD?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I have not the names. The parent committee to which this subcommittee made its report, as I am further advised, consists of the Secretary of Commerce as chairman, the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster General, and the chairman of the United States Shipping Board. Those names, of course, the distinguished Senator from Alabama knows.

After investigating the desirability of an ocean mail contract on route No. 58-B, an advertisement was issued calling for bids for this contract and specifying that the boats must be 16-knot fast passenger boats, providing, in addition to carrying the mails, both passenger and freight service.

Whereas No. 2 of the resolution states that the proposed new steamship service competes with other American services already established. This is obviously in error, as there is no ocean mail line between Baltimore-Philadelphia and Liverpool-Manchester, and, so I am informed by the Post Office Department, there never has been.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to read to the Senator from the hearing where it was admitted it was in competition with a line from his own city.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I think that is a mistake, because the line now existing from Baltimore does not touch at the points contemplated under this contract. On the contrary, both Baltimore and Philadelphia have for years been praying for service of this character, and if established it will give tremendous impetus to both American ports, and it is hoped will result in a very large increase in business.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may I read to the Senator what was said?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLACK. I read as follows:

Commissioner Cone. I would like to ask one or two questions. In what way do you propose to serve the other ports of this route, Hampton Roads and Baltimore? I mean with these four ships. How do you propose to run them? You have a direct route from Philadelphia to Liverpool?

Mr. Ball. Start at Baltimore, Hampton Roads, Philadelphia, and we sail from Philadelphia direct to Liverpool and Manchester. In turn we load back direct to Philadelphia. We go back to Hampton Roads, Baltimore, and Philadelphia.

Commissioner Cone. Then Hampton Roads and Baltimore would not have the direct service? You understand we have spent a good deal of money in building up those services from those a good deal of money in building up those services from those

Mr. Ball. Yes, sir; Hampton Roads would not.
Commissioner Cone. What effect would this have on the service that we have built up and just sold in those ports, in your

Mr. Ball. There is no use in ducking that question, Admiral. It would take cargo away from them.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The present steamship line does touch at Hampton Roads, but it does not go to Liverpool and Manchester.

Further, the establishment of the proposed Philadelphia-Baltimore-Liverpool-Manchester mail steamship service is merely another development in our merchant-marine policy which Congress has gone on record as favoring. It will permit the employment of vessels now in the service, which possibly would otherwise be laid up, and likely turned back to the Shipping Board, thereby the Government being the

The fifth whereas states that the Merchant Fleet Corporation reported on February 6, 1933, that this steamship service is not justified. I can only say that I have been personally informed within the past few hours by the Second Assistant Postmaster General that the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation is cooperating in every possible way in this matter, is with the Post Office Department 100 per cent in recommending the establishment of the Philadelphia-Baltimore-Liverpool-Manchester ocean mail service, and representatives of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation were members of both the subcommittee and the parent committee recommending the desirability of awarding such contract.

Perhaps he may be right in that, but all I can say is that I have been personally informed within the past four or five hours by the Second Assistant Postmaster General that the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation is cooperating in every possible way in this matter with the Post Office Department 100 per cent in recommending the establishment of the Philadelphia-Baltimore and Liverpool-Manchester ocean mail service, and representatives of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation, who were members of both the subcommittee and the parent committee, recommend the desirability of awarding such contracts

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I have before me a statement of February 6 from the Merchant Fleet Corporation in which these words appear:

From this tabulation it will be noted that the establishment of a direct Philadelphia-Liverpool-Manchester service is not justified.

But later, at the end of the statement, it is said:

In the event it is determined that the proposed service is a necessary and essential service, and the board would consider permitting the United States Lines Co. to sell two or more of its B vessels for the establishment of the proposed service, it is recommended that it authorize the Fleet Corporation to negotiate the terms and conditions of such a sale with the United States Lines Co., subject to final approval thereof by the board.

I think there is no doubt they are cooperating in carrying this out, but they are cooperating after this statement made that the service is not justified.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Again let me emphasize the fact that I am advised that this matter has had the most sweeping and thorough investigation, and the adoption of a resolution of this character could have but one result, and that is to withhold from the ports of Philadelphia and Baltimore and the enormous territory feeding those ports, the natural development and accruing benefit that would promptly come from the establishment of this new route.

I wish to repeat, it in no way conflicts, as I understand it, notwithstanding the statement of the Senator from Alabama, with established routes, and it is but the providing of additional fast mail service greatly needed between the points mentioned.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I knew nothing about this contract until I heard the speech of my good friend from Alabama [Mr. Black]. I am very much interested in it now, as I think every Member of this body ought to be, for a reason that perhaps has not become so apparent as yet. I am assuming the statements made by the Senator are correct, and if they are, the very interests who would benefit from a $10,000,000 subsidy are those behind the so-called National Economy League.

The National Economy League frankly would charge the depression as far as possible to the disabled veterans of America. More, the National Economy League, backed by the very interests which the Senator from Alabama has named, would undertake to balance the Budget of the United States at the expense of the disabled veterans of America. They seem to be habitually feverish. Since that term has been applied on numerous occasions in this debate, I use it now. They are feverish apparently in this matter. They seem to be afflicted with a continuing and consuming fever. Feverishly the director of this organization, the National Economy League, Mr. Curran, undertook to browbeat the House of Representatives into refusing to pass the independent offices appropriation bill because it carried an appropriation for disabled veterans. The House of Representatives very properly refused to be in any sense of the word influenced by that noble group.

Then the National Economy League turned its guns on the United States Senate and attempted to intimidate this body to prevent this body from passing the legislation because it carried appropriations for the disabled American veterans. This body independently refused to perpetrate any injustice on those who have worn the uniform, and it passed the bill.

Now, just as feverishly, the same organization, the National Economy League, through its director, has the effrontery, I note by the papers this morning, to attempt to intimidate and browbeat the President of the United States, urging him to veto the bill because it carries these appropriations. I am assuming the President of the United States will refuse to be a party to any injustice to those who have defended the Nation in time of peril.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In just a moment I shall be happy to yield to my friend, the Senator from Louisiana.

Before the joint committee investigating veterans' affairs Mr. Curran appeared. It developed that 17 men and women had contributed more than $35,000 to a big slush fund of $200,000 to be used in influencing legislation against the veterans. These 17 are among the wealthiest citizens of the United States. Their names are in the hearings, and may be found there by any Members of the Senate who desire the information. When we asked this man Curran, representing that aggregation of millionaires, whether or not they filed, or intended to file, any report with the House of Representatives as other organizations had done that are engaged in lobbying activities, in a perfectly insolent manner Mr. Curran said, "No; we file no reports."

Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad; and the testimony in the last few days of Mitchell and of some others before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency has particularly and completely disgusted the entire country. "No," Mr. Curran said, "we make no report to anybody." That is how insolent they are.

Mr. President, I have just given the Senate instances showing how they have been undertaking to influence legislation all the way through Congress, and now they are undertaking to prevent the signing of that legislation by the President. That is the crowd the disabled veterans have had to deal with. That is the crowd, as I understand, the Senator from Alabama is now trying to deal with, and that is the crowd that feverishly always wants a subsidy. Ah, they do not hesitate for a second to take a subsidy of $10,000,000 for themselves from the United States Treasury in these times of depression, but they would take $12 a month from the disabled veterans of the United States with which to balance the Budget.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield first to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I was merely going to make a suggestion to the Senator from Indiana that I thought might probably be to our mutual benefit. I notice that a gentleman by the name of Kent, writing in the Baltimore Sun, who, perhaps is what is called a "ghost writer," of the Theodore Roosevelt family group, took the chance of describing the Senator from Indiana along with myself as demagogues, but credited the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norkis] as not being a demagogue, because he did not know any better. I wonder if that has been called to his attention. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think that requires no answer, I will say to the Senator from Louisiana. Now I yield to my friend from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. I started to call the Senator's attention to the fact that these people got $45,000,000 in subsidies last year.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes, Mr. President; and the very people who would be the beneficiaries of these subsidies are those who are now fighting against the disabled veterans of the United States and who say insolently to the committee, authorized by this body and the one at the other end of the Capitol to go into veterans' matters, that they make no report to anybody, that they are above the law. I think there is a great deal in what has been said by the Senator from Alabama.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to have Senators present to hear the brief remarks I am going to make.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield for that purpose?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Costigan Schall Austin Couzens King Schuyler Bailey Bankhead La Follette Lewis Sheppard Shortridge Dale Dickinson Logan Long McGill Barbour Dill Smith Fletcher Bingham Steiwer Black Blaine Frazier George McKellar Stephens Swanson McNary Thomas, Idaho Thomas, Okla. Borah Bratton Glass Metcalf Moses Goldsborough Brookhart Townsend Broussard Bulkley Gore Grammer Norbeck Trammell Norris Tydings Bulow Nye Oddie Hale Vandenberg Harrison Wagner Walcott Byrnes Capper Hastings Patterson Caraway Hatfield Pittman Walsh, Mass. Reed Carev Watson Hayden Reynolds Robinson, Ark Clark Connally Hebert Wheeler Johnson Coolidge Kean Robinson, Ind. Kendrick Copeland

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what I shall say relating to the pending conference report will require only a few minutes; and I should like very much to have the attention of those who are interested in the independent offices appropriation bill.

When the bill came before the Senate there was just one fight in it; everyone knew that to be true. That fight related to the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission. The body at the other end of the Capitol had reduced the appropriation compared with the fund made available to the commission last year 65 per cent.

The Senate committee, anticipating criticism on account of the discontinuance of an investigation regarded as of great importance which inevitably would result if additional funds were not provided, increased the amount from $500,000 to $780,000, and specifically provided that $280,000 of that amount should be used for the sole purpose of continuing the utilities investigation, leaving such an amount for the normal and other activities of the Federal Trade Commission as would have made it physically and morally impossible for the tribunal to function effectively.

I make that statement and propose in just a few minutes to produce some figures which it is believed will establish that conclusion.

There are three divisions in the Federal Trade Commission, the administrative, the economic, and the legal division. For the fiscal year 1931 the administrative division had, in round numbers, $433,000; the economic division had more than $685,500; and the legal division had $636,000, in round numbers.

For the fiscal year 1933 these figures were, respectively, administrative, $334,000; economic, $435,000; and legal, $623,000. I am not quoting the exact figures, the round numbers being sufficient for my purpose.

For the fiscal year 1934, as submitted by the commission, these sums were reduced. The commission itself, responding to the demand for economy, reduced its estimate by 11 per cent, compared with the previous year, and submitted a recommendation for $1,300,000, to be used by all three of the divisions to which reference has been made. The Bureau of the Budget reduced that by 25 per cent, or, to be exact, 24½ per cent, and recommended a total of $1,195,000. The House of Representatives more than cut that sum squarely in two and passed a bill containing an appropriation of $507,000 for the Federal Trade Commission, being $227,000 plus for the administrative division, $272,000 plus for the legal division, and not a dollar for the economic division.

It thus becomes apparent that the policy of the body at the other end of the Capitol was to terminate those duties and functions on the part of the commission which we call "economic," having relation to investigations of complaints and of various violations of the laws of fair trade and competition.

The Senate committee, as I have already stated, responding to what was recognized as a well-nigh universal public sentiment in favor of completing the investigation of the public utilities, added $280,000, and let it go at that.

When this issue arose in the Senate it was well known by everyone here that the Senate was overwhelmingly in favor of increasing this appropriation so as to make it possible for the commission to perform its functions with a fair degree of efficiency. I make that statement, and I should like to have any Senator who doubts the correctness of it challenge it now, because it is the basis of such further argument as I intend to make.

The vote here in the Senate, if a record had been made, would have been almost overwhelming in favor of the amendment that I proposed; and in order to save time, the Senator in charge of the bill, recognizing that fact, conceded the amendment; it was accepted and carried into conference.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Arkansas is performing one of the most valuable services he has ever rendered. The action of the conferees in reducing the amount of money appropriated for the Federal Trade Commission would justify the Senate in rejecting the conference report and in killing the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let me thank the Senator from Arizona. I am going to conclude my remarks with a suggestion along that line; but I wish first to pursue the thought that was in mind a moment ago when I was interrupted.

Let me repeat:

The Senator in charge of this bill accepted the amendment, and there was debate following that. One Senator evidently thought it was necessary to establish strongly the reasons for the amendment, and he took the floor and debated the matter at some length.

When the bill went into conference, about the first thing that was done on the part of the Senate conferees was to yield the only issue made in the Senate of great importance: and they brought back the bill here substantially the same as reported by the Senate committee. In other words, the Senate conferees receded from the Senate's position, and took the position of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. So far as I can now recall, there is slight difference between the conference report and the report made to the Senate by the Appropriations Committee. They left the matter so that it is now necessary for the Senators to determine whether they wish to destroy the Federal Trade Commission, whether they wish to terminate the performance of its functions as an economic fact-finding body, or whether they wish to give it that reasonable and necessary support which we all recognize is essential to the fair discharge of the duties for which the commission was created.

The reduction that was made by the body at the other end of the Capitol, I have already stated, meant a substantial scrapping of the commission following the conclusion of the utility investigation. It meant that through a policy of denying necessary funds the Congress was going to destroy the commission, and place it in a situation where it could do nothing more than finish some of the work which it has already undertaken. The body at the other end of the Capitol, as I have said, authorized $500,000, the Budget recommendation was a 25 per cent reduction over the appropriation which we made available for the commission last year. Out of that $500,000 the salaries of the commissioners and the expense of their offices, the expense of the secretary's office, the expense for the sections of accounts and personnel, docket, mail, files, and so forth, all must be maintained. There would remain only between $300,000 and $350,000 for all other purposes of the commission, including supplies, travel, witness fees, salaries, reporting service, and so forth. This would mean almost a complete elimination of law-enforcement work and almost a total abolition of the economic division.

I have been quoting for the last minute from a statement furnished at my request by a representative of the commission. "With only $10,000 for printing, it would be impossible for the commission to enforce its orders to cease and desist."

I make the statement, upon the authority of facts which is believed to be well founded, that the issue involved in this item of appropriation is whether we are going to abolish the Federal Trade Commission; for we had better abolish it after the conclusion of the utilities' investigation than so impair its effectiveness, so reduce its resources, that it can not do the things which it is intended to accomplish.

The statement was made by my friend the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], while the Senator from Alabama was interrupting him, that the House conferees proved unyielding in their attitude on the amendments in this bill. I am going to ask the Senate to reject this conference report; and I am telling the Senate now, upon information which I believe to be correct, that if the conference report is sent back there is more than a fair prospect, there is a strong likelihood, that the amendment which the conferees yielded so quickly will be retained in the bill.

I am not quoting anyone. I am expressing an opinion as the result of inquiries made. It would be regrettable to take the indirect course of abolishing this commission or of "hamstringing" it by denying it the funds that we know are necessary to enable it to accomplish anything of substantial importance.

I repeat, I ask that the conference report be rejected.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to ask the Senator if it is his idea to instruct the conferees not to reduce the appropriation in

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No.

Mr. BLACK. But I imagine, from what the Senator says, that he believes we should hold for the full amount of the

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is my intention and my purpose; but I am entirely content to have the conference report rejected and let the bill go back to conference.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me before he sits down?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly. Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas if it is not a fact that the amendments offered by him to this bill, which I was very happy to support myself so far as I could, were absolutely necessary, and the lowest sum with which the commission could properly function and do the work assigned to it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President. I thought that was true, and I stated to the Senate the incidents that occurred with respect to the appropriation—the reduction that was made first by the commission itself in submitting its estimate; the further reduction that was made by the Budget Bureau; and the fact that the commission, even if it gets every dollar that we propose to give it in this appropriation, will have only a little more than two-thirds as much as it had for the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I want to corroborate what the Senator has just said by some figures | what position to take, and if the conferees on the part of whereas the Budget had recommended $1,195,000; and that | that are in my own possession-that the commission's estimate for the fiscal year 1934 would take care of a permanent staff of 376 employees, which they badly need to do their work. That would still be a reduction of 91 below the commission's estimate for 1934; but if the measure as it passed the House should prevail, the permanent staff would be reduced to about 131 employees instead of 376.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes. Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That would be a reduction of 205 below the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget, and 296 fewer than the estimates of the commission.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The House provision impairs the effectiveness of the commission to a point that approaches uselessness.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Precisely.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And the Senate committee report, which is substantially the same as the conference agreement, does nothing more except it provides a fund to carry on the utilities' investigation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. To show that the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas was a very minimum amount, may I point out that if that amount should prevail it would mean that the Federal Trade Commission, even so, has sustained a 45 per cent reduction in the last two years.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes. Let me add that for the fiscal year 1932 the funds made available for the commission in its three divisions already referred to were $1.763,821.32. The amount that we are asking here, all told, is $1,101,000 plus; and I leave the Senators to carry out the comparison to their own proper conclusion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I just want to correct one statement that the Senator made in relation to the printing and binding, where the House did yield to the Senate amendment.

The House provided $10,000, and the Senate made the amount $20,000, and the House agreed to that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If I said anything to the contrary, I did not intend to do it, because I understood that that was true; and may I say that that is the only difference between the Senate committee report and the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I said it was substantially the same, and I should have made that statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. The conferees of the Senate recognized the fact, and I recognize it now, and I knew just as well when we finally agreed upon the amount that it was not going to be satisfactory on the floor of the Senate as I know it this minute; but the conferees on the part of the House really did not want to yield to the $780,000-or, in other words, $280,000 more than the $500,000 that they first had in the bill.

If we go back to conference-and I think we shall-we will go back there with a direct vote of the Senate of instructions, and we will stand for the position of the Senate just as long as we can; and I think before we would yield on it we would come back and ask for the further instructions of the Senate.

I can not say any more than that; and I want Senators to understand that the conferees on the part of the Senate had this very thing in mind. It was the only way in which we could reach any kind of a decision, and we had only a few days in which to do it.

I wanted to get it back here, and I want the Senate now to act upon this item; and, if it is sent back, the conferees of the Senate will go instructed directly by the Senate to insist upon the amount that has been voted into the bill by the Senate. That is all there is to it, and for that reason I want to say to the Senator from Arkansas that I have no objection at all, but we will go back to the conference instructed by the Senate upon this item. This is the only item in dispute in the conference. Then we will know just the House will not yield, I can come back and say to the Senate that they will not, and it will be a question between the Senate and the House as to whether the amount granted will be accepted, relying upon an appropriation of an additional amount in the next session of the Congress or even in the special session which may be had on the part of the incoming administration.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. WALCOTT. I would like to ask the Senator a question for the sake of clearing up the record. Will the Senator be good enough to tell us the amount of money that was appropriated a year ago, and then the highest amount that was intended to be appropriated this year?

Mr. SMOOT. In round figures they asked for $1,300,000. The Budget recommended $1,195,000. The House gave them $500,000, and in the committee we added $280,000, to take care of what we absolutely knew they must have, and we so reported, in order to enable them to make their final report upon the investigation of the utilities. That is the situation just as it is.

Mr. WALCOTT. Just one more question, and I am asking this in order to find out what figure would complete the work the commission has on hand. I have talked with them several times, and they need a certain sum, and I do not know just what that sum is.

Mr. SMOOT. They need $280,000 to complete the utilities' investigation. That is what the Senate committee added over and above what the House gave them. The Senate thought that, instead of the $780,000, they wanted appropriations to keep the employees they have there until the investigation is finally disposed of, and the amount voted was $1,081,500.

Mr. WALCOTT. I think that clears the record up.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not want to repeat what I said when the bill was before the Senate a few days ago. Yet I can not resist saying that this is an annual contest. It has been here ever since the Federal Trade Commission was directed to investigate the Power Trust. Every year we have had the same thing. Every year an appropriation has been reported from the committee that was not sufficient to carry on the work. Every year the Senate has increased it. Every year it has gone to conference, and every year it has come back from conference with a good share of the increase that was put on in the Senate entirely eliminated from the bill.

This year the conference committee were in session, I understand, for a whole half hour. Thirty minutes they fought! For 30 minutes the Senator from Utah labored in the sweat of his brow and shed the blood of his heart in order to back up the action of the Senate. But, completely exhausted from his terrible struggle, he finally yielded, and gave up what the Senate had put in. He had done it so often, he was so used to it, that it came as a natural consequence.

Mr. President, if this had happened only once, I would not feel as deeply about it as I do. It has seemed to me there has been from some quarters a determined effort every year to kill the Federal Trade Commission. I think last year in the debate I read a quotation from the then chairman of the commission in which he said they did not want this investigation at all, that the President did not want it, did not think that there ought to be any more money spent in making it.

It is true that three Presidents have been against this investigation, and that there is a member of the commission opposed to any investigation. I say that in the best of feeling. I concede that a man has a right to feel that way. Mr. Humphrey, a member of the commission, an able, courageous man, is opposed, and has been from the beginning opposed, to any investigation of the Power Trust; or, for that matter, to the investigation of almost any other trust. That is the way he believes. He is sincere in that belief. I respect him in his opinion. Nevertheless, I can not see how the Federal Trade Commission can exist and carry on this investigation, the most important one that has ever been put up to them, if they do not have this appropriation. The investigation is one which I think has done more good for the great, common people of America than any other investigation that has ever been made. It has shown this giant octopus. The evidence has disclosed a sufficient amount of testimony so that they themselves have surrendered and reorganized under another name. I went into that fully the other day, and I am not going into it again now.

Mr. President, from these various sources for the last 12 years has come this unseen influence that has been sufficient every year to cut down the appropriation, so that if the Senate had not raised it, this investigation of the great Power Trust and the public-utility concerns in the United States would have been crippled, if not entirely destroyed.

In the last days of a Congress, when there are but few days left, the Senate conferees come back here again, surrendering everything the Senate put in the bill, and evidently with the idea that there are just a few days more of the session, and that, with a lot of important legislation on the calendar, Senators would feel the necessity of accepting the report as made for fear they might not get anything.

Mr. President, unless the Senate takes the matter in hand, unless the Senate will refuse to accept the report, we will have laid down at the command and from the influence of the same Power Trust which for 12 years has been covering this country with the most sinister propaganda that was ever conceived in the mind of man.

There seems to be some doubt in the minds of some Senators. Naturally, there would be, because from some sources in the commission comes quietly the word that they do not need any more money. There seems to be some doubt in the minds of some Senators whether the Federal Trade Commission really needs money properly to carry on and complete its utility investigation, and write the important reports which the facts revealed call for.

Senators must not forget that one of the most important things is to prepare and submit to the Senate, under the resolution we passed, the reports of their investigations. Evidence covering many, many volumes will have to be condensed, and the reports made to the Senate. It will be a great task to make the report in this particular investigation, and will cost a good deal of money. To be able to give the Senators facts which speak for themselves, the monthly reports of the utility investigation have been checked to see what has been done, and to compare that with what remains to be done. Such a check establishes conclusively three points.

First, it is not possible for the staff of the commission to complete the work in process and put the reports and testimony thereon into the record by July 1. The first reports on the financial structure and practices were ready, and their presentation was begun on February 24, 1930. These appear in parts 21 and 22. Including the January, 1933, report, 30 reports, in 25 volumes, have been presented.

In these 25 volumes are 99 major accounting reports. To prepare these, plus the necessary but shorter accompanying reports on interstate commerce, service and management contracts and charges, control and interlocking ownership and directorates, required hearings on 199 days. Taking the list presented to the Senate Commerce Committee of companies on which work is in process, there will be required 90 to 100 major accounting reports, depending on how many should and can be consolidated. In addition, at least for each new group, there must be prepared and put in the other shorter but important reports on interstate commerce, management and supervision, relations and charges imposed on the operating companies, and reports to show interlockings and control through ownership, and by identical personnel of officers and directors.

Second, if no other companies than those now in process are examined, it will require a good-sized staff a considerable time after the record is made up to digest the records and write the kind of a report and considered recommendations which the Senate has requested.

For each of the above, funds and personnel are required during the entire next fiscal year.

which no work has been done, but which should be ex-Third, if to the above list are added those companies on amined to fairly complete the investigation, this would require a minimum of 35 or 40 major accounting reports. This will require time, money, and men.

Mr. President, there are 22 of these great corporations which have not been touched. I gave the Senate a list of them when the bill was before the Senate. I have a list in my hand now. Among that number is the Commonwealth Light & Power Co. I am not going to read them all, because the list was all put in the Record when we had the bill before the Senate. There is the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and its subsidiaries, a large number of utility corporations, as will be seen if Senators will look at the Record. There is Stone & Webster, one of the big corporations of America, engaged in the utility business almost all over the United States. They have not yet been touched

I want to invite the attention of the Senate to just one thing that the investigation will bring out in connection with others. I happen to know about this one. Stone & Webster was the corporation that built the Keokuk Dam. It is one of the great dams of the world. The very day they finished it they turned it over to a new corporation. That day they put $20,000,000 of water into the corporation. That is one of the companies that has not yet been investigated. That one act involved $20,000,000 upon which the people of the great Middle West are apparently supposed to pay a return through all eternity. When we investigate that company clear through, it will be found undoubtedly that there are many more millions of water in it.

Then there are other power companies that have never been investigated. There are others that are very important to investigate, and unless this money is allowed they never will be investigated. It is idle to say that we will stop the investigation now and commence it again a year from now. Here is a trained organization of experts in the employ of the Federal Trade Commission. Without this appropriation the commission must discharge every one of them. That great organization will be scattered all over the country. Commence again a year from now and we will have to get a similar organization together again, which would be a practical impossibility.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And the investigation was ordered by the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Absolutely. I thank the Senator. They were ordered to make the investigation. The 22 corporations that are left uninvestigated are just as important as those which have been investigated. I have mentioned the names of some which are among the most important in the United States. Are we going to destroy the personnel of this great organization which is competent and ready to continue the investigation if we provide the funds?

So far as I am concerned, even if I knew now that the defeat of the conference report would kill the bill at this session, I would not hesitate for a moment to vote to reject it. Unless we do something of that kind the Senate will find itself helpless through the silent influence of this the greatest combination that was ever put together in the history of mankind.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. I am wondering if this is a part of the economy program to cut down appropriations?

Mr. NORRIS. If we take the bill as it is presented in the conference report, it means the death of the economic division of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. LONG. What they have done might as well not have been done?

Mr. NORRIS. Practically so. In other words, we have a job that is not finished and nobody can say until it is finished just what it all amounts to.

Mr. LONG. How much have they cut out of the Federal Trade Commission? I ought to know, but I do not.

Mr. NORRIS. There was a reduction of about 65 per cent, I believe.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me-

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The appropriation was cut down to $500,000. The Senate committee raised it to $780,000, and the Senate then raised it to the amount of the Budget estimate. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me further, I want to say that I think it would be poor economy indeed not to go on and complete the investigation.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no doubt that the most economical thing to do is to go on and give the commission funds to complete the investigation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say, however, that the commission itself said that $280,000 would finish the investigation.

Mr. NORRIS. There is testimony to that effect. I understand that, and I am not finding fault with some of the members of the subcommittee for relying on that testimony. But I tried to convey to the Senate, when I began my remarks, that in the commission itself are influences which are trying to destroy the investigation. Do Senators want to know the truth about it? Let them read the letter written by Mr. Healy. Mr. Healy is the attorney who has been in charge of the investigation from the beginning. He is the chief counsel. On the 2d day of February, this present month, he wrote a letter to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] in which he outlined just what was necessary and what would happen, in his judgment, if the bill were passed in the shape in which the committee reported it to the Senate. In that report the committee had allowed the $280,000. Mr. Healy, necessarily, knows more about the management of this investigation than any other man on earth. If it were not for taking up the time of the Senate I would read his letter. It is in the hearings, on page 41, and any Senator can read it there. I believe the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] put it in the Record the other day when we had the bill before us. It is, to my mind, a demonstration of the fact that if we had stopped then we would at least have killed the economic division and I do not think we ever would have completed the investigation of these utilities.

Mr. President, I showed the other day by the charts I had on the wall of the Senate Chamber how these great combinations were combined mostly under the leadership and domination of Morgan & Co. I have prepared another chart that shows the control of one corporation—just one. Most of the corporations shown on the chart now on the wall have not been investigated. Some of them are now in process of investigation. It is estimated that at the end of this fiscal year the commission will be able to complete the investigation of 50 per cent of the corporations shown on the chart.

Wall Street is the headquarters of the United Corporation, a corporation dominated by Morgan. It has nothing to do with anything except public utilities. They organized it several years ago. I gave a list of the subsidiary corporations when we had the bill before the Senate on a previous occasion. I gave a list of the subsidiary corporations of the United Corporation. It is estimated that by the end of the present fiscal year 50 per cent of the corporations named on the chart will have been investigated and 50 per cent will remain uninvestigated. Among the number uninvestigated will be the 22 whose names I placed in the Record, including the Commonwealth & Southern, and Stone & Webster.

United Corporation was organized by Mr. Morgan just a few years ago. The newspapers were full of it at the time. I have in my hand a list of the subsidiary corporations directly controlled and the corporations indirectly controlled by United Corporation. For instance, United Corporation has invested in the Mohawk-Hudson Power Co. $6,673,590. It has invested in the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey $78,461,600. It has invested in the United Gas Improvement Co. $214,448,420. It has invested in a group including the Allied Power & Light Corporation, the Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation, and the Columbia Oil & Gas Corporation, a total of $141,757,286. In another group of corporations it has invested $67,909,691. In still another group it has invested $35,590,010. In another group it has invested $24,825,554, and in another group $23,159,707. These make total investments in the corporations that it controls through the ownership of stock and voting certificates of $592,821,856. Then it has invested in seven or eight other corporations in which it does not own or control a total of $23,159,707.

It will be remembered from the charts I had here the other day how the financial control of all these interests went back to a few of the great banking institutions which were themselves interlocked among each other, so we could not tell one from the other. When we put them all together we had the control of 87 per cent of the generation of electricity in the United States.

There are some peculiar things about these companies. Here is the United Corporation, which owns the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey and the United Gas Improvement Co. through the ownership of common stock. They control the Niagara Falls Power Corporation through ownership of stock. Just notice the ramifications of these two corporations. In turn, the Niagara Hudson Power Corporation owns 72 per cent of the United Gas Improvement Co. There is no stopping place. One corporation owns another corporation, and that corporation owns a string of other corporations. They are all eating each other. They are swallowing each other. Sometimes they are engaged in the same occupation with two corporations eating each other by owning each other's stock. So that they cross and criss cross until it is beyond the possibility of human ingenuity to unscramble the great scrambled egg. Look at this chart [indicating], Senators. That represents only one corporation, just one holding company, doing business with subsidiaries in 40 States of the Union, in some places having a monopoly and in other places not having a monopoly; but if one would investigate he would find out that in 90 cases out of 91 where they do not have a monopoly they are in competition with themselves; some other corporation controlled by the same financial interest will be found competing with the various corporations that are generating electricity. Every one of these dots [indicatingl represents a generating plant, and always some other corporation, though sometimes it will be four or five degrees removed from the United Corporation, will be connected with it. Fifty per cent of them will be uninvestigated unless we continue this appropriation.

So, Mr. President, I have no apology to offer for my position on this question on the ground that there might be some danger if this report should be rejected that we will not get another chance to consider it. Senators will remember what the Senator from Arkansas said about it. I have not a particle of doubt if the Senator from Utah and his associates had fought half as hard to get something for the people on this report as they have tried to forget what the people on this report as they have tried to forget what the people on the conference report before us in the shape in which it is. We would have something out of it. We will have lost everything; there will be not anything left to speak of, if this conference report shall be approved.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will reject the conference report, and, if it does, I have no doubt that another report will be submitted in a form which will be much more acceptable than the report now before us.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to subscribe to everything the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], and particularly the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], have said concerning the power investigation and its importance. There is one aspect of this situation, however, which has not been emphasized and to which I wish to invite the attention of the Senate.

The Federal Trade Commission is the only body of economic research under the Federal Government which has direct relations with trade practices and corporate organization. To-day we are confronted with economic problems the complexity of which has never been before equaled in the history of the modern world. To destroy, to cut off, to dispense with the services of the economic division of the Federal Trade Commission at a time like this would, in my judgment, be somewhat akin to the folly of dismissing all doctors in the face of a widespread epidemic.

The commission has already adopted a resolution, Mr. President, providing for an investigation of the corporate structure of industrial and other corporations in the United States. I think every person recognizes the importance of such an investigation, but unless the amount provided in the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas and adopted by the Senate shall be retained in conference, it will be impossible to carry on that investigation.

Therefore, Mr. President, for the reasons stated by other Senators and those to which I have alluded thus briefly, due to the lateness of the hour, I hope the Senate will reject the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, outside of this one amendment, there is nothing of importance in disagreement, because the most of the changes are merely to correct totals and words that were jumbled in one amendment. Therefore it seems to me the proper thing, if we are going to do anything with the report, is to reject it in its entirety, and let everything come back in one report after another conference with the House. To that I have no objection.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it occurs to me, in order to

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it occurs to me, in order to make the record as impressive as possible for the effect it might have on the conferees, that we ought to have a roll call on the question.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any question but that the vote will be unanimous.

Mr. NORRIS. With the understanding that the action we are about to take will be unanimous—

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. NORRIS. That there is not any objection, and that we have the consent of the Senator from Utah, I will not ask for a roll call.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was unanimously rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments to House bill 14458, making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent offices, and so forth, request a further conference with the House of Representatives, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. Smoot, Mr. Keyes, Mr. Hale, Mr. Glass, and Mr. Copeland were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRODUCTION COSTS OF ULTRAMARINE BLUE

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 359.

Mr. BRATTON. Let the resolution be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 359) submitted by Mr. Barbour on the 15th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed to investigate, for the purposes of section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, the difference in the cost of production between domestic ultramarine blue and foreign ultramarine blue, and to report at the earliest date practicable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to the resolution, but I do not like it to appear that the Committee on Finance is being discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma objects.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I hope we may now have a vote on my resolution if we are ready to vote.

Mr. REED. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. Will not the Senator withhold that motion?

Mr. REED. Very well; I will withhold it at the request of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BLACK. Do I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania objects to voting on the resolution now?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, with the understanding that the Senator from Pennsylvania, if he desires, shall be given the time from then until 12 o'clock to discuss the resolution, and that the Senate shall vote on it at 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. I have to attend a meeting of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock and a number of other Senators also have to attend that meeting.

Mr. BLACK. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock, with the understanding that this resolution shall be discussed and that a vote shall be had on it at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was going to suggest a while ago, but I could not get recognition at the time, why not vote on this resolution at 6 o'clock this evening and agree that as much of the time between now and 6 o'clock—which will be 35 minutes—as the Senator from Pennsylvania may want shall be at his disposal?

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, of course there are a great many Senators who did not know we would likely be called to stay here to-night. For that reason and because I understand that a great many Senators have engagements which they would very much regret to break, I do not desire to insist that the Senate remain here to-night, but I do think the Senate should remain in session until 6 o'clock, in order that the Senator from Pennsylvania may have time to discuss this resolution, that then we should adjourn until 10 o'clock in the morning, and that the resolution be discussed until 12 o'clock, at which time the Postmaster General is supposed to open bids and will probably sign some kind of a contract unless action shall be taken by the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. An alleged contract.

Mr. BLACK. An alleged contract. I should like to know from the Senator from Oregon if it would not be all right to remain here until 6 o'clock and let the Senator from Pennsylvania discuss the resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to accommodate the Senator from Alabama, but there are a number of Senators who have an important meeting which they desire to attend this evening, and, in order to accommodate them, I think it would be desirable that the Senate should now take a recess.

Mr. BLACK. I shall not object to leaving here in time to allow Senators to attend that meeting. I was asking if six o'clock would be too late?

Mr. McNARY. I am afraid it would be.

Mr. BLACK. Then I move that when the Senate concludes its business it adjourn until 10 o'clock in the morning.
Mr. REED. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. Will not the Senator withhold that motion? I am sure there are a number of important committee meetings in the morning, and I think 11 o'clock is about as early as we would be able to get a quorum in the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that means that the filibuster will continue until these people, these highjackers, get some sort of an alleged contract. That is what it means.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Alabama. Why not stay right here now and vote down, if we can, a motion to take a recess and proceed as long as we can?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we ought to do that, although

I am very sorry to discommode any Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we ought to do that. It is the duty of Senators to be here.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I myself have no objection. I simply did not want to be placed in an unfavorable attitude. I think that there is nothing more important than to try to prevent the signing of this contract.

Mr. NORRIS. If we can succeed in voting down the motion for a recess or an adjournment, the resolution will be before the Senate, will it not?

Mr. BLACK. I desire to state that I feel about it just as was expressed by the Senator from Tennessee. I think there are a great many people in this country who have about reached the conclusion that the hour has come to let this group know-and Mitchell is but one of many others who have not been caught—that it is about time for them to cease to attempt to hold up the people of this Nation and to rob them. I think this proposed contract is a part of the nation-wide system of robbery; and I think there is nothing more important than for the Senate to do what it should to stop it. I think it would be highly gratifying and interesting to know what excuse any man can offer on his feet against a resolution which does not seek to defeat the signing of the contract but merely sets forth that the evidence before the Senate shows that there is an effort to obtain a decision from a prejudiced source and that all that is desired is that it be delayed until an unprejudiced tribunal can act upon it.

Mr. McNARY. I am sure the Senator from Alabama wants to be accommodating.

Mr. BLACK. I do.

Mr. McNary. I explained to him the situation early in the afternoon. A number of Senators want to attend an important meeting to show their affection and devotion to some of the illustrious Senators who are about to depart from the Chamber. The affair has been arranged for some time; it is necessary for them to get to their homes and to prepare for the occasion; and I hope the Senator will not object to the request that I make that the Senate take a recess now until 10.30 to-morrow morning.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest that the Senator make it 10 o'clock.

Mr. McNARY. In order to meet the present situation, then—

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I naturally have a faint interest in the proceedings, because constituents of mine are being accused quite unwarrantedly of fraud and corruption and what not. I should like to attend the meeting of the joint committee to which I have referred. I was told by Mr. Parker, the expert of the joint committee, that to-morrow's meeting of the joint committee is to be very important and that we ought all to make an effort to be there. I am not trying to filibuster on this matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not see why a meeting of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, which did not meet for years until a short time ago, should be so important just at this time. I hope the Senator will insist upon his motion to meet at 10 o'clock in the morning. There is nothing more important than saving to the American taxpayers the $10,000,000 that is about to be taken out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this subvention is not $10,-000,000. It is $5,000,000 over a period of 10 years; but that is just about as nearly correct as the people who challenge this proposal are in all their other statements.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has been stated on the floor of the Senate a dozen times to-day that the amount involved was $10,000,000, and it was not challenged before. I have not seen the contract. This alleged contract is a secret arrangement. It has not been brought out voluntarily. It has been ferreted out by the Senator from Alabama [Mr.] BLACKI, and it is a disgraceful, a wicked proposal from beginning to end.

While I should hate to inconvenience any Senators, I think the Senate either ought to stay in session here tonight or we ought to meet to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, and allow any statements or arguments to be made, and then vote to prevent this infamous thing, this wicked thing, this disgraceful thing, this scandalous thing, from happening tomorrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I should say that was a fair example of the judicial mood in which the Senate is about to proceed to declare this contract void without-

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, you have not got a contract yet. Mr. REED (continuing). To declare it void in advance, without hearing both sides of the matter; and it is a fair illustration of the tender mercy that we will get after the 4th of March if this matter should be postponed as is requested.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say to my friend from Pennsylvania that it seems to me he is unwarranted in drawing the conclusions he draws. The Senator from Pennsylvania evidently knows what the facts are. Nobody objects. Senators want to give him time to lay the facts before the Senate, but he will not do it. All these propositions give to the Senator from Pennsylvania ample time to discuss the matter, or at least I have not heard any suggestion from him that the time was not sufficient for him to discuss it; but we have not heard him debate it. That is what we want him to do, and he will not do it. We should like to stay in session now, or meet early, in order that the Senator from Pennsylvania may do that. If he can not be here at 10 o'clock, let us go on now, and let the Senator take the floor and go ahead as long as he wants to.

Mr. REED. I have been accused of filibustering, and I have not said a word on this matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are perfectly willing for the Senator to go ahead and say something on it.

PROPOSED EVENING SESSIONS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Oregon and other Senators that it may be necessary during the remainder of this week to have evening sessions, and I should like to put the Senate on notice that that order may be asked. I have talked with the Senator from Oregon about it, and I think he concurs.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS ON OPEN-MARKET TRADING IN GRAIN FUTURES ON CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, out of order, I may send to the desk a resolution which calls upon the Department of Agriculture for some information. I do not think there will be any discussion of it at all; and I should like to have action on it to-night, if possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be received and read.

The resolution (S. Res. 376) was read, as follows:

Whereas it is desirable to get the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture as to whether or not the 500,000 bushels limitation required to be reported upon by operators on boards of trade should be fixed by law or allowed to be made variable by orders of the Secretary; and whereas on October 24, 1932, there was lifted and suspended the restrictions on open-market trading in grain futures on the Chicago Board of Trade by order of the Secretary of Agriculture; and

Whereas these restrictions upon short selling in 1927 for a short time were suspended; and

Whereas prices after both such suspensions declined to the advantage of the speculative short seller and to the disadvantage of producers; and

Whereas the decline in prices, following the order of the Secretary of Agriculture on October 24, 1932, reached lower levels than had theretofore ever been recorded: Be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to ascertain the facts and report to the Senate, giving full and complete answer to the following questions and such others as may occur to him as being pertinent to this matter:

(1) What was the purpose of suspending on October 24, 1932, the reports from board-of-trade members required pursuant to the grain futures act of the accounts of speculators and short sellers?

(2) Were these reports suspended on recommendation of the present chief of the grain-futures department, or were they sus-pended on request of members of the Chicago Board of Trade or other exchanges? If the latter, who were these parties and what was their position in the market at that time? Were they long or short? If short, did they buy in at a profit when prices later sold down?

(3) What was the effect upon wheat prices of the suspension of the restrictions? What was the position in the market of those affected by the suspension, at the time of and just prior to suspension? What has been their position since?

(4) To what extent have big speculators been active in wheat futures transactions during the drastic price declines of the past two or three years? Have they been dealing on the long or the short side of the market, and to what extent?

Resolved further, That the Secretary of Agriculture in such report shall make a full disclosure of the names and addresses of all persons and firms that have held a speculative short position in wheat futures on the Chicago Board of Trade equal to or in excess of 1,000,000 bushels at any time during the past two or three years, while prices have suffered unprecedented declines, and shall indicate which of these, if any, were also found on the short side of the market during that period in 1927 when the restrictions were lifted the first time.

Mr WHEELER Lesk unenimous consent for the present

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the inquiry that is suggested is a very elaborate one. Is any date set for a report to the Senate?

Mr. WHEELER. No; no date is set for a report. I understand that the department has this information, and can furnish it to me. I have directed the Secretary of Agriculture to furnish it; but it is the department itself that can give me the information.

Mr. McNARY. I am not unsympathetic with the proposal, but I suggest to the Senator that it might go over for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

NOMINATIONS IN THE COAST GUARD, NAVY, AND MARINE CORPS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask leave to present, as in open executive session, sundry routine nominations in the Coast Guard, Navy, and Marine Corps, and ask for their present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, as in executive session and out of order, the nominations will be received.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the nominations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made; and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

(The nominations this day confirmed by the Senate will be found at the end of to-day's proceedings.)

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE (S. DOC. NO. 209)

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, among the matters upon the agenda for the approaching session of Congress is the matter of the protocol of the so-called World Court.

The Women's Bar Association of the District of Columbia, at the request of the Bok Foundation, have made a study of the question. The report was made by Miss Hope Thompson, a distinguished woman member of the bar of the District of Columbia. I ask unanimous consent that the report may be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of what has been said, I think it is a fair compromise to recess at this time until 10.30 o'clock to-morrow. I move, therefore, that the Senate take a recess until that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 1, 1933, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1933

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, Thou who art supremely just and merciful, continue Thy loving-kindness with us and let us be directed by Thy counsels. Enrich our understanding with wisdom and knowledge. With all diligence may we perform our duties and bear our responsibilities both in public and in private life. Blessed Lord, we thank Thee for the radiance that prevails above us, for all things temporal and spiritual, for the hopes that cheer us, for the hearts that love us, for the brave arms that would defend us, for the best government on earth, and for the countless mercies that daily bless our lives. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill, a joint resolution, and a concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 5571. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the reconstruction of a railroad bridge across Little River in the State of Arkansas at or near Morris Ferry by the Texarkana & Fort Smith Railway Co.;

S. J. Res. 241. Joint resolution to enable the United States Roanoke Colony Commission to carry out and give effect to certain plans for the comprehensive observance of the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Englishspeaking civilization in America; and

S. Con. Res. 44. Concurrent resolution rescinding the action of the Speaker of the House and the Vice President of the United States in signing the enrolled bill H. R. 14500.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the following title:

H. R. 14359. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. Shipstead and Mr. Fletcher members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Government Printing Office.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5337) entitled "An act to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, to permit loans for additional purposes, to extend the powers of Federal land banks in the making of direct loans, to authorize upon certain terms the reamortization of loans by Federal and joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Fletcher, Mr. Brookhart, Mr. Steiwer, Mr. Townsend, and Mr. Bark-LEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 4008. An act to amend article 5 of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1897, relating to the approval of regulations for preventing collisions upon certain harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States;

S. 5233. An act to provide for the protection of national military parks, national parks, battlefield sites, national monuments, and miscellaneous memorials under the control of the War Department; and

S. 5469. An act to provide for the creation of the Morristown National Historical Park in the State of New Jersey, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 7716. An act to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V. title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered that the Secretary inform the House that the Senate is ready to receive the managers appointed by the House for the purpose of exhibiting articles of impeachment against Harold Louderback, United States district judge for the northern district of California, agreeably to the notice communicated to the Senate.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. PURNELL and Mr. STEAGALL rose.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of this body for 16 years and have never made a point of no quorum. I am leaving Saturday and should like to make one before I go.

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

On motion of Mr. Bankhead, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS HOUSE

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes myself.

The SPEAKER. It is difficult to put both requests at the same time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object to the request of the gentleman from Alabama for 15 minutes, provided no further requests for permission to address the House are made. We are endeavoring to secure action on a very important measure. Unless the agreement can be so limited I shall feel constrained to Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires 10 minutes. Is it not fair that he be allowed 10 minutes if the gentleman from Alabama is allowed 15 cr 20 minutes? I am willing that the gentleman from Alabama have time.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to balance the time on this side by asking for five minutes myself.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the 15 minutes requested by the gentleman from Alabama, but I shall object to any further requests.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman takes that attitude it forces us to object to the request of the gentleman from Alabama, and we do not want to do that. I will not ask for any further time if the gentleman from Pennsylvania is allowed 10 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan 5 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PURCHASE AND SALE OF COTTON

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read the House resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 397

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 5122, "An act to provide for the purchase and sale of cotton under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture."

That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Argiculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit. without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the resolution itself. Shall I make it at this point?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just a moment. I think it is fair to the House and to the minority that I give notice at this stage, Mr. Speaker, that at the proper time the Committee on Rules will offer the following amendment to the resolution which I ask to be reported.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I reserve a point of order on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Bankhead offers the following amendment to House Resolution 397: On page 1, line 11, after the period insert the following: "It shall be in order to consider the substitute amendment recommended by the Committee on Agriculture now in the bill, and said substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the bill then be read by sections?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, first, that this bill, S. 5122, is not properly on the calendar.

In the first place, the committee was in session after the House had been called to order, and they had not special permission to be in session on that day, after the House was in session.

Furthermore, there was no definite vote taken in the committee reporting out the bill.

In addition, the rule itself is not in proper order, considering the fact that the bill is not properly reported and on the calendar at the present time.

If the Chair will look at Cannon's book of procedure, the Chair will find that this is a regular rule taking up and giving privilege to a bill that is properly on the House Calendar. Had the Committee on Rules desired to take this bill away from the committee and discharge the committee, it should have brought in a different form of rule than is before us at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill was not properly reported, because the committee was sitting at a time when it had no right to sit; and, furthermore, the bill not being on the calendar at the present time in accordance with the rules and the precedents of the House, the rule itself is not in proper order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will not the gentleman admit that the Committee on Rules has inherent power in its jurisdiction to report a rule for the consideration of a bill regardless of whether or not it has been regularly reported by a committee?

Mr. SNELL. I say the committee has that authority, but this rule is not in proper shape to do what the committee is undertaking to do at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In what respect, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. SNELL. Because, as the book on procedure prepared by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] states, a special kind of rule must be presented for the discharge of a committee from the consideration of a bill and bring the bill back to the House. The resolution here presented is to take the bill from the House Calendar, and I make the point of order that it is not properly on the House Calendar and the committee can not bring in a rule of the character of the one presented at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman take the position that it is incumbent upon the Committee on Rules to elect to invoke the discharge rule in order to report out a general provision for the consideration of a bill?

Mr. SNELL. That is not the question. I say to begin with this bill is not properly on the House Calendar. This rule gives privilege to a bill that is supposed to be on the House Calendar properly.

This is the first opportunity we have had to make the point of order against it, and I make the point of order at this time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman has been referring to Mr. Cannon's book on procedure.

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, that is not binding on this House.

Mr. SNELL. That is the procedure of this House, whether it is binding or not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman refer to some rule of the House which would require the Rules Committee to bring in the form of rule which he suggests?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker Clark said the best rule of this House was the precedents of the House itself.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Rules Committee in bringing in rules follows the rules of the House.

Mr. SNELL. That does not make any difference, it is up to the Rules Committee to find out whether this bill is properly on the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the Chair indulge me just a moment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Some years back I took the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Houston, off the floor by raising a point of order to a certain prohibition bill on the calendar which he was calling up on the ground that the committee had not formally reported the bill, in that the committee members had been polled rather than in formal committee meeting, and therefore the bill had not been properly reported. The essence of the objection of the minority leader is that this bill has not been properly reported, and the Speaker has the right to inquire into that fact; and if it has not been properly reported, then I contend that the rule is not proper in phraseology because the bill is still in the Committee on Agriculture, and the rule should be to discharge the Committee on Agriculture from its further consideration and bring it before the House at the present time.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, there is one further point I wish to bring out, and that is this: At the time this bill was reported from the Committee on Agriculture it had not been transmitted to the House by proper communication from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the point of order of the gentleman from New York, it is that the Committee on Agriculture has not reported the bill properly and it is not properly on the calendar, and the second point is that the rule—

Mr. SNELL. Is not in proper form to do what they are trying to do at this time.

The SPEAKER. Yes. With respect to the point that the committee has not properly reported the bill, the Chair does not think it necessary to go back of the rule to determine what is the condition of the bill. The Rules Committee undoubtedly has authority to bring in a rule providing for the consideration of a bill that has never even been referred to a committee; or if it has been referred to the committee, not reported; or if reported, improperly reported.

As to the form of the rule, the resolution says:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 5122, "An act to provide for the purchase and sale of cotton under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture."

Then the resolution goes on and lays down the conditions under which the bill shall be considered.

It occurs to the Chair that this form of resolution undoubtedly gives the House the right and the power to consider S. 5122, under the limitations laid down in the resolution. So if the House adopted the resolution, it would make in order the consideration of the bill which is the object of the rule.

The third problem is one that the Chair can not rule upon until the Chair knows the facts, and the Chair would have to make inquiry of the individual member of the Rules Committee whether or not it was properly reported. So far as appears on the face of the resolution, it has been reported by the Rules Committee, but if, indeed, and in fact, it is shown that it was not reported by the Rules Committee, then the Chair will consider that fact in reaching a decision.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion right here?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, in order that we may clarify the issue now pending, does the gentleman from New York challenge the fact that the Rules Committee had a regular meeting for the consideration of this resolution and reported it out in the regular way?

Mr. SNELL. No, I do not; but I claim that the resolution reported here is not in the form to do what the gentleman is contending here he has the right to do. I maintain that the bill itself was not properly on the House Calendar and under the precedents prepared by Mr. Cannon himself there is shown one kind of rule for a bill on the House Calendar and another kind of rule for a bill that is not properly reported and on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that the philosophy of that rule could possibly be that the Rules Committee is limited as to the provisions of a rule that suspends all other rules of the House of Representatives. All rules to the contrary, when this resolution is adopted, if it is adopted by the House, it takes the place of all other rules of the House of Representatives inconsistent with its purpose.

Mr. SNELL. The Speaker does not entirely get my point. I claim if they wanted to suspend the rules of the House and consider a bill not properly reported by the committee, they should have drafted a rule in different form from the one now before us.

The SPEAKER. Let us see what the rule says.

Mr. SNELL. I know what the rule says.

The SPEAKER. It says:

Upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

For what? For the consideration of S. 5122.

Mr. SNELL. I am not arguing that point with the Chair. I am simply making the point of order that the bill is not properly on the House Calendar, and when a bill is not properly on the House Calendar this rule does not apply to it.

The SPEAKER. Suppose there was not any calendar at

Mr. SNELL. Then you would have to draft a different kind of rule from the one you have now.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose it was in Phil Campbell's hip pocket?

Mr. SNELL. That does not make any difference, and has nothing to do with the point under discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SNELL. I am going to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. SNELL. I withdraw the appeal, as I think perhaps it is a mistake to do it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Purnell]. Apparently, this is a highly controversial proposition, as indicated by the gentleman.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if 30 minutes on a side will be agreeable to him?

Mr. PURNELL. That will be satisfactory to this side.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I will yield the gentleman from Indiana 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama wish to offer his amendment at the present time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the period, insert the following: "It shall be in order to consider the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Agriculture now in the bill, and said substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, as indicated in the colloquy I had with the gentleman from Indiana, in seeking an agreement for time for the discussion of the rule, it is apparent that the merits of this proposition will be highly controversial on the floor of the House.

In order that you may be acquainted with the legislative history of the proposal now pending before the House, you are doubtless aware of the fact that after the House had passed and sent to the Senate the so-called allotment bill, which attempted to provide for the relief of a number of articles of production, it was given full consideration by the Senate Committee on Agriculture, and after such consideration it was decided to be impracticable. The majority of the committee was opposed to the bill but reported the bill out for consideration by the Senate.

Those Members of the Senate who were anxious, if possible, in the closing days of this session, to attempt to give some relief for some articles of the agricultural interests of the country, in their wisdom, unanimously, as I am advised, passed the so-called Smith cotton bill, which, as amended by the House committee, is now presented for your consideration, in the event of the adoption of the rule, and to give the House an opportunity to pass on its merits.

One of the objections that have been lodged against the original House bill was that it made some provision for reimbursement for the Red Cross cotton that has been voted by Congress for relief.

I am glad to report to the House that the Committee on Agriculture, after full consideration, in order to eliminate every objectionable feature, decided to offer an amendment eliminating that feature from the bill.

So the Committee on Agriculture, through the instrumentality of the resolution reported by the Rules Committee, is asking this House to relieve that section of the country where the great staple cotton is the chief money crop, and which is the staff upon which all of our economic structure leans. We propose, gentlemen, to make an earnest—and I trust an effective—appeal to gentlemen from other sections of the country who are not directly interested in the cotton industry.

It would be useless for me to consume one moment of time in this debate calling your attention to the prostrate and hopeless condition of agriculture all over the United States. Wheat, cotton, dairy products, and everything have gone to the very bottom.

It was not considered feasible in the preparation of a cotton bill, which has peculiar qualities to deal with, to incorporate in the pending legislation remedial relief for the wheat producers of this country. If it had been, there is no man from the wheat section or from any industrial section of the country who is familiar with the cordial cooperation that has existed between the agricultural representatives of various sections of the country on this floor but must know in his heart that those features would have been incorporated in this bill. I fear, at least I have heard rumors to that effect, that some of you gentlemen representing the wheat sections of the country feel that you are not justified in supporting this cotton bill because it might have a semblance of abandonment by the cotton people of the interests of the wheat growers of the West, but in view of the supreme importance of this proposition to the people down in my section of the country, from Virginia all the way to California, I want you gentlemen to bear in mind that this is the last chance we are going to have to make an appeal to you for relief of the cotton industry, because we are now planting the crop in some sections of the country. That feature does not apply particularly to the wheat situation. Before you make up your minds to vote against this rule for the consideration of this bill, or against the bill upon its merits, I want you gentlemen to consider, if you are satisfied that this bill does offer some substantial aid to the cotton growers, whether it will not in the long range work to the advantage of every other section of the country to help us begin in one section of the country and with one great commodity, to rehabilitate the agriculture in this country, because you gentlemen from the other sections will derive an immediate and substantial benefit from it. Some of you are not familiar with the enormous quantity of wheat products consumed by the people of the cotton-growing section of the country not only for food but for livestock and other purposes, and if you will give the cotton growers, as this bill will, this opportunity, I feel that it will in the end surely inure to the benefit of all. This will not cost the Government any appreciable amount of money. It will give the cotton people of the country an opportunity to cut down their cotton production by over 2,000,000 bales this year, and that will in itself, I think, send the price of cotton up from 2 to 3 cents a pound, and the immediate effect will be with our people, who consume your products, to give them a purchasing power to buy your products. That is logical and it is based on the actual facts.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In a moment. I shall not take the time to go into the details of the bill, for they will be presented by the Committee on Agriculture and possibly by some other gentleman from the Committee on Rules. I think this is not a sectional bill. In view of the universal calamity that is being visited upon our people, of all times in the history of the Republic, God knows this is the time when there should be no single vestige anywhere of any sectional or partisan consideration in bills presented for the relief of our people. I appeal to gentlemen, even if you may have had some temporary notions on this question that this bill may adversely affect your interests, before you decide that think the thing through to the end and see the importance and the logic of cooperating with us in the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes. I regret exceedingly to find myself in disagreement with my colleagues who represent the cotton producers. I have been a Member of this House for 16 years. Most of that time has been spent as a member of the Committee on Agriculture. I never have yet regarded the agricultural question as either sectional or political, and I do not so regard it now. An examination of the record votes of this House over a period of years will disclose the fact that members of the Committee on Agriculture on the Republican side of this House have voted just as often as those who sit on the Democratic side for legislation calculated to help the people of the South. I think the meanest letter I have received during my service in this House came from some dear old gentleman in my district—perhaps he was a Union veteran—who took me to task because I had sponsored a bill intended to help the farmers down South. I said to him, and I repeat, I am just as anxious to help the producers down South as I am those who live within a mile of my own front door; for certainly we can have no such thing as permanent prosperity in the country until the buying power of our farmers is restored to all sections and all branches of agriculture. My position, therefore, is neither sectional nor political, but rather, I am speaking in the interest of the farmers themselves who live down South and produce the cotton.

Let us see what is involved in this measure and what it proposes to do. First of all, it proposes to set up a new governmental board, a cotton board within the Department of Agriculture, which, under the terms of this bill, will be directed to purchase from the Secretary of Agriculture, from the Farm Board, and from other agricultural agencies, something in the neighborhood of 3,000,000 bales of cotton which are now held by these various agencies. The new cotton board to be set up will also, under the terms of the bill, be authorized to acquire cotton which we gave to the National Red Cross. With title to this cotton vested in the newly created cotton board, the bill directs that they shall set about making agreements with producers of cotton whereby they shall sell to these cotton producers, through options to purchase, an amount of cotton equal to the amount which they reduce their production, not less than 30 per cent of the amount produced in the previous year. No money is to be paid by the farmer.

Upon signing an agreement to reduce his production not less than 30 per cent, he is given a nonnegotiable option by the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase a certain number of bales of cotton equivalent to the amount which he reduces his production. If the price of those options advance, the producer gets the profit. If it declines, the Federal Treasury, of course, stands the loss. In other words, this is a very clear case of—heads the producers win and tails the Government loses.

Now, what are some of the outstanding objections to this bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. PURNELL. Pardon me.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will yield to the gentleman such time as I may take.

Mr. PURNELL. Very well.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If this bill is not passed, and the price falls, will not the Government lose just the same?

Mr. PURNELL. That is true. The gentleman is correct about that for the simple reason the Government is already holding the bag.

Now, in the beginning I referred to the harmonious feeling that has existed between the various agricultural groups of the United States through all these years. My preliminary objection, my principal objection, I may say, to this measure lies in the fact that from all the agricultural commodities of the country that are in distress and deserve relief before we adjourn, just one commodity has been selected for consideration, leaving the rest of the commodities of the United States to work out their own salvation. If this is a forerunner of the attitude that is going to be taken toward agriculture generally in the next Congress, I want to say, in the kindliest spirit, that the outlook is not bright for a continuation of that fine spirit of cooperation which has existed among all sections of the country in the earnest effort that has been made throughout these many years to put our great basic industry permanently on its feet.

I suppose something should be said about the number of bales of cotton that are now held by these various groups. Later on, during the hour given for general debate and under the 5-minute rule, those facts will be brought out, but it is very pertinent to say at this point that no hearings were held on this bill by the Committee on Agriculture. We had one or two executive sessions at which the author of this bill from the other body came before us and explained its provisions. Nobody knows how much it will cost; in fact, all we know—and that we had to secure individually from the Department of Agriculture—is the number of bales held by these different Federal agencies who have made loans upon the cotton which they hold.

I want to come to another point. The air still resounds with cries of Democratic and Republican speakers in the last campaign, and I was one of them, who spoke against a continuation of stabilization operations by the Federal Government. I voted for the agricultural marketing act. I helped write it, line by line, as did many other members of our committee. Together we put into it its stabilization provisions, but we have found, long since, that that which we sought to accomplish was not fully accomplished. I introduced a bill early in this session to strike from the agricultural marketing act the stabilization section, but up to date I have not been able to get consideration of the bill.

Here you are not only setting up another board but you are continuing the stabilization operations of the Federal Government. Instead of plunging the Government further into business we ought to take the Government out of business wherever we can. We should not be setting up new boards and new commissions. We should not be giving them new powers that will continue indefinitely these stabilization operations.

Further, I want to say that this bill would put the American farmer into the gambling business. His business has always been a gamble. He has to gamble against the weather, he has to gamble against all natural elements, but now you seek to give him a ring-side seat in a bucket shop by having the Secretary of Agriculture present him with an option to purchase cotton as an inducement to bring about acreage reduction.

I am not sure that I understand the interest of the proponents of this bill who come from the eastern districts.

from Indiana [Mr. Purnell] has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself three additional minutes.

This, to my mind, is just as much a spinner's bill as it is a cotton producer's bill, and I am frank to say I do not fully understand this strange alliance that has grown up in the House in the last few days between the producers of cotton and the textile industry of the East. I may be entirely wrong. I have no cotton spinners in my section of the country and am therefore not familiar with the industry, but I have always proceeded upon the assumption that they desire to buy cotton at the lowest possible price. I may be wrong. The purpose of this legislation, the purpose of every agricultural bill which has had my support in this House, has been to increase to the producers of this country the price which they receive for the products of their soil and their toil.

It seems to me that if through the operation of this cotton board we are to increase the price of cotton, then we ought not find linked with them in that effort those who spin cotton in the textile mills of the East.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PURNELL. Not just now. I only have a minute or

I regret to say we had no hearings in the committee. I regret that we are handicapped by lack of information. Nobody knows what is involved in dollars and cents. About all we know is that there are in the neighborhood of 3,000,-000 bales of cotton which will be turned over to this cotton board to be sold back to the farmers.

I trust you will give serious consideration to this proposal before you go on record as singling out one agricultural commodity, here at the close of a session of Congress, with attendant notice to the other producers of the United States that you are incompetent to legislate for everything else except this one commodity which you yourselves raise. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, it was with pleasure that I moved to vote this rule out of the Committee on Rules. I did it for this reason, that I was offended at what was apparent in the opposition to this bill. If there is anything more objectionable in a parliamentary body, and especially to the people of this country, than logrolling, I do not know what it is.

I am wondering whether the gentleman from Indiana would have attacked the provision in this bill as to cotton if wheat were included. Now, when you get down to brass tacks, I fear that 99 per cent of the opposition to this bill is because wheat was not included. I voted for the allotment plan. I would have liked to see enacted a bill in accordance with the allotment plan, taking care of cotton, wheat, tobacco, and possibly some other products. We know now that that is impossible in this session. We also know that to take care of the present crop of cotton we must do something in this session, because if it goes over until the special session it will be too late.

I regret some of the remarks that were made by Members from the wheat district when we were passing the bill to give wheat to the poor through the Red Cross. Why, certain Members from the great industrial East have been supporting for years all these bills for the relief of the agricultural sections of the country. We are interested in taking care of every one of your crops. We are interested in raising the price of the basic commodities of this country, and we make no distinction between your crops.

Let me say that even if you help only one crop, you help every section of the country. If you take one crop at a time, you will do something to relieve distress in this country.

I regretted some of the remarks that were made by Members from the wheat-growing sections opposing the bill for

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman | the distribution of cotton through the Red Cross. I thought I saw then some sectional feeling, some jealousy, some logrolling, which is, to my mind, the most objectionable thing in this body.

We in the East are anxious to help cotton. We in the East are anxious to help wheat. We are anxious to help

The adoption of the method provided in this bill does not cost the Government one cent of money. True, it creates a board, an unpaid board, not a permanent bureaucracy, to which I am as much opposed as any other gentleman speaking here to-day.
